Cheap Fall Dry Goods!—Rich dress Silks, broche and woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, wollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c., ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

oct4 3mos Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street, and new uumbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY'S establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY'S colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. GURNEY'S plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY'S Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 18 tf

Doctor M. E. Foy, Surgeon, has removed his office to 170 West Nineteenth street, between 7th and 8th Avenues. OFFICE HOURS from 7 to 9 A. M., 1 to 3, and 7 to 9 P. M.

☞ To accommodate his patients in the Eastern part of the city, Dr. F. will attend daily from 2 to 3 P. M., at Ryerson's drug store, 185 Avenue B, between 11th and 12th streets. MIDWIFERY ENGAGEMENTS promptly attended to. Medicine and advice to the poor, gratis. sept18 3mos

Special Notices.

Agency of Nicaragua, No. 347 Broadway.—The undersigned having been appointed by the Government of Nicaragua GENERAL EMIGRANT AGENT in the United States, has established a permanent agency at 347 Broadway, room No. 2, up stairs. All persons desirous of obtaining information of any kind concerning Nicaragua will receive prompt attention by addressing the undersigned, personally or by letter, at the office of the Agency. According to the decree of the Nicaraguan government, dated November 23d 1855, emigrants are entitled to 250 acres of land, if single, and 350 acres are granted to families. The price of passage to emigrants has been fixed at a very low figure; and for those without means arrangements have been made with the "Nicaragua Emigration Company," to advance the price of their passage upon the transfer of a part of the land granted by the government. This secures to emigrants a LARGE GRANT OF LAND AND A FREE PASSAGE TO NICARAGUA. J. W. Fabens, Esq., for some time past Director of Colonization of the Government of Nicaragua, is now in this city, and may be found daily at the office of the agency. From his extended knowlege of the country he is enabled to give most valuable information concerning Nicaragua.

The splendid steamer TENNESSEE, will leave Pier 36 foot of North Moore-st., North River, on Monday, October 6th, at 3 o'clock, P. M., and all persons desirous of emigrating to that beautiful country are advised to make early application at the agency.

Alexander C. Lawrence, General Emigrant Agent of sept20 2t Nicaragua for United States.

"Musical." A young Lady lately connected with the profession in Europe where she studied under the first and best masters is desirous of giving to a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who will kindly favor her with a trial may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trenor, 90 South 8th street, Brooklyn, E. D. 3mos

Guyon Cadets, Co. D, 9th Regiment. Attention!—The members of this Company are hereby ordered to attend a special meeting at their Armory on Wednesday evening, October 1, at half-past 7 o'clock. Punctual attendance is required as business of importance relating to our Target Excursion, which takes place on the 14th October, will be laid before the meeting. By order.

Thos. Murphy, Captain.

M. MCKENNEY, Orderly Sergt. sept27

Ladies returning from the Country wishing their supply of Shoes for the fall season, can obtain Ladies Gaiter Boots from 12s. to 20s., Slippers, Ties and Buskins, from 6s. to 10s., India Rubber Boots and Shoes of all kinds, with Boy's, Misses and Children's Boots and Shoes of all kinds and prices, at sept27 4t J. B. Miller & Co's., 134 Canal street, (West.)

The Great National Political

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

HAS already reached a sale unprecedented in the annals of political literature, and the cry is still for more. In order to meet the demand, the publisher has just issued the Sixth Edition of 16,000 copies. This map contains portraits of each of the candidates for President and Vice-President, their letters of acceptance, platforms of the respective parties, &c. Size 34 by 40 inches—showing the territorial boundaries, and a great amount of statistics interesting to all parties. Price, in pocket form, 50 cents; in sheet form 25 cents. Copies sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Agents wanted. Address A. Ranney, Publisher, No. 195 Broadway, New-York. 2t4oc

Amusements.

GRAND POETICAL AND MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT.

MISS TERESA ESMONDE,

Will give one of her Readings from the IRISH AND AMERICAN POETS, before the Catholic Library Association at the BROADWAY TABERNACLE, on Tuesday Evening, September 30, at 8 o'clock.

DODWORTH'S BAND has been engaged and will perform between the pieces.

Programme:

PART I.

1.—O'Connell's Statue. Lines addressed to Hogan the Irish Sculptor. THOMAS DAVIS.
2.—Signs of the Times.....SPERANZA.
3.—The Pillar Towers of Ireland.....D. F. MCCARTHY.
4.—Gold.....PARK BENJAMIN.
5.—Sister of Charity.....GERALD GRIFFIN.
6.—The Geraldine.....Dr. SHELTON MACKENZIE.
7.—Convict Ship.—A tale of Ireland's Wrongs. Written exclusively for Miss Esmonde, by Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS, authoress of "Fashion and Famine."

PART II.

1.—Selection from Hiawatha, (Famine.).....LONGFELLOW.
2.—Beauty, Wit and Gold.....THOMAS MOORE.
3.—A Prison Lay.....T. F. MEAGHER.
4.—My Land!.....THOMAS DAVIS.
5.—WEEP ON—WEEP ON!.....THOMAS MOORE.
6.—Molly Muldoon.....ANONYMOUS.

☞ Tickets 25 cents; to be had at the door on the evening of the Readings, of the Committee, and at the office of the Irish News.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellectual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

MR. WALLACK will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," MISS AGNES ROBERTSON, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

THE PEOPLES TEMPLE OF THE DRAMA.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....50 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,

Opposite Niblo's Garden,

Triumphant Success of the Burlesque on the Opera of

MARITANA;

Which will be repeated every night this week, with a fine programme of

ETHIOPIAN MINSTRELSY.

Concert at 7 3-4 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

In rehearsal—

DRED; OR, THE DISMAL SWAMP.

American News.

Commodore Armstrong, commanding the United States naval forces in the East India and Chinese Seas, has transmitted to our Government the correspondence between himself and the Governor of Hong Kong, Sir John Bowring, in relation to the seizure of John A. Phipps, (on board the American bark Annie Buckman, of which he was an officer, by a British police force. It appears from the official despatch, that as soon as Commodore Armstrong became aware of the proceedings above referred to, he earnestly protested against them, asserting the doctrine that the United States Consul had authority in that and all similar cases, and likewise complained of the discourteous treatment to which Consul Keenan was subjected, owing to his intervention in behalf of Mr. Phipps. To this communication the Governor replied, claiming that Hong Kong being a British possession, the authorities thereof were fully warranted in their acts, and entering into a recapitulation of certain points of international law in justification. The consul had previously been permitted to sit with the judge to hear cases affecting American seamen, but on this occasion the privilege of (courtesy merely) was denied. Having failed to settle the points involved, the American Commodore and the British Governor have referred the matter in issue to their respective Governments for a solution, (involving the rights of consuls in cases where the liberty of the persons of their countrymen is affected abroad).

Discovery of an Island.—Captain Dunn, of the bark Dragon, at Salem, from Pedang, reports that on the passage from the Fejee Islands to Shanghae, September 12, he saw an island, not laid down in his chart, to the northward, distant five miles. Got a good observation, and made its position in lat. 8.20, long. 167.46 E., by the chronometer. It is a small sand island, with low bushes, six miles in circumference. It is inhabited, and surrounded by a coral reef, a mile from the shore, and can be seen fifteen miles from the masthead. The same afternoon saw the Michaleff Group to the northward as laid down on the chart.

The Louisville Courier states that on the night of the 14th about 1 o'clock, Michael Kinney, who had been laboring for several days under delirium tremens, leapt from the roof of Pat. Tansy's house into the street below, striking upon a heap of brick, fracturing his leg in a severe manner, and causing a frightful wound in the forehead. His wounds were of the most frightful character, and the pain he experienced exceedingly distressing to those within the sound of his voice. His skull bone was crushed completely in, and, to save his life, the difficult and dangerous operation of trepanning had to be undertaken. It was supposed he would recover, unless the effects of the delirium tremens would produce a fatal result.

The Cincinnatti Gazette of the 19th inst., informs us that as Mr. Reed, editor of the Commercial, was passing the Enquirer office, Judge Walker of the latter paper, who happened to be stepping into the street, saluted him in a menacing manner, and approached with an uplifted cane. Mr. Reed drew a pistol from his pocket, presented it at Mr. Walker, and invited him to "come on," whereupon the latter retreated into the office and took shelter behind the door, where he also drew a pistol from his pocket; but no shots were exchanged.

Mr. Raymond Thomassy, a French gentleman of character and intelligence, has arrived in Norfolk, and intends to apply for the use of low lands on the sea shore, as near Norfolk as convenient, for the purpose of establishing an extensive salt factory, this important article of commerce to be made by solar evaporation, and with the aid of the winds.

We learn from the Winona Republican, that W. B. Bunnell, of Homer, in Minnesota Territory, has this season successfully experimented on the cultivation of sugar cane. Mr. Bunnell thinks it will succeed, without doubt, and next year will devote several acres to this crop, which has so generally been supposed to be necessarily confined to the extreme South.

The eastern side of the Blue Ridge Tunnel, Va., had progressed, up to about a week ago, 2,001 feet; on the western side 2,014 feet had been excavated, leaving about 285 more to be pierced. The work will be finished, the superintendent thinks, about the last of November. There are 165 hands constantly employed on the work.

The Troy Budget says, the fire which raged so furiously on the line of the Watertown and Rome Railroad, near Rome, last week, has burnt out, after destroying some five or six thousand cords of wood belonging to the N. Y. Central R. R. Co., and burning up a number of shanties, driving out the occupants, and doing damage to the Watertown and Rome Railroad track.

The value of exports, including specie, in Boston for the week ending the 20th inst., was as follows: American, $220,889 18; foreign, $52,283 82. Total, $274,173. The receipts of flour into this port for the week were 26,393 bbls.; of corn, 26,293 bushels, and of wheat 1470 bushels.

George Frank Lemon, an old Californian, left San Francisco in the steamer of the 5th ult. for the city of Mexico, having a contract with the Mexican Government to superintend the construction of a military road from Mexico to Acapulco.

A State Convention of the friends of Education in North Carolina, will be held in Salisbury on the 21st day of October next.

Gen. James Gadsden, late Minister to Mexico, is spoken of in the Charleston, S. C., papers to fill the vacancy in Congress occasioned by Governor Aiken having declined to serve again.

The Port Gibson Herald says that there has been used this year in Claiborne county, 16,840 tin cans, for putting up fruits, vegetables, etc.

David Hall, of Meredith, N. H., who threw Benjamin Dow into a well, has been sent to the State Prison for eight years. Dow did not "kick the bucket."

James Keefe, charged with forgery in Richmond, while under examination coolly possessed himself of the paper charged as forged, chewed it up and swallowed it in the presence of the court!

At a public meeting of the inhabitants of Livingston, Ala., travelling passports and cards of clearance were made out for Samuel Sherood, charged and convicted for tampering with slaves, giving them orders for whisky, &c.

An experienced farmer announces that he has discovered that a heavy crop of buckwheat, followed by a crop of oats, seeded with clover, will almost entirely eradicate the Canada thistle.

Hon. J. C. Dobbin, Secretary of the Navy, was greeted with a public reception on passing through Raleigh, N. C.

A western editor perpetrates the following: A flock of sheep composed of all "wethers" may be said to resemble our climate.

The Know-Nothing Convention, held at Rochester on the 23d, nominated for Governor Erastus Brooks, of New-York, and for Lieutenant-Governor, Lyman Odell, of Livingston county.

Secretary Dobbin writes from North Carolina that he is "comfortable and stronger," and that his health, so delicate when he left the city a few weeks ago, is improving.

The English mail steamer Tay was lost near Lopez Island, on the 30th of August. The mails, and the passengers and crew were saved.

The Ohio river at Cincinnatti was said to be lower on the 24th than ever before known. Droves of cattle have been driven across it at that point.

An ineffectual effort has been made to introduce the German language into the public schools of St. Louis.

Ten dollars a hundred has been offered for whole crops of new Tobacco, in the field, in the Green river (Ky.) counties.

The Fremont flag in Danvers was torn to shreds on Thursday night.

There was a heavy frost at Columbia, S. C., on the 24th. It is feared that the cotton crop has sustained much damage.

The State Fair at Cleveland, Ohio, opened on the 24th.

City News.

DEATH OF GEORGE STEERS, THE SHIP-BUILDER.

We are pained to announce the sudden death of George Steers, the renowned ship and yacht builder. On Thursday afternoon (25th inst., about three o'clock, as he was driving his horse and wagon to Little Neck, L. I., for the purpose of bringing home his wife, who had been boarding there during the summer season, the horse took fright near Calvary Cemetery, and ran away. Mr. Steers immediately jumped out of the wagon with a view of stopping the animal, when he was struck by the wagon and injured severely about the head. He was thrown prostrate and senseless to the ground, and lay in the middle of the road for some minutes. Soon after the occurrence of the accident, Councilman Boole, Mr. R. H. Bishop and Bernard Kelly, intimate friends of Mr. Steers, who were riding in a carriage, came along, and discovered the condition of the sufferer. Mr. Steers was then insensible. He was instantly taken into the coach, and driven rapidly to his residence, 91 Cannon street, New-York.

Dr. Freeman, the family physician, was immediately sent for, and on examining the patient, gave it as his opinion that the sufferer would not survive.

Mr. Steers continued insensible during the evening, and died at half-past ten o'clock at night.

Mr. Steers was, it is well known, the most successful ship-builder on this continent. In 1853 the celebrated yacht America, built by him, proceeded to England, and there won the prize awarded to the fastest yacht of all nations. Since then the yacht Julia was constructed under his supervision, and in every regatta where she entered she carried off the prize.

But the greatest triumph of Mr. Steers' life has yet to take place. The steamship Adriatic, of the Collins line, constructed by him and launched last summer, is now making preparations for her trial trip.

Singular Bottle Story.—Captain Beecher, editor of the English Nautical Magazine, has compiled within the last ten years the following curious voyages of bottles thrown into the sea by unfortunate navigators: A good many bottles thrown into the sea next to the African coast, found their way to Europe. The bottle seems to have anticipated the Austral Panama route, having travelled from the Isthmus of Panama to the Irish coast. Another crossed the Atlantic from the Canaries to Nova Scotia. Three or four bottles, thrown into the sea by Greenland mariners on Davis's Strait, landed on the north-west coast of Ireland. Another one made a very curious trip; it swam from the South Atlantic Ocean to the West coast of Africa, passed Gibraltar, went along the Portuguese coast of France, passing Brest, and was finally picked up on Jersey Island; the direct line touches at least all these places, and makes it more than probable that it took this route. One bottle was only found after sixteen years swimming, one after fourteen, and two after ten years. A few only traveled more than one year, and one only five days. This last was sent off by the captain of the Racehorse, on the 17th of April, in the Carribean Sea, and was found on the 22d, after having gone through three degrees of longitude in a western direction. Capt. McClure, of the Investigator, well known since the discovery of the North-West Strait, threw a bottle into the sea in 1850, on his way to Behring's Strait. It swam 3,600 miles in 206 days, and was picked up on the Honduras coast.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

The Democracy of the "Tenth Legion" had a large and enthusiastic meeting at Stroudsburg on 22nd ult. Henry Scott presided. The meeting was addressed by Messrs. John Van Buren, Dickerson, Cols. Wynkoop and Wright and Senator Broadhead.

This is worth remembering. The Know Nothing State Council of Iowa met recently in Iowa City, and resolved to support Fremont and Dayton.

Another item worth remembering. "All our American population are entirely opposed to the working of the mines by foreigners."—Speech of John C. Fremont in the Senate of the United States, Sept. 26th, 1850. See Appendix to Congressional Globe, vol. 22, part 2nd, page 1366.

Hon. Charles J. Jenkins, long a leading Whig of Georgia, has written an able letter, assigning his reasons for supporting Mr. Buchanan for the Presidency.

A well-informed German in the city of New-York states, that there are about 12,000 German voters in this city, of whom not more than 1,500 will vote for Fremont, and adds, these will make more noise till the election than all the rest.

From a bitter and whining article in the Jefferson Co. Republican, we gather that cheers for "Buck and Breck" were rather more numerous than those for Fremont, at the "great Republican meeting" in Jefferson.

The Argus of 23d says: "We can assure our readers, on recent and reliable intelligence, that, notwithstanding all the bragging of the Republicans, there is not the slightest danger that Mr. Buchanan will lose Pennsylvania."

Sixty-nine old line Whigs of Detroit have issued an appeal to their Whig friends of Michigan, urging them, as they value the Union and the Constitution of their country, to support the election of Buchanan and Breckinridge.

OBITUARY.

Died in Chicago, Ill., on Friday morning, the 19th inst., William Patrick, only child of Mr. Thomas P. Casey, formerly of Athenry, county Galway, Ireland, aged 9 months and 7 days.

At Charleston, S. C., on the 27th inst., in the 38th year of his age, John Hill, formerly of Castle Daly, county Westmeath, deservedly regretted by a numerous circle of friends.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At St. George's Cathedral, Southwark, Edward J. Browner, of Auburn Villa, Rathgar Road, to Eliza, daughter of the late James Corr, of Callan, county Kilkenny.

At Carrickmore, Robert Kerr, of Sess, to Isabella, daughter of the late Alexander M'Farland, of Ballyhallaghan, county Tyrone.

At Aberdeen, George Dickie, M. D., of Belfast, to Agnes Williamson, daughter of Alexander Low.

In Cork, James F. Windle, Solicitor, of Tarbert, to Helena, daughter of A. M'Carthy.

Hugh M'Mahon, to Mrs. Catherine O'Hara.

William Stewart, of Brigh, county Tyrone, to Jane Ekin, of Drumnard, county Derry.

At Brighton, William O'Ryan, of Bansha Castle, county Tipperary, to Maria, relict of William Annand, of Norwood, Surrey.

At Delaware, Canada, William F. Bullen, to Ann Eliza, daughter of John D. Milne, formerly of the 9th Regiment.

At Waterford, Robert Jacob, to Hannah Maria, daughter of James Walpole.

At Ballymena, James Moore, of Lawn View place, to Ellen, daughter of Bernard O'Rawe, of Fountain-place, Ballymena.

At St. Paul's Church, Cork, Captain Wm. Thomas Levingston Hosking, son of Captain Thomas Hosking, of Ballydehob Mines, to Anne, daughter of John O'Hara, of Clonakilty, county Cork.

At Tralee, Patrick Devlin, 5, Middle Gardiner street, Dublin, to Jane, sister of John Higgins, Nelson street, Tralee.

At St. Patrick's Church, Waterford, William Hearne, to Ellen, daughter of the late John Foster, of Arundel-square.

At Belgarim, East Indies, Robert Mockler, Captain, 64th Regiment, to Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. J. Colthurst, of Lobeda Glebe, county Londonderry.

In Stillorgan church, Margaret, daughter of Robert Geoghegan, Carysfort Lodge, Stillorgan Park, to John Reilly, Leiutenant 8th Hussars.

At Langcliffe, Yorkshire, Joseph Birkbeck, son of the late John Birkbeck, of Anley House, to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lewis Mackesy, M. D., Waterford.

At Oranmore, Thomas Hazel, of Cashel House, Connemara, to Mary, daughter of George Hill, of Oranmore.

At Heavitree, near Exeter, John Clibborne, of Lisanisky, King's County, and of Apthrop Villa, near Bath, to Louisa Barbara, daughter of the late Bonner Collins, of Hatch Beauchamp.

Philip Quin, of Carrigoon, Mallow, to Mary Ann, daughter of Denis O'Connor.

At Odogh, James George Robertson, of Kilkenny, to Wilhelmina Margaret Alice, daughter of William Strangways, formerly of the 83d Regiment, Suttonsrath, county Kilkenny.

IRISH DEATHS.

At Ballingary, county Tipperary, aged 82 years, Mary, relict of the late Thomas O'Donnell, and mother of the Rev. Thomas O'Donnell, C. C., Boherlahan.

At Ontario-terrace, Rathmines, Jane, wife of Charles Ross, and daughter of the late Henry Cuppaidge, of Harold's Cross.

Owen MacNally, brother to the Right Rev. Dr. MacNally.

James Rankin, late of Stanhope street, Dublin, aged 70 years.

At his residence, 5 Vere street, Dublin, William Brady, aged 78 years.

At Ayrfield Coolock, aged 89 years, Sir Edmond Nugent.

In London, Sarah, relict of N. Whitworth, formerly of Drogheda.

At Gresham-terrace, Kingstown, Elizabeth, relict of William Gibton.

In London, Anne, wife of Robert Wyon, of Dublin.

Joseph Read, son of John Read, Somerville, Rathmines.

In Kildare, Clara Ann, wife of Captain J. Addy, of the Land Transport Corps.

At Straffin, county Kildare, aged 74 years, A. Hervey.

At Abbeyville, aged 75 years, Thomas Hemsworth.

At South Audley street, Dublin, Sir Richard Westmacott, R. A., in the 82d year of his age.

At 18 Myrtle Hill terrace, Sealy D. Freeman, son of the late Doctor Pahie, of Cuba House, Banagher, King's County.

At Rotherham, Yorkshire, A. Grant, aged 56 years, brother of James Grant, Editor of the "Morning Advertiser."

At Walworth, Anto Thomas Smith Miller, late of Dublin.

In Coleraine, aged 74 years, Anne, sister of the late Right Rev. S. Kyle, Bishop of Cork.

At Howth-View, Glasthle, Hugh H. Brady, son of the late Henry Brady, of Raheens Park, Clare.

Mrs. Catherine Lawless, relict of Thomas Lawless, of Gallstown, county Meath.

Ellen, mother of Stephen M'Kenna, of Great Patrick street, Dublin, aged 92 years.

Anne Jane, daughter of the late Captain Robert Neill, of Bangor.

At Tritonville, Sandymount, Elizabeth Jane, eldest daughter of C. Charlesworth.

In Tipperary, in the 84th year of his age, Leonard Keating, late of Garranlea, the senior Magistrate of the county Tipperary.

Of decline, aged 44 years, James Parker, of Garrykennedy.

At Edward street, Limerick, Mrs. Mary Benson, aged 70 years.

At Prior Park terrace, Clonmel, James N. Coyne.

At Coolemore House, county Cork, Herbert O'Donnell, J. P.

At Clonballa, King's County, Harriet, daughter of the late Daniel Melloy.

In Camden street, Dublin, William Barrington, aged 71 years.

In Kilkee, Benjamin Crabb, of Dublin, stationer.

In Tralee, Susan, relict of the late Dr. Sheehy.

At Kennitty, Thomas Hipwell.

In Nelson street, Tralee, Mrs. Mary Smith.

At Basseterre, St. Kitt's, West Indies, Captain James Spencer Quelch, aged 77 years.

At Plymouth, Philippa Vaughan, relict of Captain Queade, 40th and 77th Regiments.

At Chichester, Mrs. Snooke, widow of Major Henry Snooke, 18th Royal Irish.

In Rutland street, Limerick, Matthew, son of Michael Keane, baker.

In Thomas street, Limerick, after a few days illness, John Mannix, proprietor of the oyster tavern.

In High street, Limerick, Michael Coffey.

EMPLOYMENT FOR THE WINTER!

The Best Book for Agents.

TO PERSONS OUT OF EMPLOYMENT.

An elegant Gift for a father to present to his family! Send for one copy, and try it among your friends!—Wanted—Agents in every section of the United States and Canada, to circulate Sears' large type quarto Bible, for family use, entitled The People's Pictorial Domestic Bible, with about one thousand Engravings! This useful book is destined, if we can form an opinion from the Notices of the Press, to have an unprecedented circulation in every section of our wide-spread continent, and to form a distinct era in the sale of our works. It will, no doubt, in a few years become the Family Bible of the American people. The most liberal remuneration will be allowed to all persons who may be pleased to procure subscribers to the above. From 50 to 100 copies may easily be circulated and sold in each of the principal cities and towns of the Union. It will be sold by subscription only. Application should be made at once, as the field will soon be occupied. Persons wishing to act as agents, and do a safe business, can send for a specimen copy. On receipt of the established price, Six Dollars, the Pictorial Family Bible, with a well bound Subscription Book, will be carefully boxed, and forwarded per express, at our risk and expense, to any central town or village in the United States, excepting those of California, Oregon and Texas. Register your letters, and your money will come safe. In addition to the Pictorial Bible, we publish a large number of Illustrated Family Works, very popular, and of such a high moral and unexceptionable character, that while good men may safely engage in their circulation, they will confer a public benefit, and receive a fair compensation for their labor. Orders respectfully solicited. For further particulars, address the subscriber, (post-paid.)

Robert Sears, 181 William street, New York.

EVERY READER

will please notice the advertisement descriptive of Mr. Sears' Pictorial Family Bible, and send for the principal catalogue of all our Illustrated Works. To the uninitiated in the great art of selling books, we would say, that we present a scheme for money making, far better than all the gold mines of California and Australia. Any person wishing to embark in the enterprise, will risk little by sending to the publisher $25, for which he will receive sample copies of the various works (at wholesale prices) carefully boxed, insured and directed, affording a very liberal percentage to the agent for his trouble. With these he will soon be able to ascertain the most saleable, and order accordingly. Address (post paid)

Robert Sears, Publisher,
181 William street, New York.

cot4 1t

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
68 Liberty street, N. Y.

sept18 3mos

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall."
R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street.
FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms."
EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn.
GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y.
RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y.
P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall."
Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street.
M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms.
T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory.
WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms."
JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y.
M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn.
MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street.
W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa.
MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue.
JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City.
—— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia.
P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia.
Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me.
JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill.
CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond.
P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston.
GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta.
EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo.
D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati.
JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y21june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

Improved Billiard Tables and Cushions.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

58, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 13, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug23 10t

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.
JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept13

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application, personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until enquiry has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 8mos Hatton & Co.

Evening School will open Monday, September 29, at the corner of Little and Water streets, Brooklyn, within a few minutes walk of the Catharine, Rosevelt and Governeur streets Ferries. Ladies and Gentlemen will meet with the most polite attention from competent and obliging teachers. Several pupils of this establishment now hold first positions as Bookkeepers, Architects, Teachers, &c., &c. All those whose education is limited or wholly neglected can scarcely find so good an opportunity for supplying its wants. Hours from 7 to 9 P. M. Terms—to suit the times.

S. H. Coleman, Principal.

P. S.—The "Cosmopolitan Literary Club," meet in one of the School-rooms at half-past 7 o'clock every Saturday evening.

HUGH WINTERS, Sec'y. MICHAEL J. DEEGAN, President.
sept27 2t

Photographs and Ambrotypes.—50 Franklin street, New-York. Persons wishing to have a true life-like Photograph or Ambrotype taken, will do well to call at this place; the pictures there made are finished in the best style, and no trouble or pains will be spared to suit the most delicate taste.

The prices will be lower than in any other establishment in town, the proprietor not having the expenses of artists to pay for the coloring of the pictures, or salaries of operators, the work being done by the proprietor himself.

Persons having black plain photographs, and wishing to have them colored or re-touched in China Ink, can have it done at low prices. The proprietor will also re-touch for any establishment in the city or country, that will ask for it, and those he has been coloring for can have their work done at the same rates and prices.

Instructions will be given to pupils in Photograph and Ambrotype. Good collodion for sale, and all kinds of chemicals for the business prepared to order. (8m12jly) A. Cosmes.

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparent expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 3m19jly

Special Notices.

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, August 12 1856.—To the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York:—Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the general election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to-wit:—

A Governor, in the place of Myron H. Clark.
A Lieutenant-Governor, in the place of Henry J. Raymond.
A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Cornelius Gardiner.
An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Thomas Kirkpatrick.
A Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Benjamin F. Harwood, deceased.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Thirty-five Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.
A Representative in the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States for the Third Congressional district, composed of the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Eighth wards in the city and county of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fourth Congressional district, composed of the Fourth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourteenth wards of the said city and county.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fifth Congressional district, composed of the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of the said city and county, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth wards in the city of Brooklyn, in the county of King's.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Sixth Congressional district, composed of the Eleventh, Fifteenth and Seventeeth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, composed of the Ninth, Sixteenth and Twentieth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Eighth Congressional district, composed of the Twelfth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second wards of the city of New-York.
City and county officers are also to be elected:—
A Mayor, in the place of Fernando Wood.
A City Judge, in the place of Elisha S. Capron.
Two Governors of the Almshouse, in the places of Isaac Bell, jr., and Simeon Draper.
Also, sixteen members of Assembly for said city and county.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Your's respectfully, N. P. STANTON, Jr.,
Deputy Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, New-York, August 20, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET, Sheriff of the City and County of New-York.

All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, chap 6, title 3, article 3, part 1, page 140.
aug30

DENTISTRY.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for only One Dollar and Fifty Cents! Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 81 Park Row, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.

N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2. sept6 8mos H. Conklin Smith.

Business Directory.

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has opened the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to his customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city.

Gentlemen's Furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

☞ Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

RICH CARPETING.

1856. FALL IMPORTATION. 1856.

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s	per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s	"
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s	"
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s	"
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s	"
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s	"
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s	"

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap191y Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

CARPETINGS FROM AUCTION.

TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK AND VICINITY.

STEPHEN LEAHY,

93 Sixth Avenue, between Waverly and Clinton Place,

BEGS to call the attention of the ladies to his large and varied stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloth. The collection comprises goods of every grade and style, from the richest and most beautiful of foreign manufacture to the lowest price domestic.

All who are acquainted with the Carpet trade and have visited our New Store, acknowledge our stock the most varied assortment and best selected on exhibition in the city. The facilities we enjoy for purchasing cheap, and an experience of many years in connection with the largest houses in the country enables us to present to our lady friends and the public the cheapest and most select stock of goods in the city.

sept27 1m STEPHEN LEAHY, 93 Sixth Avenue.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call.
8mjly26

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,
NEW-YORK. 3m

☞ SHIP STORES SUPPLIED. ☜

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap261y

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.
ap19m6 Manufacturing stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap191y

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 18 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,
(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my81y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

8mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled. JOHN HAMILTON, tf S. W. JOHNSON.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap261y

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,
3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

3m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

Business Directory.

THOMAS RUSSELL.

209 FULTON STREET, BETWEEN CHURCH AND GREENWICH STS.
and across town, at 111 Attorney-st., corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform the public that he has opened the above establishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &C.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call attention of buyers to his Stock, consisting, in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated Brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, Vintage 1823 and 1842.
Otard, Dupuy & Co., Vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

(Imported by the subscriber to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.)

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a select supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Connor, Wall Street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care, being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 36th street, and 6th Avenue: T. Russell & Co., corner 4th Street and 6th Avenue, and at the corners of 13th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those in need of nourishment; and it is, undoubtedly, the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three hundred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old-fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the ELIZABETHAN ALE most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oct4 3mos

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS,

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English pickles, sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 8m16au

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

JAMES CAIN.

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my81y

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, Editor and Proprietor.
JOHN SAVAGE, Literary Editor.

Three Dollars per Annum. Single Copies 6 Cents.
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1856. NO. 27.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXVII.

Editorial.

Our Second Volume.
Great Democratic Demonstration—Vindication of the South.
Crowned Conspirator's—The Western Alliance.
A Word about Ourselves.
President Pierce in Concord.
The Daily News.
Smith O'Brien.
Committee on the Devin Reilly Tesimonial.
Outrage on Robert Emmet.
The Emmet Guard.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part IV.—By Garland O'Halloran—Reviews of the Magazines—Robert Emmet's Life—and Miss Esmonde's Readings—Lit. and Art Items.

Poetry.

Midsummer Night—By "Belshazzar."

Correspondence.

Letter from Nicaragua—By M. F. Nagle. Letter From Boston—By Thomas Cass. Military Intelligence.

Miscellaneous.

Smith O'Brien at Home! Col. Doheny's Address. Thomas Meagher, M. P. Military Defences of Waterford. Is Fremont a Catholic? Was Henry Clay a Highway Robber? Buchanan and the Press. Gov. Clark in Canada. More American Annexation. Irish News. Foreign, &c.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

Terms.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

for advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - $14

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, N. Y.

Knoxville, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Eliot Hudson had lived, it wouldhave been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, John Mitchel.

Now Ready.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET.

By Dr. R. R. MADDEN.

With a fine portrait on Steel, engraved by O'Neill.

AND A MEMOIR OF

THOMAS ADDIS EMMET.

With a fine portrait on Steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo, cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:—

Personal Recollections of Clonmel.
Madden's United Irishmen.
Savage's '98 and '48.
Gilbert's Streets of Dublin.
Fitzpatrick's Life of Cloncurry.
Irish Quarterly Review.
Life of O'Dwyer the Outlaw.
Moore's Letters to Mackenzie.
Life of Robert Holmes. By Savage.
Life of Corbett.
B. P. Binns' Letters.
Grattan's Life. By his Son.
Phillips' Recollection of Curran.
John Binn's Life.
Moore's Life of Lord Edward Fitzgerald.
Macnevin's Pieces of Irish History.
Magoon's American Orators.
Curran's Life. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by Mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX., is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities in the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its general appearance, as well as to the chasteness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably. Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

The work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,
Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS.

Publishers and Booksellers,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF

Church Furniture,

Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and 172 William street, corner of Beekman, New-York.

BENZIGER BROTHERS beg leave most respectfully to call the particular attention of the Right Rev. and the Rev. Clergy, the Religious Communities, Educational Establishments, and of the Trade, to the large and varied stock they have just opened in their new store, 172 William street.

Their Book Trade.

The old established house of Benziger Brothers, Eisiedeln, well known to many of the Hierarchy and the Rev. Clergy of the United States who have visited Switzerland, established this house in New-York four years ago, and they trust they will receive for the greatly increased advantages they offer, a continuance of that support, which for a period of over forty years has enabled them to build up, at the Pilgrimage of Our Lady of the Hermits (Einsiedeln) an establishment in which over four hundred persons are daily employed in the fabrication of the various articles that are used in the Church.

They desire particularly to call attention to their publications of PRAYER and DEVOTIONAL BOOKS, in German, French, Italian and Latin, consisting of over 200 different sorts. Being in immediate and constant intercourse with nearly all the principal publishers of Europe, they are enabled to offer a large assortment of standard THEOLOGICAL and LITURGICAL WORKS, among which are, the editions of Mechline, Paris, Ratisbone, &c., at exceedingly low prices.

They are also prepared to supply any of the English Catholic Books published in the United States, at publishers' lowest prices.

An assortment of Dutch and Flemish Prayer Books, and of German School and Story Books.

2. They very respectfully invite an inspection of their extensive assortment of

Vestments and Church Vessels, and, in doing so, feel confident that their stocks is more varied and of superior fabrication than any of the kind heretofore introduced into the United States, and from their facilities for purchasing in Europe, are enabled to sell at a lower price than any other house in the country.

3. Engravings, Beads, Crucifixes, &c.

ENGRAVINGS.—An immense variety of their own manufacture, including Altar, Baptismal, Confirmation, First Communion and First Confession Cards, Holy Water Pots, and BEADS—Pearl, Garnet, Cornelian, Cocoa, Ivory, Wood, and Glass.

CRUCIFIXES, MEDALS, and RELIQUARIES, &c., in great variety. Also, STATUARY, in porcelain, biscuit, plastique, &c., &c.

4. Together with the above they have a large number of Beautiful Statues,

suitable for Churches [and, Oratories, imported from Germany, France, and Belgium; amongst which are "The Immaculate Conception," "Virgin Mother" or "Our Lady of Victories," "St. Peter," "St. Paul," "Ecce Homo," "St. Joseph," "St. Aloysius," "St. Patrick," "The Resurrection," "Angel Guardian," "Angel Adoring," "The Infant Saviour in the Crib," "The Crucifixion," and many others. Any figure made to order, from design.

☞ Catalogues describing the Church Ornaments, Books, Pictures and Beads, can be had on application. jy19 3mos

Publications.

EVENING FREE SCHOOLS.

EVENING SCHOOLS FOR THE EDUCATION OF MALES.—Notice is hereby given, that Evening Schools for the education of Apprentices or others, whose ages or avocations prevent their attending the Day Schools, will be opened on Monday Evening, October 6th, at 7 o'clock, for a term of twelve weeks, in the rooms of the Male Departments of the following School Houses:

1st	Ward, School House	No. 29, 97 and 99 Greenwich street.
4th	" " "	William street, near Duane.
5th	" " "	No. 44, Corner North Moore and Varick streets.
6th	" " "	No. 23, City Hall Place.
7th	" " "	No. 81, Monroe street, near Montgomery.
8th	" " "	No. 38, Clarke street, near Broome.
9th	" " "	No. 3, Corner Hudson and Grove streets.
10th	" " "	No. 20, Ludlow street, near Delancy.
11th	" " "	No. 15, Fifth street, near Avenue C.
12th	" " "	No. 39, One Hundred & Twenty-fifth st., Harlem.
"	" " "	No. 43, Manhattanville.
14th	" " "	No. 32, Baxter street, near Grand.
15th	" " "	No. 35, Thirteenth street, near Sixth Avenue.
16th	" " "	No. 11, Seventeenth street, near Eighth Avenue.
18th	" " "	No. 40, Twentieth street, near Second Avenue.
20th	" " "	No. 33, Thirty-fifth street, near Ninth Avenue.
22d	" " "	No. 28, Fortieth street, near Eighth Avenue.

Evening Schools for the Education of Females.

NOTICE is also hereby given that Evening Schools, for the education of Females will be opened on Monday Evening October 6th, at 6½ o'clock, in the Female Departments of the following School Houses:

1st	Ward, School House	No. 29, 97 and 99 Greenwich street.
4th	" " "	No. 26, James street, near Chatham.
6th	" " "	No. 24, Elm street, near Leonard.
7th	" " "	No. 81, Monroe street, near Montgomery.
8th	" " "	No. 38, Clarke street, near Broome.
10th	" " "	No. 20, Ludlow street, near Delancy.
11th	" " "	No. 15, Fifth street, near Avenue C.
14th	" " "	No. 21, Marion street, near Prince.
15th	" " "	No. 35, Thirteenth street, near Sixth Avenue.
16th	" " "	No. 45, Twenty-fourth street, near Eighth Avenue.
18th	" " "	No. 40, Twentieth street, near Second Avenue.
22d	" " "	No. 28, Fortieth street, near Eighth Avenue.

A School for Colored People (Males and Females) will also be opened at at the School House in Laurens street, between Grand and Broome streets, at the same time.

Experienced Teachers have been engaged, and everything provided that will be required to conduct these Schools, and afford thorough instruction to pupils, free of charge. Application for admission must be made at the School Rooms as soon as the Schools are opened.

An additional term of nine weeks will commence on the 5th day of January, 1857.

Executive Committee on Evening Schools:—Andrew J. Perry, William Jones, Jr., Albert Smith, Florence McCarthy, Eliphalet Bootman, George White, William Sinclair. oct4 1t

AN IMPORTANT NATIONAL WORK.

SIXTH Edition now ready, and for sale by Booksellers and Agents. (Heretofore sold only by subscription)—

CYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN LITERATURE.

By E. A. & G. L. Duyckinck.

With 225 Portraits, 425 Autographs, and 75 Views of Colleges, Libraries, and Residences of Authors, and elegant steel engravings of James Fenimore Cooper and Benjamin Fanklin. Price $7; in half calf, $10.

The work is in 2 volumes, royal octavo, 1,500 pages, containing Lives of our Authors from the earliest period to the present day, with Selections from their Writings; also a History of all our Colleges, Public Libraries, &c. The Personal Biography is full and minute, and the selections comprehend a large portion of the best literature of America. The latter are made particularly with reference to their completeness and to their permanent historical interest, and display every variety of talent from every portion of the country. In this respect the work (the contents of which equal six ordinary octavo volumes) may be regarded as no inconsiderable American Library in itself!

From Washington Irving, Esq.

"I commend it most heartily to the reading public, for I consider it not merely a desideratum, but, in some sort, a necessity to every well-furnished American Library."

JUST PUBLISHED:

AN ILLUSTRATED LIFE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

By J. T. Headley. 1 vol., octavo; with 42 superb full engravings. Price $3.

THE LIFE OF PRINCE TALLEYRAND.

With extracts from his Speeches and Writings. By Charles K. McHarg. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.

Agents wanted in every town in the United States to sell these Works. Copies will be sent by mail to any address for price remitted to

C. Scribner, 379 Broadway, oct11 1t (up stairs) New-York.

JUST PUBLISHED:

BROWNSON'S QUARTERLY REVIEW.

For October, 1856.

CONTENTS:

I. Mission of America.
II. The Council of Trent and its Results.
III. The Church and Modern Civilization.
IV. E. W. Derby to his Son.
V. The Presidential Election.
VI. The Church in the United States.
VII. Inkerman.
VIII. Literary Notices and Criticisms.

Edward Dunigan & Brother,
James B. Kirker, oct11 1t 151 Fulton street, New-York.

THE SHAM BATTLE OF OULART HILL IN '98!

Advertised for the 7th of October, at Hastings, is POSTPONED until MONDAY, October 20th, in consequence of Thomas Francis Meagher's Lecture on the 7th.

Tickets 50 cents each. The green tickets only are good, the white tickets are recalled.

The steamboat and barges will leave Broome street, E. R., at 7, Peck Slip, half-past 7, Pier 3, N. R., at 8, Spring street at 9 o'clock.

John H. Ryan, Sec. JOHN FOLEY, Chairman.

There will be a Drill of all who wish to take a part in the proceedings every Friday Evening, at the Eagle Drill Rooms, at 7½ o'clock, by F. Maguire, of the Fitzgerald Guard; J. Huston, of the Brian Boroihme Guard, and J. O'Connor, one of the old veterans of '98.

Special Notices.

Information Wanted of Andrew Arthur, Gunmaker, lately of Petaluma, California, supposed to be in Nicaragua; was formerly in Walker's expedition to Sonora. Information addressed to M. Arthur, 95 Cranberry street, Brooklyn, or this Office, will be thankfully received.

California papers will please copy.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC.....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC.....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC.....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contrast, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.
JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.
EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CRERAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Piers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CRERAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap191y Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call. 8mjly26

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my81y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 139 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

Information Wanted.—Michael Gorman, Stone Cutter, of New-York, will hear of something to his advantage by writing to his Brother-in-law M. McMahon, Neshkors, Marquette Co., Wisconsin. sept20 4t

European News.

The European news, to September 20, is quite uninteresting.

ARRESTS IN PARIS.

From Paris, the only item is an account of arrests of numerous members of the secret society of the Marianne, who, it is reported, intended to assassinate the Emperor as he returned from Biarritz. The Paris correspondent of the London Times, September 17, says :—" There was an unusual stir last night at the Prefecture of Police and at the Prison of Manzas, owing to the arrest of about thirty persons belonging to a secret society. This society, composed of revolutionists of the most violent and dangerous kind, held a meeting yesterday, at which it is said that it was decided to assassinate the Emperor on his return from Biarritz. I understand that the Police know all the members of this society, most of whom are old members of the Marianne, inhabiting the 6th, 7th and 8th arrondissements of Paris. The majority of them are artisans. Several of those arrested are very young, and appear intelligent and not uneducated. They have been placed in solitary confinement at Mazas, and are allowed to communicate with no one. The search made at their residences has brought to light nothing that compromises them, but the Police are prepared to prove the existence of the society, and to bring forward witnesses of its frequent meetings. This confirms the evidence as to the existence of a secret society, whose members are sworn to attempt the life of the Emperor. Fortunately, the Police are vigilant and sharp-sighted, and history is there to show us how rarely such attempts succeed. It is doubtless very difficult to form a society of this kind, into which some agent of the authorities does not find some means to insinuate himself, and even when that is not the case, at the last moment it is rare that all the conspirators preserve their firmness of purpose and of nerve."

It is positively asserted that the French government has given an order, dating from the 15th ult., prohibiting any further transportations to Cayenne.

OPENING OF THE SWISS ASSEMBLY.—The Swiss Federal Assembly was opened on the 13th, the second part of its session. The events of Neufchatel naturally occupy the foremost place in the opening addresses to both Chambers. The sentiments expressed on the subject by the President of the National Council and by the President of the Council of the States are exactly the same. The following is the language of the President of the National Council :—" Deplorable events have occurred in the Confederation, and blood has flowed. A party, forgetting all the events of late years, has displayed on the soil of Switzerland the flag of a foreign power. At the first moment, in the midst of the general surprise, the royalist party was able to haul down the federal flag ; but it was immediately after again raised aloft by the immense majority of the country, by the whole Republican party, which rose like a single man to oppose and cast out the foreign adherents. Thanks to the energy and devotedness of the Republicans of Neufchatel, the insurrection was stifled in its very outset. Let us congratulate them on having succeeded without the assistance of the Confederation. These events have once more proved how deeply rooted are the Republican convictions of our co-federates. Let us hope, gentlemen, that these circumstances will not lead to any annoying complications for Switzerland ; but whatever may come to pass, the Confederation will not forget the proof of ardent patriotism which the Republicans of Neufchatel have given, and it will know how to thoroughly protect them.

OPENING OF THE HOLLAND LEGISLATURE.

The session of the States-General was opened at the Hague on the 15th of September. We make the following extracts from the King's speech :

Gentlemen :—To my great joy, the war between the different Powers has ceased since I opened your last session, and re-established peace already discloses its beneficial results. During those difficult circumstances, we maintained with foreign Powers relations of good will and good understanding, and we have every ground for rejoicing in their continuance at the present moment. Our colonies and possessions in other parts of the world enjoy in general a happy tranquillity. Development of progress, moral and material, are manifest in them. We have, however, to deplore the great disasters that have afflicted some islands of the Molucca Archipelago. My Government, aided by public munificence, labors to diminish their sad effects. Though freedom of commerce with Japan has not yet been obtained, endeavors are still perseveringly made to arrive at that end. The lot of the slaves in the Western colonies does not cease to be the object of my lively solicitude. Measures have been taken tending to ameliorate their present condition, so as to prepare for their social reform, on which subject propositions will be submitted to you during this session. The internal situation of the country ought to inspire us with a profound sentiment of gratitude. Commerce, navigation, agriculture, and the different branches of industry, are in a state that leaves nothing to be desired. My attention remains engaged on all works that can insure the security and prosperity of the country. Railway projects give hope of seeing a network of ironway established throughout the whole extent of the country. The favorable state of our finances will not the less enable us to continue the redemption of our debt, a bill for which will be submitted to your deliberations.

Belgium.

FREE TRADE CONGRESS.

The International Free Trade Congress has opened its session at Brussels. The following account is from a London paper : King Leopold and the Duke of Brabant arrived at 12 o'clock on the 17th inst. The illustrious visitors were received on their arrival at the Hall of the Academy, by the leading members of the Government, as well as by the municipal authorities. They remained for a considerable time at the Congress, paying great attention to the proceedings going on, and making anxious inquiries as to the best means of securing the great object of the assemblage, viz : the amelioration of the physical and moral condition of the working classes in every country. His Majesty and the Duke of Brabant are the special patrons of the Congress, the expenses of which are paid by the Government. The three sections into which the members were divided, on the opening day, meet every morning at 9 o'clock, in their respective halls, when they discuss questions and adopt resolutions in relation to the particulars submitted to each respectively. The Hon. W. Cowper, the President of the British Board of Health, is Chairman of the third section. At about 12 o'clock, the business of those sections concludes, and the remainder of the day, up to 3 or 4 o'clock, is occupied by the Congress generally who are, during that time assembled together with the view of interchanging ideas, and considering the reports or statements of the various representatives present as to the progress made in their own respective countries, toward elevating the condition of the poorer and industrious classes, and satisfying their many wants. The Congress met yesterday for general business at 10 o'clock. M. Faider presided on the occasion, in the absence of M. Rogier, the ex-Minister of the Interior, who, in consequence of a domestic affliction, was obliged to go to Paris. M. Ducpetiaux, the honorary Secretary of the Congress announced to the members that, upon the presentation of their cards, they would be admitted to all the solemnities of the September fetes.

The order of the day for the consideration of the measures taken by the different countries for the amelioration of the condition of the working classes was then read. M. Suringar (Holland) gave an interesting account of the system practised in his country in regard to charitable establishments. At Amsterdam alone there were more than 300. He styled Holland the mother of land charity. M. Meyer (Switzerland) said that for the last three centuries the organization of charitable asylums was left in the hands of the people, the government only interfering in times of great distress. Pauperism was the canker of Switzerland—" the Canton of Zurich was another Ireland in minature." Nevertheless there existed charitable endowments equal to a capital of 450 francs for each poor person. M. Nittermayer (Baden) said that they were chiefly communes and voluntary societies which supported the charities of his country. It was his conviction that the most powerful remedy for pauperism was to be found in such associations as the present. Those associations could not exist without perfect liberty—the liberty of meeting together, and the liberty of the press. Belgium might well be considered as a privileged country—a model country (cheers,) M. Engel (Saxony) said—Among the measures taken in his country to relieve the indigent were corn-mills and bakeries established in the great centres of the population. The solicitude of the Saxony Government was directed principally to the reasonable feeding of the people. The individual man has not only a moral value, but he has also an economical value. Intelligence and physical force are his capital, though political economy might consider him only as a mere instrument of labor. It was then of the greatest advantage to a nation to attract to it as many men as possible, because they are the chief wealth of the country, and it was by liberty, and by liberty only, that we can augment the value of this capital (applause). M. Graeze (Sweden) complained of the falling off of hands which was felt in his country. The position of the agricultural classes was, however, very satisfactory. The schools of agriculture were well administered. From 1836 agricultural productions had doubled. In 1855 Sweden had exported four millions of hectolitres of corn. It was needless for him to say that the year of the war had greatly influenced her exportations. The manufacture of eau-de-vie had considerably diminished, while there had been an augmentation in the public revenues of about 5,000,000. It was to the modifications of the general legislation carried out in 1854 that must be attributed this favorable result. The Government of Stockholm had already taken measures to improve the habitations of the working classes. Thirteen habitations had been recently erected, which comprise 157 lodgements, of which the annual rent varied from 48 to 120 francs. There was also laid in the city the foundation of a perfect economic museum. Mr. A. K. Kersdyck observed that he had traveled through a great number of countries, but had never met with so few paupers as there were in this happy country of Belgium, which appeared to him to be peculiarly favored by nature. M. Faye (Norway) thought it was most useful for persons to initiate themselves into the knowledge of the manners, the habits, and even the popular prejudices of different countries. The best practical information was to be obtained in this way. The Government of Norway, influenced by this feeling, sent salaried envoys abroad, and when they returned they were able to instruct the people as to the best mode of drainage, &c. The precepts of those agents were followed, and the most valuable results had been gained. Norway suffered like Sweden in the want of hands. For example, a rich master of privateers being unable to find proper workmen to repair his vessels, had been obliged to send to Antwerp for them. Norway could well provide for all her wants without the use, or rather the abuse, of the eau-de-vie, which, he was sorry to say, was general. That was the only reason which obliged the country to seek for supplies of corn at a foreign port. That importation was now raised to more than 8,000,000, which were completely absorbed by the works of distillation. M. David (Denmark) said that the chief commerce of Denmark consisted in articles of food. The crisis of 1846 and 1847 had been surmounted without much difficulty, notwithstanding the inevitable rise in the price of provisions. This gentleman entered into long details on the subject of the construction of towns for workmen in his country, measures for which had been taken.

A correspondent of a London paper, writing on the 17th ult. says :—The Congress has selected the Presidents and Vice-Presidents of its bureaux from the delegates of the different nations present. There are England, France, Germany, Australia, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Portugal, Sardinia, and Brazil. The delegates appointed for England are Hon. William Cowper, and Mr. Ewart, M. P. During the first day's sitting, Mr. Ward was invited to open practical business by expounding the means adopted by benevolent societies and individuals in England for the amendment of the dwellings of the lower classes, and for the improvement of supplies of water, cleansing of drains, and divers other sanitary measures equally important. Among other interesting details, Mr. Ward who delivered himself with considerable fluency in French, stated in substance that one hundred English towns had organized a system whereby pure and soft water was distributed, and impurities carried off to a salutary distance, and thence rendered available for agricultural and fertilising purposes. Thus the expenses of the one are diminished by the proceeds of the other. According to calculation, the supply of the one costs three halfpence, and the clearance of the other one penny, per habitation per week. Thus also the mortality in towns where the system had been introduced had fallen 50 per cent., whilst the fertility of the neighboring lands had quadrupled. By an improved system of lodging, that is by altering and ventilating old habitations, and constructing model houses, a floating population of 30,000 souls had been lodged, with only ten cases of typhus, where before there had been 500 cases. Mr. Ward's highly interesting communications, accompanied by numerous plans and documents, were laid on the table, and our worthy countryman was rewarded by a vote of thanks. The President announced to the Congress that the Duke of Brabant had condescended to offer himself as their patron.

SPAIN.—A dispatch, dated Madrid, Sept. 16, says, the Gazette publishes a royal decree which re-establishes the constitution of 1845. An additional article lays down the nature of these offences of the press which shall be cognisable by a jury. It is also stated in the decree that the minimum duration of the session of the Cortes shall be four months ; that the existence of the Council of State is solemnly acknowledged ; that the consent of the Cortes shall be necessary for the marriage of the Sovereign, or that of the heirs to the crown, for the alienation of the royal patrimony, and for general amnesties. Paris correspondence relates that much discontent existed in Madrid, and that the Queen and O'Donnell are becoming equally unpopular.

Foreign Miscellany.

A YOUNG LADY DRAWN IN A LOTTERY.—Nearly a year ago a young lady in France named Sophie Van Behr, conceived the singular idea of disposing of herself in marriage by means of a lottery. She was thirty years old, was tired of a life of celibacy, and in despair at not finding a husband with enough means at his commands to suit her views. She announced, therefore, that her handsome but rather mature person should be disposed of on the following terms : She created a lottery with five hundred shares of a thousand francs each. Subscribers were to present themselves in person, in order that she might decide on their acceptability as husbands. The subscribers of course were to be single men. The subscriptions were placed in the hands of a notary as fast as made, and the drawing was not to take place till all the shares were taken, that is, when the sum of half a million of francs was complete. Not quite a year elapsed before all the shares were taken. The drawing recently took place in the office of the notary who held the subscriptions and the money, in presence of two magistrates. A thousand numbers were placed in an urn, the subscribers being numbered in order as their names were inscribed. The urn was thoroughly shaken up, a blind hand was thrust in, and No. 499 withdrawn. The happy individual who subscribed No. 499 was a Tunisian General, who had already occupied the public attention by his oriental caprices. But the lady was neither frightened at the turban, nor the beard, nor the religion, nor the harem of the happy barbarian, who hastened to marry her, and to pocket his five hundred thousand francs. The happy couple have left for Tunis, where they will reside.

A PEEP INTO LONDON.—Every year there are eight thousand children born in London, according to the Edinburgh Review, a competent authority. Yet the majority of the adult population, in spite of this, is country born—there having been, at the last census, out of one million three hundred and ninety-five persons, twenty years old and upwards, only six hundred and forty-five thousand born in London. Every sixteenth person of full age is a native of Ireland. There is always a permanent stock on hand, so to speak, of three hundred and fifty thousand marriageable but unmarried women. There are six hundred thousand scholars, six thousand schools, twelve hundred places of worship, and a million church-going people. Fifty thousand persons are always resident in poor-houses, prisons, and other institutions where they are fed out of public or private resources. Twenty thousand individuals are engaged constantly in killing and selling animal food ; thirty thousand in making and vending beverages ; and twenty-five thousand in doctoring, preaching, and managing law-suits. To complete the catalogue, there are thirty thousand clerks, two hundred thousand domestic servants, thirty thousand tailors, forty-thousand chair-makers, and one hundred thousand needle-women.

A paper published in British India, publishes a letter from a person at Karrachee, who says that he is determined to export 120,000 salted rats to China. The Chinese eat rats and he thinks they may sell. He says he has to pay one pice a dozen, and the salting, gutting, pressing and packing in casks, raises the price to six pice a dozen, and if he should succeed in obtaining the like price that rules in Whampoa and Canton, for corn grown rats, his fortune will be made.

The master of the American ship " Isaac Webb," of New-York, which was driven ashore in a gale of wind on the Welch coast, and afterwads towed into Liverpool, was fined £250 for having gone to sea short-handed, and succeeded in passing the customs authorities by shipping a full crew, some of whom were afterward discharged.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post states that since the publication of the new law in Turkey, 106 Christian churches have been repaired or constructed. The Sultan alone contributed 25,000f. to one building in the island of Candia.

A boat belonging to the ill-fated emigrant ship "Ocean Home" has been picked up. It contained Edward Harvey, second mate, Frederick Snow and James Mohaghan, seamen, and one passenger, name unknown.

The Russians are fortifying the entrance of the bay, and the banks below Nicolaieff.

The Sultan has bestowed the sword of Mejidoz on Admiral Houston Stewart.

Kars was formally restored by the Russians to the Turks on September 6th.

The English fleet has returned.

The Isle of Serpents is evacuated, and the "Gladiator" has left.

As the yacht Torch, the property of A. Graves, Esq., was entering the dock at Dunmore, on the anchor being dropped, the buoy rope caught one of the men, named William Mackey, by the left foot, carrying him overboard. By swimming he managed to extricate himself, and was taken ashore. It was found his leg was broken. He was taken to the Leper Hospital, Waterford, and was promptly visited by Dr. J. P. Mackesy, who set the injured leg. He is now going on well.

The importations from Ireland are increasing rapidly. The Malakoff, from Waterford, brought 50 passengers and a large cargo, consisting principally of butter, bacon, eggs, salmon, and poultry. A few mornings after, she arrived with a number of passengers, 300 sheep, 99 pigs, 11 cattle, and a large quantity of butter, bacon, and eggs. Almost all her passengers and cargo were despatched by the South Wales Railway.

A gentleman, styling himself Mayor P. Bolton, has been delivering a lecture in Wexford, on the Habitations of the Dead, showing that there are three intermediate and two final states, and that there were inaccuracies in the translation of the "authorized version" of the Bible in reference to Hell. As the admission was free, the attendance was not very select, and as some of the audience took it into their heads that the Major was "a swaddler," they did not vouchsafe him a very respectful hearing.

There has been a collection in aid of the funds for fitting out the convent in Athlone for the reception of the Sisters of Mercy. The collection was most satisfactory. Archdeacon O'Reilly gave the splendid contribution of £600, and £20 a year. Mr. Martin Carroll, pawnbroker, contributed the sum of one hundred pounds.

Irish News.

The sixth and last section of the Irish Census Report has just appeared in the form of a voluminous blue-book. It coniains a variety of tables relating to emigration, immigration, the army, agricultural statistics, &c., in the sister isle, occupying above 700 folio pages. These returns relate chiefly to the condition of Ireland in 1851—being, indeed, ostensibly founded on the census papers prepared and collected in that year, under the superintendence of Mr. M. Donnelly, the Registrar-General. The most striking fact, however, recorded in the document is presented in a preliminary table, wherein the Registrar-General brings down his estimate of Irish population to the most recent period, arriving at the conclusion that the number of dwellers in Ireland has regularly gone on diminishing year after year, and is now at least half a million less than when the census was taken on the 30th of March, 1851. Although famine and distress have disappeared, and the condition of the country become eminently prosperous, the population continues to dwindle under the influence of a strong and unchecked tide of emigration. Every year the estimated number of births has preponderated over that of deaths by more than sixty thousand on the average; but the increase arising from this natural cause has been more than counterbalanced by the outflow of population to the United States, to Canada, and to Australia. On this point, Mr. Donnelly has compiled the following table :

Years.	Excess of Births.	Emigration.	Decrease of Population.
March 30, 1851	49,319	179,507	130,188
January 1, 1852	64,453	190,322	125,869
„ 1853	63,189	173,148	109,959
„ 1854	62,085	140,555	78,470
„ 1855	61,298	91,914	30,616

The Registrar-General proceeds to remark upon this table : "It appears that the inhabitants of Ireland have, by emigration, decreased 475,102 persons from the 30th of March, 1851, to the 31st December, 1855, so that at the present time the population does not much exceed six millions; and it is probable that this number is still diminishing, owing to the emigrants from this country continuing to be greater in amount than the assumed excess of births over deaths." On the census day in 1851 the gross population of Ireland was returned at 6,552,385, and on the 1st of January last the number, according to Mr. Donnelly's computation, was reduced to 6,077,283. In the interval he calculates that 965,389 children have been born, and 665,045 persons of all ages have died in Ireland. The total excess of births was, therefore, 300,344; but against this increase must be put the departure of 775,446 emigrants direct from the Irish ports, to say nothing of the number—probably a large one—who sailed first for England, and thence departed on their more distant voyage.

The Very Rev. Father Molony, late Catholic Chaplain in the Crimea, has arrived in Ennis on a visit to his brother, Mr. Richard Molony, Mill street. The Rev. gentleman wears his Crimean medal, and appears in the very best health and spirits. He received a hearty welcome from his townsmen on his arrival.

Alderman Bianconi, J.P., Longfield, has sent another munificent gift of books to the library of the Mechanics' Institute, through its secretary, Thomas Dorney, Esq., and one of the candidates for the borough, Mr. Murray, has forwarded a donation of £25, in valuable works, through the Committee of the Institute.

The St. Mary's Protestant Church, Clonmel, with the exception of the tower, is to be taken down and rebuilt, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, at an expense of £3,000. The Directors of the National Bank have sanctioned the erection of a new bank in Dublin street, on a style similar to the one in George street, Limerick.

The Marquis of Waterford, Lorenzo Hickey Jephson, Esq., Lieut. Henry Jameson, B.M., Waterford, formed a shooting party lately, at Hollwood, county of Wicklow, the seat of Lord John Beresford. They shot, upon one excursion, no fewer than 80 brace of grouse.

We learn from the Munster News that a suit has been instituted by Mr. James Coffee, of the Lake Hotel, Killarney, against Mr. Finn of the Victoria, to prohibit the latter from including the word Lake, in the designation of his establishment.

J. H. Talbot, Esq., D.L., Ballytrent, has given, as the contribution of his son and daughter, a splendid window for one of the new Catholic churches in Wexford.

The question of closing the Cemetery of St Mary's, Clonmel, alleged to be overcrowded, has been brought before the next meeting of the corporation of that town, with what result we have not yet learned.

The lands of Lissenure, in the parish of Templetuohy, being the estate of the Clonmel Endowed School, have been visited by James William Muirland, Esq., appointed for the purpose by the Lord Lieutenant.

An Ordination has been held in the Tuam Cathedral. His Grace the Archbishop conferred the order of priesthood on the Rev. Thomas M'Walter.

Augustus F. Boyse, Esq., of Bannow, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Wexford, on the recommendation of Lord Carew, Lieutenant of the county.

The profession of two young ladies—Miss Madden, of Westport, and Miss Elwood, of Gort—has taken place in the Convent of Mercy, Castlebar. The Archbishop of Tuam officiated, assisted by the local clergy.

The appointment to the office of election auditor for the borough of Clonmel, has been conferred on Mr. Joseph Richard Kenny, son of Joseph Kenny, Esq., Mayor of Clonmel.

The poor schools under the direction of the Very Rev. Dr. Cussen, V.G., have been opened in Bruff, and were attended by a large assemblage of the children of the town and suburbs.

It was reported in Limerick that the late order for the abolition of the military districts in Kilkenny, Limerick, and Belfast, has been countermanded for the present.

Among the little news furnished by the Tipperary papers, we learn that Mr. Wright, of Foulksrath Castle, and Mr. McCreery, of Kilkenny, shot a white grouse in Clonbo bog.

It is supposed in ecclesiastical circles that the present Catholic diocese of Galway will be added to those of Kilmacduagh and Kilfenora, and ruled over by the present bishop, the Right Rev. Dr. Fallon.

Mr. George O'Connel, of Limerick, has been transferred from the 3rd West India Regiment into the line. He has exchanged with Mr. W. R. Gun, Ensign, 36th regiment.

It is probable that the Duke of Malakoff will be present at the national banquet to the medal-men, in Dublin. The Globe suggests the propriety of inviting General M'Mahon, the son of the Irish rebel, who led the veterans of France over the ramparts of the frowning defence which kept two great armies at bay for many months. The Dublin Evening Post suggests that there are other Irishmen in the French service, who might also be invited. Among many others, is General Corbet, who, with his brother, won distinction and rank under Napoleon. His gallant brother, now no longer living, went through the Russian campaign as an aide-de-camp of Marshal Marmont, and was commandant of Normandy, in Louis Phillipe's time, where he played the host to his friend the poet Moore, and to every other Irishman who may have chanced to come in his way.

Wm. Henry Dease, late of Rath, in the Queen's county, Esq., who died recently in London, bequeathed, principally to Catholic charities in Ireland and about London, in three per cent stock, £10,000, and in cash, the following legacies :—To Right Rev. Bishop Grant, £750, to be applied by him towards maintenance and support of Roman Catholic Mission at Woolhampton, Berks; to the poor of Monastereven, £40; to the poor of Ballybrittan, £30; to the poor of Portarlington, £10; to the said Right Rev. Bishop Grant, to be applied by him in and towards maintenance and support of Roman Catholic Mission at Newbury, Berks.

Eliza Rochford, a young woman about twenty-six years of age, threw herself into the river at Lower Ormond-quay, Dublin, a fortnight since. A man named Thomas Byrne, and another named Peter Flanagan, jumped into the river, and saved the life of the woman, though she was during the space of nearly a quarter of an hour struggling in the water, her clothes having helped to keep her afloat. Byrne, 30 Liffey-street, who was instrumental in saving this woman's life, is the person who saved Mr. Cabill from drowning in the river near Bachelor's-walk, the week before.

Mr. Herbert Webb Gillman, son of Herbert Gillman, Esq., of Clonteadmore, in the county of Cork, has sailed from Southampton, to enter on his duties at Ceylon. This gentleman has concluded a distinguished career in Trinity College, Dublin, by obtaining, as one of the two candidates selected from the University, the highest of the crown writerships in Ceylon, lately opened to competition. Mr. Gillman was the first from his college who obtained by examination a civil appointment in the East, and he is also first who procured a writership under her Majesty in Ceylon, by the test of competition.

At the examination for commissions in her Majesty's army, Captain Francis O'Brien, Lietrim Rifles, Jamestown Lodge, Drumsna, and George Studdert, Esq. Ennis, passed on from the University Civil and Military Institution, 26 Kildare-street, Dublin, having been prepared by William Stapleton, Esq. T. C. D., translator of 'Thiers' History of the Consulate and Empire of Napoleon.' Mr. Stapleton has recently published a literal translation of Vertot's Revolutions de Suede, for the use of pupils going up in French.

The South Advertiser has the highest authority for stating that the original programme of the ceremony of the presentation of colors to the 18th Royal Irish, which would have compelled them to assemble in a Protestant place of worship, was not presented to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant until after its publication in the newspapers. When he read it, he declared it to be a breach of civil and religious liberty, and countermanded it at once.

The Univers, in a recent number, acknowledges the receipt of £130 from the Irish Bishops, as their own subscriptions for the sufferers by the inundations in France, and £133 from the Bishop of Kilmore, as the subscription of his diocese, for the same purpose. The Univers of the 3d instant, acknowledges a further subscription of £64 8s. 6d., from the Most Rev. Dr. Cullen, for the inundated, and £8 10s. from the Most Rev. Dr. Dixon, as a subscription from the parish of Donoughmore, in his Grace's diocese.

Patrick O'Kelly, the Irish Bard, was one of the most impudent men alive. It is reported that when King George IV. visited Dublin, in 1821, he was informed that O'Kelly was a remarkable character, and then in Dublin, on which his Majesty allowed the poet to be presented to him, O'Kelly, who was lame, was presented, and the King, anxious to put him at ease, remarked, 'I regret to see that you are lame.' 'Yes, your Majesty,' said O'Kelly, 'we are all lame; the three of us.' 'What?' asked the King, 'three lame persons in one family! A sad calamity indeed!' 'Yes,' replied O'Kelly, in the great family of the poets! O'Kelly, Scott, and Byron, are all lame.'

The labors of the Jesuit Fathers in Athlone, continue to be attended by the population of town and country. Not only from Athlone and its vicinity, but from distant parts of the country, have the people come to participate in the devotional exercises. The Athlone Sentinel says that many of those heretofore believing in Protestantism, have by the teaching of the Jesuit fathers, become convinced of their errors, and entered the bosom of the Catholic church.

One of the first good effects of the Limited Liabilities Question urged in Parliament by the late Robert Potter, M. P. for Limerick, is a West of Ireland Fisheries Company, established in London, under Government auspices. The chairman is Sir John Burgoyne. It has been often urged that a better class of boats, supplied at Kilkee and off the coast of the Shannon and Galway, would be a great boon to the fishermen of the West; a fleet of such boats is now building, and operations were to have commenced early in October.

A correspondent of the Dublin Freeman, intimates that Mr. O'Flaherty, M. P. for the town of Galway, is about to vacate his seat, owing to his appointment to a government office, and that Lord Dunlo, on the Conservative interest, and Lord Dunkellin, on the Whig, will be candidates for the vacant seat.

A few weeks ago, a large wild duck by some means got into the lantern of the Cork Harbor Light House, Roche's Tower, and created a good deal of confusion by breaking the lamp glasses and extinguishing the lights. After the fowl was partially roasted, the keepers succeeded in capturing him.

Mother Mary Alphonsus, Superioress of the convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Tuam, has recently died. She was Superioress when the convent was established, eleven years ago. Her funeral was attended by a great number of clergymen and a large concourse of the inhabitants of the town and vicinity.

Professor Partington lectures this month, in October, Mr. G. Barker in November, and Mr. Parsons in January, before the Clonmel Mechanics' Institute. The committee are in treaty with Mr. D. C. Bell for a series of lectures in December. The Clonmel Mechanics' Institute is the most useful establishment of the kind in Ireland.

The following are the legacies of the Rev. Denis Murphy, C. C., Meath-street chapel, Dublin. To the Reverend Doctor Laphen, Parish Priest of Meath-street Chapel, or his successor, to be funded permanently in government stock, and the interest applied for the purpose of saying masses for the soul of deceased, £300; to the said Reverend Doctor Laphen, for the completion of the new church, building in the parish, £300; to ditto, for a stained window, £100; to ditto, for the poor of the parish, £200; to ditto, for the establishment of an infant school, £100; to the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, £50; to St. Vincent's Hospital, £50; to the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, £50; to the College of All Hallows, £50; to the Deaf and Dumb Institution, £50; to the Sisters of Mercy, £50.

The family of Captain Graves, who was recently assassinated by a boatman at Malta, has, for a long period, been resident in the North of Ireland, where the gallant Captain was personally known. Twenty-five years ago, when engaged in the survey of Lough Neagh, by orders of the Admiralty, he was frequently in Belfast, and took a warm interest in the efforts then made for the erection of the Museum. It was his invitation, and in his vessel, the Beacon, that the late William Thompson, Esq., visited the Ægean, in 1841, accompanied by their mutual friend, Edward Forbes, the late eminent Professor of the University of Edinburgh.

At the military barracks, Maryborough, Captain Rogers, Staff-Officer of Kilkenny district, invested James Grennan, late sergeant in the 88th regiment, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, awarded him by the Emperor of the French. Mr. Grennan was wounded in the arm, and received a gun-shot wound in the neck, which passed out under his left shoulder blade and unfitted him for further action. He was discharged on a pension of 1s. 6d. per day, and received the Crimean medal with three clasps.

From the Down Recorder we learn, it is confidently stated that a veteran, late of her Majesty's 82d Highlanders, who has seen nearly eighty summers, is about to lead to the hymenial altar a young and accomplished female, still in her teens, who resides not a hundred miles from Killyleagh.

The great Tenby races for 1856 took place on the 16th and 18th September. The shortest route from the South of Ireland to Tenby being by the way of Waterford and Milford, the owners of the steamer Malakoff carried passengers over and back at satisfactory rates.

A baker named Kenny, of Blarney-lane, Cork, while in a state of intoxication, leaped into the river at Northgate-bridge, in order to avoid the police. They, however, did not deem it their duty to pursue the unfortunate man into the river, and at least two hours elapsed before his body was found.

At the half yearly meeting of the shareholders in the Portadown and Dungannon railway, the report of the directors stated that the entire of the land was in the possession of the contractors, for which the sum of £6,322 had been paid. The engineer's report stated that the progress of the works had been satisfactory. Nearly all the rails for the permanent way, had been delivered. The Blackwater Bridge—the only work of sufficient magnitude to be likely to retard the opening of the line, would at once be proceeded with.

The dedication of the Augustinian convent of New Ross, took place on the 31st of August. The ceremonies of dedication were performed by the Right Rev. Dr. O'Conner, Bishop of Saldes. The church is a beautiful one. On the day in question, it was splendidly decorated.

The Tuam races came off on the Gurranes course. The crowds of peasantry were immense, and there was a large collection of the gentry. The weather was most favorable; but owing to the shortness of the notice given of the races, the sport was not so good as anticipated.

The rev. minister of a primitive Methodist Chapel in Runcorn, having by his eloquence failed to keep the whole of his congregation awake, walked deliberately down from his pulpit, and by tapping on the shoulder awoke a sleeping sinner, and then returned to his pulpit to descant upon the necessity of greater watchfulness.

A Clonmel Orange paper having stated that Mr. P. J. Mckenna, one of the friends of Mr. P. J. Murray, had used language at a meeting in Clonmel disrespectful to Mrs. Bagwell, Mr. McKenna denies the charge, and says the only allusion to that lady was that she had distributed proselytising tracts among the children of the National School at Marlfield, in consequence of which the school was closed.

The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of the Dublin and Mullingar Railway was held lately at the Broadstone Terminus, John Ennis, chairman of the company presiding. The report of the directors, which was of a favorable character, was unanimously adopted, and a resolution, approving of a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, free of income tax, was passed.

On the anniversary of the taking of the Malakoff by the French forces, the artillery stationed in the garrison of Limerick went out and fired for nearly an hour at the King's Island.

Miss Catherine Hayes has arrived in Paris to enjoy some repose after her long journeyings. The father of Miss Hayes has been appointed leader of the choir at Swansea church.

There has been high mass and office at St. John's chapel, Limerick, for the repose of the soul of the Rev. Patrick Reeves, late P. P., of Drumcolloher.

Mr. Gallwey, a member of the Catholic University of Ireland was among the successful candidates at the late competive examination for admission into the College of Military Engineering at Woolwich.

Dr. Jones's election as medical officer of the Ardee workhouse, county Louth, has been approved by the commissioners.

Thirty thousand pounds have been subscribed towards the railway from Fermoy to Cork harbor and city.

The celebrated oyster beds of Burren and Poulbody are beginning to yield their rich treasures.

On the question of a short passage between Ireland and England, Dr. M'Cormac, suggests the plan of a sub-marine railway between the two countries.

Mr. Quain has been promoted to the Accountantship of the Provincial Bank at Limerick.

Viscount Dungannon has been appointed a magistrate for the Queen's county.

Benjamin Samuel Adams, Esq., of Sliman House, county Cavan, has been appointed a magistrate of that county.

The Lough Derg Regatta has taken place. There was great sport and a large attendance.

The Earl of Kingston, accompanied by his solicitor, Mr J. M. Cantwell, of Dublin, and Mr. Power, an English capitalist, recently proceeded to visit his castle and demesne, about a quarter of a mile from Mitchelstown. The Cork Examiner learns that the object of his lordship's visit was to collect information relative to the management of his estates during the long period of his absence, with a view of sustaining the suit at present pending in Chancery. The present trustee and mortgagee both of castle and estate is Mr. Thomas Joseph Eyre, of Bath. Mr. James Sadleir, as manager of the Tipperary Bank, originally held a mortgage on the castle and demesne, but on a recent application made by Lord Kingston before the Master of the Rolls, to have further security given for the receiver, Mr. Nicholas Sadleir, the official manager of the bank, consented to have Mr. Eyre, the then mortgagee of the estate alone, declared the mortgagee in possession of all. Mr. Eyre's claims on foot of his mortgage, and for advances are £100,000, which amount is disputed by Lord Kingston, who claims several sets-off, which, if admitted, will reduce it very considerably. It is understood that in November a motion is to be made in Chancery, on Lord Kingston's behalf, to have all the accounts of the estate taken up by the Master ; and that when his decision is known, and the entire amount of the charges fully made out, Lord Kingston will negociate to have them all discharged. The present annual rent of the Mitchelstown estate is about £18,000.

One of the reporters of the Dublin Freeman had lately the pleasure of witnessing, at the Albert Model Farm, Glasnevin, a trial of Mr. Hanson's patent potato digger. A large number of gentry, leading agriculturists, and scientific gentlemen, with a goodly sprinkling of ladies assembled on the potato field. The machine is of simple construction, strong and light. It is composed of a broad digger or "sock," which passes under and lifts the entire breadth of drill, potatoes, clay, and weeds. A series of prongs or iron blades revolve at right angles to the drill, breaking the clay, and, casting all against a sieve or screen, throws the potatoes on the surface without injuring one-tenth of what are usually cut with the spade or trenching fork. The ground is left smooth, fine, and in admirable order for receiving the seeds of the ensuing cereal crop ; the weeds are thrown on the surface, and are easily removed. The experiment was made on a drill 42 statute perches long, 26 of which make a statute acre. Two minutes forty seconds and two minutes six seconds were the periods taken to turn out two drills, including the time taken to turn at the ends—about two hours for raising one statute acre. This will require about ten to sixteen hands to pick up the potatoes, so that two horses with attendance would raise about five statute acres, equal to nearly three Irish acres, in the day.

The editor of Saunders' News Letter has been favored by Messrs. Pim and Blakely, of Dublin, with descriptive drawings of the new invention just patented, for the prevention of accidents on railways. By adopting this invention the engine driver, and all parties in charge of the train, will have, by means of a very simple apparatus on the line and a self-acting motion applied to the whistle of the engine, notice given to them of any train being on the same line within 1,000 yards. The greatest recommendation of this contrivance is its simplicity, and the certainty it affords of railway trains being enabled to run at the usual speed at night or in foggy weather. It is likely to add materially to the dividends of the shareholders, by preventing those heavy draughts upon the surplus revenue which result upon every serious collision.

On the recommendation of James Patterson, Esq., Inspector of National Schools, a premium of £3 has been awarded to Mr. H. F. Percy, teacher of the Whitehouse National schools, for neatness, good order, and general management, during the year 1855. These schools, which are attended by upwards of 300 pupils daily, are exercising a beneficial influence upon the important district in which they are situated, and reflect great credit on the patron, James Grimshaw, Esq., Whitehouse, and on Miss Grimshaw, to whose indefatigable exertions much of their success is to be attributed. Mr. Percy, on the recommendation of P. J. Keenan, Esq., head inspector, has also received from the Commissioners of Education, a letter, commendatory of the manner in which his evening school is conducted.

At the Limerick Petty Sessions Mr. Bourchier appeared on the part of the Messrs. Russell, to prosecute several girls who had left the employment of his clients. The Messrs. Russell give employment to upwards of five hundred young women, some of whom latterly took it into their heads to leave their employment in violation of their contracts. The defendants were directed by the Bench to go back to their employment, otherwise they would be sent to jail for 28 days. Mr. Bourchier said it was far easier for Sir Colin Campbell to handle his brigade of five thousand men on the heights of Alma, than for the Messrs. Russell to manage those five hundred women.

In the Customs Department Mr. D. Colquhoun has been promoted from collector ot Limerick to be collector at Portsmouth. Mr. J. Ross has been promoted from collector at Dover to be collector at Limerick. Mr. W. H. Holmes has been promoted from collector at Galway to be collector at Penzance. Mr. A. Thompson has been promoted from controller at Whitehaven to be collector at Galway. Mr. W. Tickner has been promoted from controller at Newry to be controller at Whitehaven. Mr. J. Hughes has been promoted from collector at Bridgewater to be controller at Newry. Mr. T. Jackson has been promoted from controller at Coleraine to be controller at Bridgewater. Mr. G. W. Claxton has been promoted from controller at Alloa to be controller at Coleraine.

The officers of the County Wexford Militia presented a gold snuff box to Sergeant Lee, at the archery meeting at Ballinkeele. Major Cliffe, in making the presentation, delivered an address. Lord Loftus corroborated the sentiments of Major Cliffe. Sergeant Lee was overpowered.

The Sisters of Mercy acknowledge the receipt of £20 from the Rev. William Murphy and the Rev. John Sinnott, as executors of the late Mrs. Eliza Hore, to be given to the deserving sick poor of Wexford.

The agent of Capt. Pirrie has demanded from the Belfast Town Council the sum of £830, which that gentleman lent them. They are not able to pay it back, and Captain Pirrie threatens immediate law proceedings. Meantime, the Ulsterman hears of uneasy Town Councillors making secret assignment of their properties.

Richard Deane Freeman, Esq., of the Clonmel branch of the Provincial Bank of Ireland, has been promoted to an accountantship at Tralee ; William Lane, Esq., succeeds on promotion, Mr. Freeman, as first clerk in this branch, with which he has been connected for the past few years. John S. Mason, Esq., replaces Mr. Lane.

One of the effects of the debate on Mr. Mial's motion for the disendowment of all sects in Ireland, has been the re-commencement of agitation in Ireland against the existence of the Church Establishment. A meeting has been held at Clonakilty, in the county of Cork, to petition Parliament for the abolition of the temporalities of the Irish church. More than 6,000 persons were present. The chairman was a Protestant, and the entire proceedings were characterised by agreement in the principle that the new movement should be directed, not against the Protestant Church as such, but against all State patronage of religion.

The Cork Reporter regrets to commmunicate the death of Dr. Chute, of Tralee. The doctor was in attendance on the lady of his relative, Richard Chute, Esq., Chute Hall, and left about 4 o'clock this morning, riding a young pony. Some time after, one of the workmen found the pony straying in the avenue, and the deceased lying on his face, with a wound in the head, in a stream which runs through the avenue.

A party of the 17th Lancers, celebrated for its participation in the Light Cavalry Charge at Balaklava, have arrived in Clonmel, under command of Cornet Seymour. The trumpeter, Gleeson, attached to the party, wears the Cross of the French Legion of Honor, and previous to his enlistment ten years ago, was employed at Caher Abbey Mills. The head quarters of the 17th Lancers have left Caher for Dublin, where the regiment occupy Portobello Barracks.

The number of immigrants to the United States since 1819, has amounted to a total of 4,212,624, of whom 2,343,445 were born in the United Kingdom. The year of the greatest immigrations was 1854, the number then having been increased to 427,833 by the influx of 206,055 Germans. Of the entire immigration since 1819, 1,747,930 out of the 2,343,445 British subjects are believed to have been Irish.

The London and West of Ireland Fishing Company have just published a map of Ireland, giving their principal curing stations, outlying stations, markets, and proposed routes. Waterford has been selected as one of their chief outlying stations. The markets of Gloucester and Birmingham will be supplied by the new route from Waterford to Milford, and thence by the South Wales Railway.

A meeting has been held in the Commercial Buildings, to address J. F. M'Mullen, Esq., Manager of the Cork Branch of the National Bank, on the occasion of his departure from that city, to undertake the office of Inspector of the Union Band of Australia. A subscription list was opened, and in a few minutes the sum of £150 was subscribed. It is proposed to present Mr. M'Mullen with a very beautiful testimonial of the respect in which he is held by the citizens of Cork.

The Ulsterman learns from a correspondent, that on the coroner's jury, which brought in a verdict of manslaughter against the Orangemen who murdered the young Catholic near Lurgan, was one man, at the hands of whose father, several years ago, the grandfather of the deceased Catholic met his death in a similar manner.

The Ennis Library Commissioners have accepted from J. Petty, Esq., C. E., a plan for the public library, and the local papers urge the completion of the contract for the execution of the building.

The Committee of the Clonmel Mechanics' Institute, acknowledge the receipt of sixty-seven volumes of valuable Miscellaneous Works, being a donation to their library, from Patrick Joseph Murray, Esq., now a candidate for the representation of that Borough.

The ship Sardinia has arrived off Kinsale from Australia. She there landed the mails which filled 36 sacks. These were conveyed to Cork, and forwarded by train to Dublin. The Sardinia has on board 55,000 ounces of gold on freight, and carries 130 passengers.

The Right Rev. Dr. Delany, accompanied by his Vicar-General, the Very Rev. D. Murphy, P.P., V.G., and several of the Clergy, have visited Spike Island Prison, for the purpose of administering Confirmation to a large number of the convicts.

Among the finest specimens of Cork skill which has ever been produced in the cabinet-making line, is a cheffonier, made by Messrs. Cox & Higgins, of Patrick-street. It is executed in the Louis Quatorze style. The entire is brilliantly polished, and the sides of the compartments are composed of plate glass mirrors.

The Lord Lieutenant has reduced, from fifteen to four years' penal servitude, the sentence of transportation, passed on Robert Moffat, of Killinchy, at the last Down assizes, for the manslaughter of his son, William Moffat. The unhappy man is in his 73d year.

Professor Anderson, the wizard of the North, has re-appeared after an absence of seven years, before a Dublin audience in the Round Room of the Rotunda, where he has set up a gorgeous temple. The proceeds of the first night's entertainment were given by Professor Anderson to the funds of the Lying-in-Hospital.

The Committee of the Mullingar Young Men's Catholic Society return thanks to Pollard Urquhart, Esq., M.P., for £2 received through his agent, T. M. Riggs, Esq., being his contribution towards their society.

Among the 110 Acts of Parliament abolished at one fell swoop, by an act of last session, was one passed in the reign of Henry VI., entitled What Sort of Irishmen may come to Dwell in England. Another act was against persons calling themselves Egyptians.

The new bridge of Bray has been opened for traffic by Mrs. Mason, of the Anchor Tavern, Bray, and Mr. Butler, of Loughlinstown. Being the first to cross the water, they were heartily cheered by all the men on the work, whom they liberally entertained in the evening.

Sir James Emerson Tennent has delivered a lecture in the Corn Exchange, Belfast, upon "The Habits of Wild Elephants and mode of Capturing them in Ceylon." The lecture was delivered in connxion with the Belfast Natural History and Philosophical Society.

Henry H. Briscoe, Esq., of Cloncunny, county Kilkenny, has been appointed by the Board of Supervision in Scotland, as Chief Superintendent to reorganize the Scotch Poor Law.

The Rev. Mr. Langley, Protestant curate of Taney, Dundrum, in the Archdiocese of Dublin, will succeed the late Rev. H. E. Prior, as Rector of St. Mary's, Clonmel.

The ship Syro-Phenician, Captain Nappye, has arrived in the port of Limerick, heavily laden with wheat from Berdianski. The value of her cargo, cost, freight, and insurance, is estimated at about £10,050. The Wilhelm, from Ibraila, also arrived with wheat for Mr. Richard Wilson.

SPEECH OF COLONEL DOHENY.

The subject you have invited me to discuss, is a subject of the greatest moment, and involves considerations of almost infinite importance. To sound its depths, to investigate its multiplex relations, to sift out the seeds of truth, enveloped by the rubbish of angry conflict, would require time, diligence and careful thought. But, like every other citizen, I am bound to form an opinion, and the grounds of that opinion I am always prepared to state. Therefore I am here.

In the outset, let me dispose of an objection personal to myself. It will be said, it has been already said many a time, that your fellow-citizens of the Celtic family are animated with an inveterate dislike of the Negro. This dislike is stigmatized as intolerance, and, in connection with it, the Irish are taunted with their own servitude in the land of their fathers. The caricature is familiar to you in which they are represented as boasting that they "war the natherel inimy of the Naygurs." Let the jeer pass; I meet the fact as a fact, and pronounce it a falsehood. The Irish are not the enemies of the Negro ; but many who pretend to be his friends are the enemies of the Irish. In London, Exeter Hall is sacred to cant—to the twin cants af Anti-Catholicism and "Anti-Slavery." In New-York, the Tabernacle is free to the same cants. The libellers who graduate at the former practice at the latter. Show me an instance at the one, or many instances at the other, where the meeting most teems with sympathy for the Negro, that it does not teem with hatred of the Irish. Do not the same cheers, the same intense vehemence, greet Garrison and Gavazzi, Leahy and Parker, Achilli and Henry Ward Beecher? Yes, sir, the same familiar tones welcome, the the same nasal invocation blesses the apostate priest, the rifle preacher, and the unbelieving rhapsodist. Some of these holy men, whose prayers ascend with everything "ism"-atical, overabound with benevolence. Their sympathy would even embrace the Irish, to whom they introduce the word of God in wholesome affiliation with "hot corn" and bon-bons, but only on the condition that they would betray the faith and traditions of their fathers. This love we scorn even more than we scorn their open hate. And do not wonder if we scorn everything coming from the same corrupting source—the same tainted breath.

I would be unjust if I did not admit that there are many men in the ranks of our opponents not ranging in this category. I do admit it fully, frankly, cheerfully. But they present themselves in evil company, under a discolored banner, and with a watchword which is a perversion of speech.

There is another objection as to myself They say, you are a pseudo-patriot ; you would resist oppression in your native land, and in your adopted one you are the instrument of the slave-power—you are Pro-slavery! I may answer, the ablest and the best of the fathers of the revolution resisted oppression while holding slaves, and after succeeding they owned slaves still. Why name names? Every one knows them. But I reject the answer. I repudiate the imputation. I am the instrument of no power. I am not in any sense "pro-slavery." I pronounce the phrase as applied to me a libel ; as used in this discussion it is a perversion or a pretense.

Let no one suppose that I stand here the enemy of the slave. Let no one suppose that I stand here the advocate of slavery. Let no one suppose that I seek to justify an outrage or a wrong by a Southern any more than a Northern. I claim that we are the slave's friends—his true friends. I claim that our opponents are the slave's enemies—his real enemies. Alas! for him he is the chattel proper of more than one owner—of his master in the first place, who at the same time is his guardian and often his nurse, and of the abolitionist to whom he belongs as a shibboleth and a hobby whereon to ride into power, and place, and wealth, while he, perhaps, despises him in his heart, and would not sacrifice a dime to save him from perdition. I may assume this ground precisely as our opponents assume its converse, and with infinitely more truth ; but I prefer to treat it as the solution rather than the basis of the argument, and this brings me to the argument itself.

But in order to argue we must first know distinctly what our opponents mean. Do they stand on "free soil" doctrine, or do they aspire to absolute "abolition" under cover of "free soil?" They have eschewed the designation of "Freesoilers" and that of "Abolitionists" for the more convenient and doubtful one of "Republicans." This latter has many phases; it were well if we could understand what phase we have in front of us.

Is it simply "free soil," a fundamental principle of which is, absolute and perpetual non-interference with the institution of slavery, within the states wherein it exists ?

All my lights on this question are from them and their organs. It has so chanced that, in this city, I have scarcely ever read a paper but the Tribune. I have therein read nearly daily professions of freesoilism and proofs of abolitionism. In one number, you will find an emphatic disclaimer of any wish to interfere with slavery, controlled by the internal laws of any state, and in another, or, perhaps the same number, the foulest abuse of the South and its institutions, shafts of satire barbed with gall flung at everything in which the South takes pride, sneers at her very manhood, a caricature of a Negro auction, or of a fugitive Negro pursued by blood hounds. The pictures of the South thus drawn are so revolting, so hideous, that it is impossible to conceive how the man who paints them, and from the fountains of his own gall supplies their foulest tints, could take the same South, so grim with guilt, by the hand and say, "esto perpetua." Yet this is just what we read. It is this southern slavery, so utterly odious, if we are to believe the protestations of the same writer, that he is to guarantee for ever.

But the Tribune is not alone. There are many other journals of the same type if not of equal ability that use the same language in depreciation of the South. The northern press, too, issues innumerable books teeming with insults to the South and libels on her people. The writers of these books take pride and profit in holding up their country and countrymen to the scorn of the civilized world. Of the merits or demerits of the books I do not speak. Burns says—

> "Some books are lies frae end to end,
> And some great lies were never penn'd ;
> E'en ministers they hae been kenned
> In holy rapture
> A rousing whad at times to vend
> An nail't wi' scripture."

Without stopping to inquire whether the abolition books are "lies frae end to end," it is apparent they are bitterly, wilfully and wantonly insulting. They spare nothing—age, sex, home, family. They breathe hatred. Throughout them all there is not one aspiration for "free soil." Their authors are hailed in England as "anti-slavery," in fact, as "abolition" propagandists. The books, themselves, are redeemed from oblivion by a meritricious sentiment in society there, known as "anti-slavery." Not a glimmer of all this glare is attracted by the doubtful issue of "free soil ;" it is concentrated with burning intensity on slavery as it exists in the South, the very slavery which the Tribune protests shall be intact, the very slavery which the Freesoilers are pledged never never to disturb. Is it then that your publicists are mendicants of a foreign popularity under a false pretence—or is it that your politicians are mendicants of estic power under a fraudulent one—or is it yet that they distrust and disbelieve one another as most people outside their ranks distrust and disbelieve both?

I wish we could meet on ground less doubtful. I wish our opponents would present a less equivocal issue if they meant abolition and have courage and honesty to say so; if among their classics they adopt the sublime sentiment—"Fiat Justitia ruat cælum;" they will present a question before which, I for one, would stand appalled. Do proclaim the "higher law," not as before, with precipitate intemperance, instantly sounding a precipitate retreat, but sincerely and resolutely; proclaim a "higher law" overruling the constitution, and annulling all legislation that derogates from the great charter of God to man, and whatever be the consequence, every generous mind will recognize the grandeur even though it be the guilty grandeur of your aim. And should ruin follow in your track, you would have at your side a well-recognized principle, universal, immutable and indestructible.

Let me, for a moment, consider the issue in this light. At the one side our republic secures to twenty millions of its citizens abundant and ample guarantees of liberty, abundant assurances of success in private enterprise, abundant scope for effort, the widest sphere for honorable ambition, the highest rewards for the achievements of genius. The basis of her empire are on both oceans—the key of the arch that spans between high in heaven. Her commerce girdles the world; the white wings of her activity take their undisputed way wherever there is water enough to float a bottom, or breeze enough to swell a sail. Renowned in arms, foremost in industry, prosperous and progressive in peace; the Pallas of nations, springing fully armed from the brain of revolution. Nor yet is this all. To an American, the republic is the object of a just pride and love. To the patriot, the world over, she is the deity of hope. Where the iron hath been thrust and its rust has become racy of the prostrate heart, her quickening spirit enters and tinges the soddened mass with celestial fire. To her as to a lone star, the patriot turns from every point of the earth whether he plots in the dark, dares in the field, or dies on the block. To you, Americans, she belongs materially, and now, to all men she belongs spiritually and immortally. Touch her sacred structure with a rude hand, and the thrill is felt at the uttermost fibre of struggling humanity. In its noblest sense and highest meaning, the Constitution of the United States belongs to mankind; the genius of the Declaration of Independence is omnipresent, irrepressible and omnipotent.

Yet, Sir, if the "Republicans" said, "We will not allow a single slave-cloud to dim the lustre of our mighty country; between the circling oceans we will not allow a single stain of slave pollution to set its mark"—if, Sir, they said this, and acted up to their words, I, for one, would hesitate in the presence of a question so sacred; and if most urgent considerations of expediency and of strict justice to our sister States compelled me to decide against them, I would honor from my heart the motives that inspired such lofty daring. Then one could comprehend the impassioned appeals to Sydney, to Russell, to Washington, to Miltеades, to Marathon and Bunker Hill, in the pompous rhetoric of Mr. Sumner of the Bay State. Then would the allusions have a moral and a meaning, efficacy and power, and an electricity of inspiration, compelling the reluctant forces of reason into enthusiastic sympathy. Then would the spirits of the mighty dead be suffused with a new beatitude when invoked by suffering weakness against guilty strength. But considering the connection in which Mr. Sumner disturbs their rest—considering the petty object that inspires his efforts and bounds his aim—one cannot understand his invocations, except as the declamations of a schoolboy, or the idle rant of delusion. One instance of a similar kind I recollect. It is to be found in the Fasti of the Old Bailey, and, I regret to add, the performer was a tipsy sweep. He had stolen a "quartern loaf," and he pleaded "Magna Charta." I don't know how the plea affected the spirits of the Barons of Runnymede, but I think they could be scarcely less startled than that of Miltiades, when invoked to consecrate the felony of a Massachusetts squatter with a Beecher's rifle, branded "The Word of God."

But perhaps it may be said the real object of the "Republicans" is universal emancipation. It may be said, and not without plausibility, that they aspire to cripple the energy of the South—to check her efforts for expansion—to blacken and defame her character, her honor, her traditions and her institutions—until, having worn out her energies and lied away her life, she might become an easy prey. If this be so, is not the Free Soil doctrine a pitiful pretence—a pretence at once false, fraudulent and cowardly?

But let us take them at their word; let us be charitable even to them. I accept the issue as they propose it, and narrowed to the question presented in the case of Kansas. What is the "crime," the "curse," the "disgrace," at which they pretend to revolt? Is it not that one man owns another, that he buys, and sells, and lashes him as he would a beast of burden? Is not this the "inexpiable sin?" Well, is the sin, the crime, the disgrace, the deeper or more damnable because it exists in Maryland rather than in Alabama, or in South Carolina rather than in Arkansas? Not in the least. The "crime" is the same wherever it exists—in Florida or Kansas, by the equator or at the pole. If a slave pass from Missouri into Kansas, he will be no more a slave than before. If he remain at Missouri, he will be no less a slave by remaining. His condition will in no way be altered by the change. No man contends for a proposition so absurd as that it will. If slavery were legalized in Kansas, no man will contend that there will be one slave more born. If it be excluded, no man will contend that there will be born one slave the less. The assumption to the contrary rests upon considerations and ideas so grossly abhorrent that I dare not approach their discussion. Then it is not the condition of the slave, for it will be no better and no worse in either event; then it is not the number of slaves, for they will be no more and no less, that excites this pious horror and puritanical commotion, strife, and bloodshed on the borders of Kansas. The facts are unanswerable. And so, is not the term "Anti-slavery," the watchword of the party, a swindle and a cheat? And is not the term "Pro-slavery," with which they brand us, a wilful libel?

But they say it will extend the slave power—it will give that power more members in the house. I answer, no. The slave power can only be extended by the increase of the numbers of slave-owners. If by emigating to Kansas they will be there entitled to new members, they will lose the same numbers where they leave. Do not history, experience, and, above all, the frequent boasts of the Free Soilers themselves show, that the population of the North increases in a ratio far higher than that of the South? At this moment has not the North a great preponderance in the House of Representatives? That preponderance day by day gains new weight. Trust me it is such preponderance that imparts its insolence to your present proceedings. You are no longer afraid of any domination by the South. In the excess of your own passions is the germ of domination visible. No, Gentlemen, adding Kansas and Nebraska to the South, would not give the slave-power a preponderance, and you are dull indeed or you know it.

I now proceed to discuss Mr. Sumner's speech more especially; but before entering on that subject I have a preliminary word to say.

It will be, I suppose, readily allowed, that this is a canting world, and, that of all its canting centuries, the present is the most canting. But sir, "liberty of speech," "liberty of the press," "impunity of debate," as used or abused in our time, are the crowning cants of all. "Liberty of the press," once had a hallowed meaning, and commanded sacred respect. The press to-day is more a commercial speculation than an exponent of principle or a vindicator of right. It publishes not the assertion of the truth, but what sells. It has no commission from God, or nation, or party, or man. Its office is self-assumed; and it owes responsibility to its subscribers only. Yet even now, when honestly and decently fulfilled, the mission of the press is a high and holy one. When it scourges the tyrant, chastises the criminal, shields the weak and checks the strong, and when it does it in a spirit of honorable justice and on established proofs, the "liberty of the press is the expression of a sentiment all but divine; then it is "the delegated voice of God," and it should be guaranteed by the suffrages of the true and the blood of the brave. But sir, the mission of Paul was the mission of Judas, and the execration of the latter sounding through all time, is ni exact proportion to the reverence for the other. The more sacred the trust a man betrays, the more damnable his treachery. If there be then an editorial Judas in his garret, his sanctuary is no more sacrosanct than a dunghill. When he searches in his own heart for the foulest motives that could inspire evil-doers, and imputes them to his neighbor, because he differs from him, he is not exercising the liberty of the press, but the licentiousness of a corrupted nature. He himself defiles the shrine for which he claims sanctity. The caitiff steals the incense from the altar where he ministers, and sells it for base coin.

"Liberty of speech!" Is it a higher right than the liberty to sneeze, the liberty to cough, the liberty to expectorate, albeit these latter are not exactly guaranteed by the Constitution? But although a man's right to expectorate is undoubted, has he a right to spit the expectoration in his neighbor's face? Has an editor or a legislator a right to come up to a man in the street, and say you are a "scoundrel" and a "liar," and a "villain" and a "ruffian;" "your motives for acting as you have done, were lust, gain, greed—you are a drunkard and a knave." Does he expect that his privilege will shield him? Can he justly complain if he get more than he give? I do not suppose there is a second opinion on this point. What difference then does it make if the same things be said in the solitude of a garret, or the solemnity of a debate? Not the least. No place, no privilege, no occasion justifies a crime, or redeems indecency from filth and ignominy. He who is guilty of it, blots out his privileges, however high or sacred, with his own tongue. He has made his own arena, and no matter whether in the senate-chamber, the public house, the public street, or the retired editorial sanctum, if he get the worst of it, he has no right to complain. If indeed there be any difference between assailing a man with a foul tongue to his face, and on equal terms with him, and assaulting him in the same manner behind his back, a thousand miles away, or shielded by some privilege, it is in favor of the former. The street rowdy is at least redeemed from the skulking cowardice of the literary assassin.

Do I therefore justify the assault on Mr. Sumner? By no means. I hate broils—I abhor the duello; but they who renounce the right of physical satisfaction, ought never insult. Good behavior, like charity, should begin at home.

Mr. Sumner tells the senate in that spirit of liberality in which lofty culture loves to indulge, the exact position of Kansas on the map. He describes its latitude, its longitude, its bearing. He has discovered that it lies midway between the ocean—a fact no doubt of commanding importance in reference to the issue. He excels in its exuberance, its face of beauty, its bosom of fecundity, its air, its waters, and warming with the inspiration of his theme, he essays this lofty flight—

"And now it has already drawn to its bosom a population of freemen larger than Athens crowded within her historic gates, when her sons, under Miltiades, won liberty for mankind on the field of Marathon—more than Sparta contained when she ruled Greece, and sent forth her devoted children, quickened by a mother's benediction, to return with their shields or on them—more than Rome gathered on her seven hills, when, under her kings, she commenced that sovereign sway, which afterwards embraced the whole earth—more than London held, when on the fields of Crecy and Agincourt, the English banner was carried victoriously over the chivalrous hosts of France."

The application of the references is not clear. Did the Senator aspire to stimulate the Kansas squatters to deeds of equal renown? Was his object the instruction of the senate. Or did he deign to awake its astonishment at his marvellous acquirements?

"And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew,
How one small head could carry all he knew."

But whatever his aim, the references are unfortunate as illustrations of the value of excluding slavery from Kansas. Athens, when she won Marathon, Sparta when she ruled Greece, Rome, under the sceptre of her kings, and, in a grander time, when from the corels of her seven hills she shook the pillars of the world, each and all had institutions of slavery. England, crowned with the glory of Agincourt, had every Saxon serf within her borders, bound to the soil like clods "adscripti glebs," and owning no greater respect and no higher freedom.

Mr. Sumner, after this flourishing invocation, exclaims—

"Against this territory so fortunate in position and population, a crime has been committed."

This proposition embraces the entire scope of Mr. Sumner's speech. I shall treat it under three heads.

First, what constitutes crime, and how far the charge of a crime is the exercise of the privileges of debate, or the freedom of speech?

Secondly, what this peculiar crime consists of.

And thirdly, whether it was committed against the interests of the slave or the interests of the Freesoilers in the soil of Kansas.

There can be no crime without a wilful criminal intent, resulting from a consciously guilty motive. This is the rule of law, of logic, of reason and of religion. A man may do wrong, inflict injury, sow seeds of evil, and yet be guilty of no crime. His judgment may err, his intellect may fail,—he is mortal, and law and mercy, and reason and God respect his frailty. But Mr. Sumner condescends no allowance for an erring judgment, for a warped intellect, for clouded reason, for even folly or fatuity—he has not the charity to suppose that those who differ from him, are fools—he brands the members of Congress as criminals—criminals with malice aforethought—"conspirators" who leagued in the dark to commit this foul "crime;" this "crime of crimes," with a full consciousness of its infamy and the baseness of their own motives. If a public writer sustain them, his "pen is venal"—if a journalist uphold them, his "press is prostituted"—if a politician adhere to them, he is "bought"—if a lawyer advocate the law they have passed, his is a "subtle tongue"—if a judge enforce it, he is "corrupt." In the whole range of motives governing human action, Mr. Sumner can discover none but the foulest and most corrupt. And this sir, is "liberty of speech," and for this is claimed the impunity due to the privilege of debate. It is not debate—it is not discussion. Abuse is not argument—nicknames are not logic. Sir it is the licenteousness of a rankling suspicion, generating the worms which feed upon itself until all untamed things assume their crawling forms and disgusting hues. "Freedom of speech!" it is a violation not alone of the proprieties of speech, but of reason, decency and morality, and insulting not only to his hearers, but to common sense and the ordinary usages of civilized society.

The speaker having discussed at length the "Missouri compromise," thus disposed of the use made by the Republicans of the murder of Keating:

There is another class of imputations for which the Republicans are equally distinguished. If a Southern man, or a Democrat, commit an outrage of any kind, it is instantly attributed, not so much to the man as to the institutions among which he lives, or the policy he upholds. Thus has been treated the assault on Mr. Sumner—thus the "murder" of the Irish waiter Keating. It is quite refreshing to witness their sympathy for the latter, though it has not assumed quite so indignant a tone as that for the former. This reasoning from a man to a party is not a fallacy, but a cheat. It is somewhat savage as well as illogical. It seeks to enlist the passion of revenge excited by the unfortunate or wilful act of one man. It invokes national prejudices, stung by outrage. It is dragging the hands of faction through the blood of murder, to inscribe its banner with a lie. Whether the homicide of Keating be murder or not—whether it be unprovoked and brutal, or admits of some palliation, I deplore it, and would have the wrong-doer punished. But, supposing it a murder, and the murderer escaped unhurt, does his crime change truth to falsehood, or right to wrong? Are we to abandon what we deem just, and cling to what is unjust, because the former is tainted with its support. A murderer eats—are we to fast? He wears clothes—are we to go naked? He looks on the light of the sun—are we to pluck out our eyes. He is a republican—must we become monarchists? The logic is preposterous. But for its brutality—its depraved pandering to passion, there is nothing to redeem it from contempt. But really, thus coolly to watch over that fearful deed—thus to catch the froth on the surge of murder to daub it on the escutcheon of faction, is in my mind, a more revolting crime—if not so heinous—than shedding the blood in the heat of passion.

I stoop not to question the sincerity of this sympathy for the "Irish waiter," for that would be imitating them. I take leave to say, however, that their guiding lights—those Americans, who are animated with a laudable desire to rule America, while, perhaps, they would not shed the blood of one Irishman, would politically extinguish them all; would set a badge of degradation upon them, and have them walk apart from the rest of the children of men. I do not charge this policy on all the republicans; but on their own principles and arguments, by their association, not with one but tens of thousands, they all stand condemned. One instance more.

There lived in the Bay State—the now indignant State—one Doctor Webster. I think he was a "northern man with northern principles," full of pious sympathy for his poor black brother. He had a friend who lent him money in his distress. He was deeply thankful. He prospered. He had an interesting family, among whom he was the very exemplar of benevolence, charity and religion. His friend and patron called to remind him of his loan. For this crime, he laid him dead at his feet. He went home, having stowed away the corpse, and patted his daughter's face with that soft hand of benevolence which had slain his friend. And that hand, the next day and the next cut up the body of his victim. Why tell the rest? He was convicted of this incredible atrocity. He was condemned. Do I remember aright, or were there not very earnest efforts made to rescue him from doom by northern gentlemen. Were I to attribute his crime to the "free schools," the "high culture," and "religious superiority" of New England, I would be justly met with scorn. But I repudiate the argument; and yet it is the same—precisely the same as that whereby Brooks' assault is charged on southern institutions, and the homicide by Herbert on the Democracy. Before quitting this subject let me remind the "Republicans" of a grave omission of theirs. Among all the crimes they have imputed to slavery and Democracy, they have not included the first and greatest—the murder of Abel by his brother Cain. Is the story a fable? or would the fact occur without there being a slave oligarchy in the Garden or a Rumhole at the gate.

After a searching investigation of the character and proceedings of the Emigrant aid Society and the Northern emigration, Col. Doheny concluded as follows:—

I can understand those of the brotherhood who adhere to Fillmore. They are at least intelligible. They are consistent. What they were they are and will be to the end. They have been weakened by desertion. They have their former friends and brothers for bitter foes. These men in joining them betrayed themselves; but in deserting them, they betrayed both themselves and their confederates. Fidelity so rare, and under circumstances all but desperate, redeems the grossness and unscrupulousness of their dogmas. But with the "Republicans," what was black yesterday is white to-day, and will be saffron to-morrow. They charge the Fillmore brethren with being "dark-lanterned," "secret," "sworn" and "foresworn," while the Fremont branch are light itself; "genuine Americans," "true," "noble," and above all—"wary," "judicious," of keen scent and a steady eye in the direction of the spoils. Thus they discriminate, while every one knows and they well know, that the two branches are absolutely identical in every article of their abhorrent creed, save one—religious proscription—in which the Northerns are so far in advance as actually to proscribe the others for the singular crime of not being proscriptive enough.

Some of the "Republicans" were Clay Whigs. They spit on his policy and throw nettles on his grave. Some of them subsidized the genius of Daniel Webster. They curse his memory. Their old political associates receive their foul-mouthed vituperation. They have broken all political ties, trampled on all faith. Those who are with them—no matter whence they came—are "the People." Those who are against them are "Ruffians"—"border" or otherwise. Cheers for them are "enthusiasm." Cheers for their opponents are the "howl of the mob." Those who speak for them, are "eloquent." Those who speak against them "bawl." All their meetings are "numerous," "respectable," "intense." All other meetings are gatherings of "rowdies." The offscourings of Eastern cities whom they have hired and sent to Kansas—armed bullies—are "respectable settlers." Those who go there from the South, are "invaders." The stealing of a Negro is a "virtue!" The murder of his captor, the pink of sanctity. Let a man belonging to themselves dare to hesitate in any atrocity and woe be to him. He is hunted down with keener scent and more ferocious instinct than those of a bloodhound. Look at Dunn; was there ever unfortunate slave more mercilessly pursued—more savagely lacerated? On their tongues and pens words have totally lost their meaning. The whole agitation, whether in journal, speech or correspondence, is one unvaried waste, whence reason and decency and truth have been rooted out. Their abnormal elements are so heterogeneous, that their fusion in any chemical alchemy is impossible. Only in the intoxication of fanaticism can they unite. In this the Teetotaler takes the hand of the Drunkard; the "Freelover" that of him of "Woman's Rights," and mutually embracing they dance to a "Rapper's" music from the spheres. They seem to me to resemble nothing in nature except, perhaps, a jungle of briars and weeds and thorny shrubs—a wild rose and stink weed, nettles and hemlock, dock leaves and fox-glove—lashed and intertwined by a sudden storm.

Every sect, and section, and phase of fanaticism is embraced in the fold, except the unfortunate Mormons. Nor could they be excluded without a betrayal of their own convictions by leading Republicans, who stoutly maintained that a man has an absolute right to practise what social infamy he pleases. Nor would they change their minds if Brigham and the saints had as many votes as they have wives. But perhaps the proscription was to give new assurance to the "brethren." It could not fail to show them that others may in turn be proscribed. Be the motive what it may, the thing is intolerance, as rank, as unrepublican and unconstitutional as the proscription of the other section, yet in the dark. Theirs, in fact, is elevated to a principle, while the proscription of the Republicans, like everything else, is stamped in the image of policy. Every word spoken, every act done at the Philadelphia convention, was based on the one consideration—what would best serve the end. Hence the rejection of Seward. Hence the selection of Fremont. Hence the proscription of the Mormons. Hence the juggle to deceive the Catholics and the "brethren"—all from the impure source of a miserable expediency.

I fancy I have given you some pretty accurate specimens of the "liberty of speech;" and here my argument closes.

I have hitherto abstained from speaking of James Buchanan. To eulogize him may be misconstrued—and he needs none. Enough that he accepts our principles in their plenitude, and will stand or fall with them. If we add to this, that he has lived an active, a blameless and an honorable life, all is said that needs saying. His colleague is a young man, but ripe in learning and in wisdom, and mature in the influence he has acquired in his native State, and the undivided love she bears him. Nor shall I say ought of our opponents. If faults they have, let them rest. They cannot enter into the lofty considerations that should govern the issues presented in this contest. These issues are as between us and the "Republicans"—shall the union be dissevered?—as between us and the "Americans"—shall the Constitution be overthrown? The two principles which our opponents seek to subvert are at the base of our republican institution, and supply their highest functions with the activity of operative life. The lives of all the candidates are in the hands of God—they may pass away before the contest begins, or soon after it is over—but those principles are immutable; let me hope imperishable.

But while I do not laud our candidates, because it may seem indelicate, or disparage our opponents, because it would be undignified and unjust, there is one man more intimately identified with the great question now in issue than any other, for whom I may be permitted to express the admiration his genius and courage commaud, and affectionate regard his friendship and kindliness have inspired. He has made this issue. Standing on the broad ground of the Constitution, he has dared to vindicate its principles in defiance of the howling of fanaticism. For this he has been assaulted with the foulest weapons in the armory of Billingsgate. Every puny gabbler and foul mouthed orator has a shaft levelled at him. I scarcely need name Stephen A. Douglass.

Against such a man calumny cannot prevail. Born of the people, and sharing in their simplicity and purity of conception; bred among the children of the people, and imbibing their artlessness and love of truth; joining as a boy in the sports of the youth of the people, and learning from them the honest rustic sense of fair play; inheriting as a man the toil of the people and facing it like a man; only dropping the axe of the workman to clutch the gubernatorial fasces, Stephen A. Douglas has sprung to be the chief among chiefs in the United States Senate—filling many intermediate offices, untrue to no principle, unfaithful to no friendship of his life, unchecked by difficulties, unawed by conspiracies and calumnies, stern, steadfast and untiring—and carried with him through all, the fervid uncorrupted heart and freshness of the people.

I have spoken of the "South" and of the "North." I beg of you to believe that I repudiate from my heart the distinction which these words on other tongues are intended to invoke. My excuse is the necessity of being intelligible in my argument. I do not believe the distinction finds a place in any natural heart. It is a condition of the excess of liberty to run into anarchy. That tendency is the fountain source of every fanatical "ism." All these isms having once broke off from the normal law of order, no matter how incongruous the extravagance that inspires each sect, naturally unite against established usage. Notwithstanding this there is not a northern state in which there is not an efficient minority nearly equal to them, all and nearly in every state larger than the largest one. If in this state we could divest ourselves of them all, if every man were governed solely by the considerations suggested by the doctrines of "free soil," there would be a majority of, at least, twenty thousand voting with the South because it would be voting with justice. So, too, would it be in other states. It is a libel, then, a wilful and malicious libel to say that the North is "republican." It is a libel to say that the southerners are not democratic from principle; in the South was the cradle of democracy—there is its home. North and South, East and West, we are brothers all. Together we shall stand, together fall. We place ourselves upon the Constitution, and inspired by its generous and Catholic spirit, let us, too, appeal to a "higher law"—the Divine command which, probably is of equal force North and South of 36.30, and take for our motto—"Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you."

MILITARY DEFENCES OF WATERFORD.

From the Waterford News.

Lord Stuart de Decies, and young Lord Carew, who take such a deep interest in Waterford, as well as Lord Waterford, Lord Huntingdon, Sir Richard Musgrave, and those other active gentlemen intimately connected with the County Waterford Railway, should all be solicited for their support and influence. The influential people and press of Clonmel, be it told to their credit, are straining every nerve with the view of getting the barracks, which of right belong to Waterford. And why? If the great maritime cities be suffered to remain unprotected, what will become of the small inland towns? Troops up country would not be able to stave off a resolute invading army in the port of Waterford. How could they? A few men could stop a railway by breaking down a bridge, or by throwing a few rails over the ditches. But a few men in Duncannon Fort, or a couple of old revenue men in Tramore, Annestown and Bonmahon, could not stop desperate battalions from capturing and fortifying themselves in the city of Waterford. At present 50,000 of the brilliant and daring captors of the Malakoff are prying into the fine fields of beautiful Spain—looking out for squalls, as the saying is—and who knows how soon they may be hovering near our own coasts? The Crimean campaign has demonstrated this fact, that when once an invading army has made a sure footing and entered into a country, neither ships nor sailors can root them out of it. When William the Conqueror landed in England, he sunk his ships, in order that his legions could have no chance of retreat. At the last siege of Rome, the insurgents thought themselves secure when they had the city fortified. But, one fine morning Gen. Oudinot entered their ports, and soon after pitched his camp before the city. Every one knows the result. The insurgents had to yield. The first landing of the allies in the Crimea, without a struggle being made on the sea-shore by the Russians, is supposed to have been one of their greatest blunders. A few ships sunk in front of Sebastopol, set at defiance all the sea-forces in the world. In like manner a few old hulks sunk in the Waterford river, at either side of Passage, would keep at bay the whole British fleet. From these considerations the danger of leaving our chief seaports unprotected, must appear patent to persons even of less note than those who rule the destinies of the British empire.

MR. MEAGHER, M.P.

From the Nation.

Mr. Meagher, Member for Waterford, we perceive, has presented the Mechanics' Institute of that city with the following Parliamentary Reports for the session of 1856:

"The Joint Stock Companies' Act; Wreck Chart of the British Isles for 1855; Geological Survey; Estimates, &c.; Civil Services; Loan Fund Board of Ireland, 18th annual report; New Palace, Westminster, report No. 1; Irish Reproductive Loan Fund."

As a general rule, we do not attach a very high importance to Parliamentary Reports, nevertheless, the above papers cannot fail to be interesting and useful. There are other reports lately issued which we would like to see included in the above list—viz: that on the use of the torture in India, for the purpose of extracting revenue from the plundered natives, and that containing the correspondence between the British and American Governments respecting the affairs of Central America.

It is the duty of a representative to look after and procure for the use of his constituents, copies of interesting Parliamentary Reports; and the representative who discharged the duty is deserving of thanks, when we find there are so many who neglected it. Why has not every Irish representative acted in this matter like Mr. Meagher? They have all had the same facility for procuring these papers that he has had, and there is no county town or city in Ireland without some educational institute, to whose members they might prove advantageous. The negligence of Irish members in this regard is only another proof of their forgetfulness of the means by which they procured their seats, and a disregard of the objects for which they should hold them. They expect people to make great sacrifices to send them to Parliament, and once there they think only of their own private concerns, and will not take the trouble of obtaining for the use of their deluded constituents copies of useful parliamentary reports, which may be had for the asking. We respectfully suggest to members of mechanics' institutes, &c., in other places outside Waterford, the propriety of intimating to their representatives, that, inasmuch as they have not the manliness to vote like Mr. Meagher, it would be desirable if they had the thought to act like him in regard to Parliamentary reports.

SMITH O'BRIEN'S SPEECH AT CAHIRMOYLE.

Fellow-Countrymen and Friends—Though since my arrival in Ireland I have studiously discouraged the assembly of large multitudes, who might otherwise have been disposed to greet me with congratulatory demonstrations, I confess that I am rejoiced to see collected around me to-day so many of my kind neighbors. I am glad to have a public opportunity of thanking them not only for the solicitude which they have felt respecting my own lot, but also for the affectionate care with which they have befriended and protected my family during my absence.

My thanks are specially due to the tenantry of our estates for the fidelity and integrity with which, during a period of unexampled difficulty, they endeavored to fulfil their obligations. I trust that their conduct will never be forgotten by my successors through future generations.

Disappointments, privations, and sufferings fall lightly, comparatively speaking, upon those who possess a happy home. My home has been rendered happy, not only by the possession of every domestic blessing, but also by the attachment of the population who surrounded me. Twenty-two years have elapsed since I first came to settle in this county, and during that period no one circumstance has occurred which could tend to interrupt or impair the kindly sentiments which I desire to cherish towards my neighbors in the west of the county of Limerick. Or rather I should say that you have never lost an opportunity of offering to my family and myself the most unequivocal testimonies of your affection and respect. Nor can I ever forget that I had been established at Cahirmoyle little more than two months, when I was called forward to represent the county of Limerick, and that you sustained me in that position, during fifteen years, on terms more honorable than, perhaps, ever subsisted between a member and his constituents.

Let it not be supposed, however, that when I speak in this manner respecting the inhabitants of the county of Limerick, I am insensible to the feelings which have been manifested towards me elsewhere. Seldom have I met an intelligent foreigner who has not sympathised with the wrongs and sufferings of Ireland, or who has failed to evince his regard for me when he learned that I was an exile, because I had striven to ward off those sufferings and those wrongs. For the same reason my name has been mentioned with honor in the colonies and America, where the Irish settlers cherish towards Ireland feelings more intensely national than those which at present prevail in this country.

I may add, I trust without arrogance, notwithstanding all that has been done to eradicate the sentiment of Irish patriotism, I have reason to believe that if I had given notice that I should arrive in Dublin on the 7th anniversary of my transportation, the 9th of July, I should have been greeted with as large a "monster meeting" as ever assembled within the precincts of the metropolis; and that scarcely a week had elapsed after my arrival, when I was offered the representation of the county of Tipperary by a body which acts as the organ of a majority of the freeholders of that county, and who, I have no doubt, would have been able to give effect to their choice in case I had acceded to their request. I have been informed also that the electors of my native county, Clare, are desirous that I should occupy the vacancy which will probably arise at the next election by the retirement of one of the present members.

These manifestations of opinion I attribute not to my own merits, nor even to the entire concurrence in my political views, but to the generous nature of the Irish people. They would reproach themselves, even if they did not fear the reproach of other nations, if they were to exhibit coldness and indifference towards those who suffer in an attempt to save them.

My determination to stand aloof from the British Parliament continues unaltered. You kindly allude to the probability that my son may hereafter represent the county of Limerick. At present he is under age, and will be occupied for several years with the studies necessary to fit him for the bar, to which profession he is destined. If he prove his capacity for public affairs by successful exertion in his profession, I will not dissuade him from adopting whatever career he may consider most useful to his country. In the meantime, I am happy to inform you, that I place unlimited confidence in his devotion to Ireland. For myself, many considerations of a domestic kind would at present render me reluctant to pass six months out of every year in London; but these considerations might perhaps hereafter be overruled, if I were not convinced that my time can be not only more happily, but also more profitably spent in my native land. I have no desire again to waste night after night in witnessing or taking part in the discussions of questions relating to Ireland, which are to be determined by the votes of English and Scotch members, who feel no concern about them, and who often do not even take the trouble to attend the discussion, but simply vote as they are directed by the leaders of the English Parliamentary party. Nor shall I conceal from you that my sentiments respecting the interests of this country, are not in harmony with those which at present prevail amongst the influential classes in Ireland. When in 1843, I avowed myself to be fully convinced that the only effectual guarantee for the permanent welfare of our country is to be found in the restoration of its legislature, I did not profess this conviction only as a means of extorting secondary advantages of either a personal or a national kind for the people of Ireland. I adopted it as a stern reality, the furtherance of which would probably for several years require many personal sacrifices on the part of those who became the champions of their country's rights, and which specially demanded an entire separation from all connexion with English governments and English parties. Within the short space of ten years I have seen almost every man who was a prominent leader in the Repeal agitation (except those who were driven into exile,) become a stipendiary or a supporter of the British Government, I have no desire to impugn the motives or conduct of any man, a change of circumstances sometimes justifies changes of opinion; and I always prefer to impute even to doubtful actions, honorable rather than base motives; but when I find that these chances have been sanctioned—and in some instances encouraged—by the constituencies of Ireland, I am compelled to conclude that my opinions are out of date, and that Irish patriotism no longer means what it appeared to me at Tara in the year 1843.

"Let me not be misunderstood. I never maintained, nor do I now maintain, that it is the duty of Irish patriots to seek separation from England by forcible means. Under all probable circumstances when in 1848 this country was reduced by misgovernment to a condition more abject than any that it had known, even in the worst period of its disastrous history, and when we were deprived of all constitutional methods of redress, by the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, I thought, and I still think, that resistance was justifiable. I thought then, and still think, that if we had been supported by the Irish nation in the struggle which we commenced, we should have been able to secure for Ireland within a few months, or perhaps a few weeks, the inestimable blessing of self-government. A year's residence in Belgium, which, during the last twenty-five years has been one of the best regulated nations of Europe, has confirmed me in the conviction that a government founded on a successful revolution may become the most stable of all governments. But it is vain to speculate upon what might have happened if we succeeded in '48, in establishing the national or legislative independence of Ireland. Fate decided against us, and since the occasion required a victim, I rejoice that I, who was mainly responsible for the abortive movement, became one of the chief victims, rather than that others should have suffered—many of whom followed the path of danger in consequence of the implicit confidence which they placed in their leaders.

"I accept our defeat as a decree of Providence; and if the people think that we can be more happy under the government of the Imperial Parliament, than under that of a Local Legislature, I am compelled to acquiesce in that preference. I acquiesce in it with the less reluctance, because this country is now comparatively prosperous, and because some of the evils which gave occasion for discontent have been mitigated.

"Personally, I had no ground for complaint when I first became an auxilliary in the national effort which was made to obtain a Legislature for Ireland, and in 1848, I put to hazard everything that was most valuable to me for the sake, not of myself, but of my suffering fellow-countrymen. I trust, therefore, that I shall be able to live happily amonst you, my kind friends and neighbors, even though the aspirations which I once cherished for the glory and grandeur of my country may never be realised.

At the same time I hold myself perfectly free to take whatever part in Irish affairs, best befits an Irish patriot. I never would have returned to Ireland if fettered by any conditions other than those which are imposed by social duty on every Irishman. I shall, therefore, occasionally take the liberty to offer advice upon public affairs to all who are disposed to listen to my suggestions—but for the present I desire to enjoy repose during a few months, if it were only that I may have an opportunity of studying the altered circumstances of this country. In penning this long answer to your kind address, I have thought it right to abandon all reserve. In doing so I do not seek to pledge you to conformity with my opinions. There is one point at least upon which all who have met here to-day agree. We all love Ireland, however we may differ as to the mode of serving her. To me it is delightful to feel that, whatever the faults of the Irish race, they are endeared to me by their kindly, genial, and generous character. Since we last met, I have seen almost every variety of the human species, from the lowest to the highest type of humanity—French, Spaniards, Belgians, Germans, Italians, Greeks, Africans, Asiatics, and even Aborigines of Australia. I have been brought into contact with some of the most accomplished and some of the most brutal specimens of the human race; I have seen no where a people amongst whom I would so willingly dwell as among that people with whose destinies the destinies of my family are inseparably identified. Since last we met I have wandered through many a beautiful scene in foreign lands; I have gazed on the snowy summits of the Alps and the Appinines; of Etna and of Parnassus; but I prefer a home within sight of the Galtees. I have traversed the most lovely lakes of Switzerland and of Italy, but for me Loughderg and Killarney have charms which exceed those of Zurich or Como. I have crossed the vallies of the Po and of the Nile, far-famed for their exberant fertility; but their fertility can scarcely surpass the evergreen verdure of the rich fields of my own native land. It is truly delightful to me to find that imagination and the yearnings of absence, which is said to "make the heart grow fonder," have not exaggerated for me the charms of my native country; and that I can here realize to myself the sentiments which induced me when returning home from distant lands to exclaim with the poet, respecting Ireland—

"It may not brightest be, or best;
To me it spreads a mothers's breast;
Its springs well from my inmost heart—
Its skies my heavenliest dreams impart—
Its earth enshrines my parent's tomb—
Its air, amid life's darkest gloom,
Breathes hope into my withering soul.
Swiftly ye loitering billows roll—
Swiftly ye lagging coursers fly!
Once more beneath my longing eye
In thy familiar charms expand
Mine own—my blessed fatherland."

Answers to Correspondents.

Owing to the press of political and other matter on our columns, we have been obliged to exclude the Personal Recollections, and an exceedingly interesting letter from our indefatigable friend, Kilmainham. We purposed finishing Pat Costello this week. Kilmainham and he shall appear in their proper places, next week.

A friend of ours in this city—a near relative of the illustrious orator—has favored us with an original manuscript of John Philpot Curran, containing several pieces in poetry and prose, which have never yet appeared in print. Among the latter, we have an eloquent and philosophic essay on the comparative merits of Elective and Hereditary Monarchy. The charter song of the Monks of the Screw—of which Order Curran was the Abbot—is to be found in this rare collection. Many of the stanzas are new to us, and, if print ed, would be new to the world. They have been omitted from every version of the song which has up to this been published. We shall not hoard up and hide the pearls and emeralds of this antique casket. Having the permission of the owner—who in return has our warm thanks forthe privilege accorded us—we shall display them in our windows, as the Christmas holidays draw near.

Belthazzar, as well as a crowd of other salamanders, rages about our notice of the Nenagh riots. It's miserably below the mark, it seems. Well, if it doesn't suit Belthazzar, Belthazzar may put it in his pipe and smoke it. The exasperated patriot in Baltimore (who sent us three postage stamps, enclosed in a glowing letter of hideous grammar, at the commencement of our editorial career,) may do the same.

We have received a long and deeply entertaining paper on Dublin theatricals, from a gifted Irishman, formerly of Castlecomer, County Kilkenny, but now and for some years past, a resident of Syracuse, in this State. "Reared in a coal-bed," he says "he's going to be buried in a salt-pan." The first opportunity we have, his paper shall see the light. Probably this day week at furthest.

The Sunday Dispatch is wrong in stating that Mr. Meagher did not declare his intentions until late in autumn of 1852. He declared them early in the summer of that year.

In our last issue, in the article entitled "The Sister of Charity," an error was manifest. Jephtha was printed for Judith.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1856.

OUR SECOND VOLUME.

In compliance with the request of many friends and subscribers, we close our first volume with the last number, and commence a second with the present.

The reasons are sufficiently pointed and agreeable that we should do so.

It is suggested, that for the purposes of reference and reading, half-yearly volumes would be much more convenient than yearly ones. That there are double as many pages in the Irish News as in the generality of the weeklies, and four times as many as in most of such periodicals; further, that from the amount of original and carefully selected matter we publish—every number containing nearly as much as the monthly magazines—the desire to bind our journal is a unanimous feeling.

These considerations are grateful to us; and we comply with the request, feeling that such an arrangement will be of "no consequence" to those who do not purpose to preserve the Irish News, while it is but common courtesy to please those who do us and our opinions so much honor. Still further to aid those who intend binding the News, we shall in a few weeks issue a full and complete index, with title-page to the first volume, and give a list of the many distinguished writers—Irish and American—who have contributed to it; that is, if these ladies and gentlemen will grant us permission. Our readers will then see that many of those bright intellects which shed lustre upon Irish literature in Ireland ten years ago, have rallied round the Irish News as the only organ in America, calculated from its scope, literary character and impartiality, to be, as it avowed in its first issue it aspired to be, the reflection of the Irish at home and abroad.

We might say much in the way of retrospect, but fortunately the very stress laid on the request to make half-yearly volumes, shows how cordially our labors have been appreciated, and spares us any lengthy reference to the course we have pursued. We can do it in a paragraph.

Our News depatrments, Irish, American, and Foreign, are not, as is usual in weeklies, a mere reprint of the matter of the dailies, but are a condensed epitome—a history, in fact, of the note-worthy movements of the day. In the Editorial department we have discussed the leading home and foreign topics which agitate the politics of the two hemispheres; and have faithfully fulfilled the duty we owe America, by honestly regarding, from thorough conviction, all foreign movements from an American position. In the Literary department we have devoted large space to Essays and Reviews of an instructive and critical nature, keeping in view the mental necessities of the large mass of Irishmen here, who are growing into strong, vigorous-minded and influential American citizens. In this department, also, Poetry, which some of the journals in Ireland remarked, recalls the spirit which lent such a charm to the politics of Ireland during the late struggle—sketches of men, politics and scenes, and a nouvelette, have been introduced; all of which, combining information and amusement, historical facts and fiction founded thereon, have found much favor.

With every reason to impose continued carefulness and devotion in the management of the Irish News, we open the Second Volume of our record of the World's eventful History.

GREAT DEMOCRATIC DEMONSTRATION—VINDICATION OF THE SOUTH.

The Democracy have met. In the grandeur of their united strength—in the colossal proportion of their numbers—the Democracy of the State of New-York have met.

The bone and sinew, the strength and muscle of our population—the dwellers in our cities, towns, and villages—men of all trades and professions—the farmer, the laborer, the mechanic, the merchant—all came together in the central town of our lordly river. It was a noble demonstration, stimulating the energies and quickening into active life, the will and determination of the masses.

And why was this? Why on this morning in October did the Hudson bear on its bosom so many overladen vessels, whilst on the land every vehicle of travel was alike crowded, and the roads trembled with the myriads marching in solid column, with music and banner, to this great Poughkeepsie convocation?

Because Patriotism incited it. Because through this great nation, from one end to the other, its great heart is throbbing with the apprehension of grave and imminent danger. Because Democracy is clear-headed as well as warm-hearted, and this demonstration was required to place on record, whatever may come, that the Democracy of the State of New-York were true and loyal to this Republic, their country, whole and entire, and its Constitution.

Never did the Democrat—the Union-man—find a loftier exponent of his sentiments, an abler reasoner, a more convincing advocate, than he found in Senator Hunter, of Virginia. The occasion found in him a fit representative, worthy the patriotic statesmen, eloquence, and chivalry of the South, and the great expounders of the political truths, the cardinal principles, which unite and regulate the Union of the States.

There were, at the outset of his truly great speech, Congressional statistics of a remarkable character, in refutation of the charge that the Southern States have violated faith—have made compromises and broken them.

It has been generally stated that Missouri was admitted as a State into the Union, by an agreement with the Northern States that Slavery should be prohibited North of 36,30; but by the Congressional statistics we allude to, Senator Hunter clearly indicated the action of the North and South on this subject.

Missouri applied for admission in 1820. The Bill was presented to the House, with two amendments from the Senate, one a Slavery restriction, and the other to apply the restriction only to the territory North of 36,30, acquired from the State of Louisiana.

On a proposition to strike out the Slavery restriction, the North voted more than five to one against striking it out—the South unanimously for it. On the other amendment, that of prohibiting Slavery North of 36,30, which in fact is the southern boundary line of Missouri—the North voted ninety-five to five in favor of such prohibition—"so that it appears that the North did not vote for the admission of Missouri in 1820, without this restriction."

In further confirmation of this narrative of Congressional action, it appears that, in 1827, the question of the admission of Missouri was finally concluded. Mr. Mallory, of Vermont, proposed that the Slavery restriction should be applied, as the condition of its admission. The North voted, twelve to one, in favor of the Restriction, and on the final vote for its admission the North voted against it.

The Republican party at the North, with John C. Fremont as its leader, holds as the one only principle of its organization, that the Labor of the South shall never be permitted, under any privilege or pretext whatever, to pollute what is termed in its arrogant oratory, "The sacred soil of Freedom."

To attempt the restoration of the sectional line of 36, 30—to do aught in contravention of the principle of non-intervention on the subject of Slavery in the Territories, is to dissolve the Union. The evils which would follow from the Presidential success of this fanatical Abolition party, Senator Hunter clearly and logically made manifest. There is not a subject connected with Slavery, and the relation which the South bears to the North, he did not examine. He displayed the industrial powers and accumulated wealth of each, and the shares they respectively contributed to the Union. In the expenditure of its resources, he showed clearly the North secured by far the larger share of the disbursements.

He made apparent the important part the South performs in the prosperity of the Union. And dead indeed must he be to all love of country, or deplorably insensate to the consequences of the act, who, after hearing or reading such a speech, could cast his vote for a party that, with an insidious cry for freedom, would jeopardize and destroy that prosperity.

He was nobly seconded by Col. William S. Preston, of Kentucky, and other able speakers. We commend the proceedings of this demonstration to every citizen, no matter what may be his party, as a clear statement of the sentiments and convictions of the South, and as an exemplification of the reasons why the democratic party at the present crisis regards the election of James Buchanan as President, as identified with the safety and preservation of the Union.

Where is the evidence of a compromise therefore, when the North did not vote in favor of the admission of Missouri at all? If such a compromise had been made in 1820,—the North violated it in 1821, by voting against the admission of Missouri,—bur no such complaint was ever made against the North, and the measures were disposed of in the ordinary way of legislation.

Missouri came into the Union as a slave state, but coupled with the declaration that no more states should come in with the institution of slavery, north of 36, 30. The South acquiesced in the application of this rule, until the Nortn itself chose to cancel and nullify it. Texas came into the Union, and the line of 36, 30, was applied to it. Next came the Mexican territory, with California, and the South proposed the application of the same line. To this the North objected.

Then came the compromise and adjustment acts of 1850 and 1851, which established the principle of non-intervention. It was this principle that gave California to the North, and the whole territory acquired from Mexico.

The question following this was the Kansas and Nebraska Territorial Bill. In all these matters the North had many strings to its bow. It was 36, 30—non-intervention, total Exclusion, or Free Soil, as best suited its interests. Be consistent, says the South, and give us a uniform rule. If the principle of Non-intervention be right, that of Exclusion must be wrong—your line of sectional demarkation should therefore be extinguished. It was extinguished; and the principle of the settlement of 1850 and 1851 of non-intervention was applied to the Nebraska Act.

This act of simple justice, of consistent and honorable conduct of one portion of this confederacy to the other, has been misrepresented, perverted and maligned.

CROWNED CONSPIRATORS—THE WESTERN ALLIANCE.

Although the war in the East is over, and peace reigns throughout Europe, and though American readers are no longer entertained, upon the arrival of each steamer, with accounts of brilliant victories, or bored with the stereotyped cry of "Nothing new from the seat of war," yet the facts connected with the establishment of peace, and the indications that may be derived therefrom, possess a significance and an importance to every one interested in the welfare of the American Republic, far beyond the simple question involved in the war.

When the war first broke out, it was predicted that if Turkey did not fall a prey to Russia, it would certainly be divided between its powerful allies, England and France. Recent events would seem to indicate that they were playing for a much higher stake, and that the ultimate object, in the alliance between those two Powers, was to prescribe the laws and control the destinies of the greater part of the civilized world. Their union reminds us somewhat of the Roman triumvirate of Augustus, Antony, and Lepidus, by which the world was divided between them, and the enemies of each proscribed. In the present instance, the same spirit of vindictiveness—the same desire for aggrandizement—is manifest as in the case of the Roman triumvirs, but fortunately, as yet, the power has been wanting.

The first act of aggression, was the attempt of the present occupant of the Tuilleries to compel the press of Belgium, which for some time past has enjoyed perfect independence, to adopt a tone better suited to the taste of his Imperial Majesty. And bravely, firmly, nobly, did that little State—the most liberal of European monarchies—repel this attempted invasion of her national rights. The matter has rested, and the effort may be considered abortive.

The next movement was one chiefly designed for the benefit of England. As it was well known that the United States were extremely desirous of having the principle settled in relation to the right of neutrals in time of war, the Paris Conference declared that principle to our entire satisfaction, but coupled with it a proposition for the abolition of privateering, and required us to swallow both or none. To accept the latter, in the present state of our naval force, would be to leave our commerce—in case of war—entirely at the mercy of such a maritime Power as England. Upon that proposition our Government has virtually put a negative, and there, it is probable, the matter will rest, although a portion of the foreign press talk of coercion as the last argument to be used against us.

At the Peace Congress of Paris, the representatives of Sardinia presented an elaborate and interesting protest, remonstrating against the tyrannical interference of Austria in the affairs of Italy, which has reduced that country to a mere appanage of that empire, and praying for protection against further encroachments. This was a case which might well be supposed to enlist the reputed liberal tendencies and constitutional sympathies of England. But Austria was a powerful nation, with whom it was not well to quarrel. The protest was unheeded, and Austrian bayonets still regulate the domestic affairs of Italy.

But though the great Western Alliance has declined acting in favor of Sardinia, against the oppression of Austria, it has been unable to resist the inclination to meddle with the internal affairs of the kingdom of Naples. No doubt those affairs greatly need reformation; no doubt there is in that State a vast amount of misgovernment and tyranny; but we respectfully beg leave to doubt the motives of the great Alliance, in attempting a correction. The attempt proceeds, not from any sympathy with the wrongs and sufferings of the Neapolitan people, but simply from a spirit of self-preservation. Oppression, beyond a certain extent, inevitably ends in revolution. Revolution is contagious, and the unwise excesses of a petty tyrant like the King of Naples may fan, from a little spark, a flame which shall overspread all Europe. It is not surprising, therefore, that France, especially, should be desirous of persuading or coercing the King into a more moderate system of tyranny. By the last steamer, we are informed that England and France have concluded to withdraw their representatives from the Neapolitan Court, and will supply their places by four line-of-battle ships and a corresponding force of frigates.

The next movement will probably be upon Spain. Louis Napoleon is itching to obtain the principal direction of affairs in that quarter; but as his object in so doing savors much more of self-interest than of the alleged object of the Alliance—the desire to preserve the peace of Europe—it is probable that in this matter he will not have the cordial sympathy of his powerful ally.

The moral to be derived from all this is simple and evident. The American people should regard with a jealous eye every movement of this great Alliance, for we know not at what moment their hands may be turned against us. What we require is an administration that will give us an active, vigorous foreign policy, that will firmly maintain the Monroe doctrine, and cause the American name to be respected in every part of the world. In our future relations with Europe we do not want at the helm a man of the timid, negative character of Fillmore, or one who, like Fremont, would be engrossed by one internal sectional question, to the disregard of all others. But in the person of James Buchanan we should have a President, who, uniting with the wisdom and experience of age, the ardor, vigor, and progressive opinions of youth, would carry into all our foreign affairs those principles of republicanism which lie at the foundation of our government, and a man who would, if necessary, fearlessly maintain them.

A WORD ABOUT OURSELVES.

In the course of a few paragraphs, the other day, the Daily Times, enumerating the Catholic papers of New-York, placed us amongst them. The compiler of devotional statistics in our daily cotemporary is slightly in error. Perhaps we should say, he is greatly in error. The paper we edit has no claim to the peculiar position the generous statistician assigns us. We neither profess nor pretend to conduct a religious paper, Catholic or otherwise. Neither by disposition nor study do we feel justified in usurping a theological chair. Doing so, we should feel we were hypocrites. Doing so, thousands would laugh at, if they did not go further and reprobate, our irreverent pretension.

What we have been, we still are, and hope to be for ever. From the first hour in which we took our chance for good or bad repute in public life, to this moment, we have strongly discountenanced and rebuked the practice of introducing religious dogmas into political discussions. Over and over again have we in Ireland insisted, that this practice profaned religion, whilst to politics it imparted an additional acerbity and mischief. Had the practice been abandoned, Ireland would long since have risen with a serene and radiant strength to a position in the world, which, as a nation, seems now as remote from her as when Wolfe Tone died.

True to the inspiration of our earlier days, true to the conviction this moment uttered, we write no word calculated in our judgment to perpetuate in civil life those distinctions which in Ireland have given rise to the fiercest factions, and flung her down, a prostrate and imbecile province, at the foot of England. In this country—the noblest feature of which, where all is noble in its origin and growth, the equality of every creed and form of divine worship before the law shines purely forth—we were the saddest recreants from the liberality and wisdom of our youth, did we presumptuously dictate from the editorial desk that which, by the most sacred right, belongs exclusively for promulgation to the college and the pulpit.

In a word, we write not for Irish Catholics, not for Irish Protestants, not for Irish Infidels, if any such strange savages there be. For Irishmen of every denomination in the Christian world—for the Irishman who accepts the Thirty-nine Articles as well as for the Irishman who abides by the Council of Trent—for the Irishman who belongs to the Kirk as well as for the Irishman who prefers the naked Meeting-house, founded by George Fox, to the most sumptuous Cathedral which fills the air of Italy with its music and its incense—for Irishmen, as the sun impartially sees and blesses them, are these pages open, and to their service in this Republic are they devoted. Not, however, to group them off from the vast multitude into the midst of which they have made their way, but thoroughly to identify them with it—a solid contribution from Irish soil to the monument towering above all thrones and spires to the memory of Washington.

PRESIDENT PIERCE IN CONCORD.

The welcome given this eminent gentleman in his native town must be deeply gratifying to every one, who, regardless of the calumnies and passions of the day, recognise in the Chief Magistrate of the Republic, the supreme expression of the People's will. Ansaldo Ceba chastely and wisely writes, that "obedience prepares man for empire, and whilst he should not imitate the obsequious veneration of the Persian, should cheerfully render the magistrates merited honors, as those whom the laws of a free state have placed in dominion." To those who, in this country, would act contrary to this teaching, permitting their personal disappointments and vindictiveness, or their political ambition, to get the better of them—to get the better of them so far as to urge them not only to evince but instigate in others a disrespectful attitude towards the President—nothing sufficiently deprecatory can be said.

Some people, in and out of Concord, forgetful of the honor of their country, their fellow-citizen, and themselves, insolently and menacingly, it appears, forbade President Pierce to visit New-Hampshire. The true-souled people of that State, assembling in thousands upon thousands to welcome Mr. Pierce, have haughtily and nobly rebuked the insult, and trampled on the threat. Eloquently and proudly, too, did the President himself confront, and in these words reprimand and humble the turbulent factionists who warned him from his home:—

"Are comparative strangers to the people of New-Hampshire—men who have not a personal acquaintance with one hundred of the assemblage now present—men who have never sacrificed for their country in their whole lives one hour of ease—who have never encountered, and who never expect to encounter the slightest of danger for its honor and its rights—to dictate when and under what circumstances it is proper for me to breathe my native air and tread my native soil? I have answered this question to-day by my presence, and you have answered it by meeting me here."

From our heart we applaud these words, warmly congratulating President Pierce upon the triumphant hospitalities, which have awakened in his honor the echoes of the White Mountains.

THE DAILY NEWS.

We perceive that our neighbor, the Daily News, has been recently enlarged and otherwise beautified by type and arrangement. The News has been for some time the liveliest and brightest gossipp of the morning press, as well as holding in the political world a well-merited pre-eminence for the force and untiring zeal displayed in its Democratic articles. It has been the vigorous defender of popular sovereignty—the Union and the Constitution. Apart from the merely local questions with which it sometimes fills space, but which we gladly overlook, it is thoroughly commendable for the breadth of purpose, clearness of argument, wealth of illustration, and pungency of style which have characterized the political essays, which, day after day, continue to unriddle (no hard task by-the-way) the tough fictions and wire-worked netting of the Fremont press.

We are glad to hear that the Daily News has achieved a daily circulation of over twenty-one thousand. This speaks well for the Democracy, and is only just to a paper that has spoken so well for it.

SMITH O'BRIEN.

The last mail but one brought us a pleasant letter from O'Brien. Not intended for publication, however, all we can communicate from it is the personal assurance of the good health and happiness of our friend—such happiness as it has not been his fortune to have experienced for many years. Kindly and affectionately he inquires after the companions of his captivity and exile now in America.

At the same time this letter reached us, we were handed a presentation copy of the Principles of Government—the work written by O Brien in his Tasmanian exile—and which copy he requested a mutual friend in Dublin to forward us. Along with our own, came copies for Mitchel and McManus. Each copy contains a written remembrance of his companionship and friendship.

The last mail brought us his speech at Cahirmoyle. The London papers praise it. Throughout Ireland it has been universally applauded.

Testimonial to the Late Thomas Devin Reilly.

The following are the names of the Managing Committee of the Devin Reilly Testimonial Fund: John Mitchel, Michael Phelan, Patrick Lynch, Danl. E. Sickles, Dr. Drew, Gen. Ward B. Burnet, O. A. Lochrane, Macon, Ga.; Terence Bellew McManus, San Francisco; Wm. Mitchel, John Brougham, John O'Mahony, W. D. Holly, John Savage, Robert Tyler, Philadelphia; John Cochrane, Michael Doheny, Captain Hogan, Adjt. McCartan, Thos. Francis Meagher, Joseph Brenan, New-Orleans; W. E. Robinson, John Folan, James Roche, Thomas Lynch, Dr. McGowan, Chairman; Captain W. F. Lyons, Secretary; P. M. Haverty, Treasurer.

The following subscriptions have been received: John Brougham, $25; Daniel E. Sickles, $25; Dr. Drew, Pearl street, $25; Michael Phelan, $25; Dr. O'Reilly, White street, $25; W. Stuart, $25; Patrick Lynch, $10; Adjutant McCartan, $10; Thomas Lynch, $10; John E. Devlin, $10; John Mullin, $10; Hugh Collender, $10; W. L. Cole (Irish American), $10; W. O'Donnell, $5; W. O'Brien, Brooklyn, $5; P. Mulligan, $5; Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie, $5; James Hueston, $5.

All Subscriptions and Communications to be addressed to the Secretary, Captain W. F. Lyons, 29 Ann street.

OUTRAGE ON ROBERT EMMET.

The morning papers, during the past week, informed us that this estimable and venerable citizen was denied a hearing in Montgomery Hall. In the midst of intolerant cries, and a scene of scandalous vulgarity, he was compelled to retire. This is too bad. It is wicked in the extreme. A name sanctified by blood as pure as ever flowed down the scaffold—as ever cried to Heaven for freedom—has been most foully scoffed at. That name ought to be sacred even amongst the most riotous of rabbles.

Were they Democrats who so infamously sinned against gray hairs and the traditionary glory which surrounds them? It is said so. If so, let the guilty parties know that such excesses defile Democracy—cover it, as it were, with loathesome sores—and drive thousands from it.

Were they Irishmen who yelled down the eldest surviving relative of the gallant youth who staked his fortune and was strangled for them? If so, let Irishmen remember that the blackest page in their country's history is that which tells the world how Harry Grattan, the Deliverer of Ireland, was in his old age stoned on Carlisle bridge, close to the scene of his glories, and brought down upon his feeble knees bleeding to the pavement. And why? For that he saw fit upon a question of great public consequence to differ—as Robert Emmet now differs—from the majority of his countrymen.

Let Irishmen take heed lest they add another black page to the one already written.

THE EMMET GUARD.

Our inability to attend the excursion of this distinguished company of the State Militia annoyed us deeply. We had confidently promised ourselves the gratification of doing so. In our present position, however, we are not masters of our time or wishes. Our promises of pleasure are dreams which may be accidentally fulfilled, or they may not.

The officers and men of the Emmet Guard will generously acquit us. Had it been in our power—at all in our power—we should have been on the field, and at the table with them. Endeared to us by many recollections, we have long wished for an opportunity to meet them face to face, take them by the hand, and exchange with them the cordial greeting and the generous cup. When we were prisoners, the welcome they gave our comrades, Doheny and Rielly, gladdened us to the heart. The flash of their bayonets, the ring of their cheer, broke in upon us in our cell in Richmond prison, and woke us into bounding life.

On arriving here, one of the earliest acquaintanceships we formed was with their late Captain, Judge Magrath. Our riper knowledge of him was such, that the news of his death, reaching us on the Pacific, darkened the bright waters over which we moved, and a mist overcast them for a time. But apart from all personal considerations, the name they bear was enough to draw us closely to them. For that name we would do every thing—be it to gratify or serve them—it was in our power to do.

Col. Doheny's Speech.—We print elsewhere a speech delivered by Col. Michael Doheny, in Hermitage Hall, on last Tuesday evening, on the invitation of the 17th Ward Club. He is clear, fervid, argumentative and convincing. The oration we have the pleasure and privilege of publishing is a sound Democratic effort, and worth that attention we claim for it. The greatest compliment we can pay it, is to refer the reader to it. It speaks for itself.

A LECTURE

Will be delivered before the Mechanic's Hibernian Institute, at Hope Chapel, by J. M. Harrington, LL.D., on Tuesday evening, October the 14th, at 8 o'clock. We bespeak for our friend Mr. Harrington, who is a young lawyer of undoubted talent, a very flattering reception on this his first appearance before a New-York audience.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

CHAPTER IV.

LEAVE-TAKINGS AND REGRETS—A LETTER OF IMPORTANCE—MONSIEUR AND MADAME DE CASCALES—THE BANKER AND HIS OFFER.

"I part with thee,
As wretches that are doubtful of herafter
Part with their lives, unwilling, loath and fearful,
And trembling at futurity."

Rowe.

"His eye inspires such trust—so full it is
Of a most clear and honorable spirit—
That we were fools to ask for other bail
Than his plain yea or nay."

Johnson.

Before leaving the vessel, on her arrival at Coenties slip, both Casement and his companion were anxious to take the Miss Plunketts under their protection; for they feared, and not without reason, that Brand might have got ashore from the pilot-boat before them, and they had seen enough of him to know that he was not a person likely to abandon any scheme of vengeance without a struggle. The girls had incensed him in the first instance by refusing either to buy his tickets or acquaint him with their place of destination; in the second, by having been the innocent causes of the outbreak which led to the overthrow of misrule on board, and the consequent failure of his schemes against the pockets of the passengers; lastly, they had rejected all his overtures of acquaintance, and Ellen, whose beauty had aroused his desires, utterly refused to speak to him, and even claimed the protection of our two friends when he persisted in pressing his suit.

Aware of these things, Casement and Ned Morgan were anxious at least to put the girls on board the train or steamboat which was to convey them to their destination; but, though frank and confiding upon every other point, neither Anne nor Ellen would consent to this, nor furnish them with any clue to the part of the country for which they were bound.

"It's a poor return for all your kindness," said Anne, who, though scarcely five-and-twenty, had all the air of a mother when speaking of her younger and more volatile sister. "But we cannot help it. For my own sake, and for Ellen's still more, I thank you and shall ever pray for you on my bended knees: but the friends we are going to—" and here her voice trembled as she forced herself to continue—"told us above all things, to let no one know our destination. They said there might be some one here to meet us, and there might not: if no one asked for us, we were to follow the instructions in this letter. And now I am going too ask you,"—she went on with increasing hesitation—"to ask you something that makes me blush, for I know it will seem ungrateful—it is, that you will neither of you attempt to follow us, nor try to find out where we go!"

Poor Ned was terribly put out; for though Anne was no beauty, in the common acceptation of the word, her neat and comely figure, dark eyes and pleasant face had made a conquest of his heart. Her sedateness and piety—her gentleness and almost motherly thoughtfulness, had inspired him—perhaps from contrast with his own rollicking and joyous humor—with feelings which did not easily brook the prospect of an everlasting farewell!

Nor did the prospect seem much more agreeable to our hero, who, nevertheless, would certainly have been surprised, and probably indignant, had any monitor whispered that the gay and fairy-looking Ellen occupied more than a due share of his anxieties.

"Then you don't want to see any more of us, Anne," said Ned, in a tone of utter despondency; "I wouldn't so much care if I knew you wor safe—but it's too bad intirely not to tell us where you're goin'."

"Here's a man inquiring for the Miss Plunketts," shouted the chief mate from the gangway; and presently an individual of sleek and clerical exterior advanced to where the sisters stood.

He welcomed them with great apparent zeal, but urged haste as an excuse for not giving them any present account of their relatives. "Get your traps in readiness," he said, for a carriage waits at the end of the pier, and I am weary of the abominations and deceit which are practised on the stranger in this city."

The speaker's countenance was by no means prepossessing: he squinted and his cheeks were almost as yellow as the juice which stained the ends of his white cravat and shirt bosom.

"Then you are the person," said Anne, unfolding the letter of instructions, "who was to meet us when we arrived?"

"Of course, my dear," replied the other, carelessly taking the letter out of her hands, and reading it while she still seemed to hesitate as to whether he was justified in this proceeding or not.

"Pray get your cloaks and bonnets, my dears, and point out to me your luggage," resumed the clerical guide as soon as he had finished the perusal. "Your good father was not quite well when I left him—let me beg that you will not alarm yourselves; he was not quite well, I say, but your presence will do more for him than the doctors."

The stratagem—if stratagem it was—succeeded beyond hope. The girls, alarmed for their father's health, forgot to press inquiries as to the stranger's authenticity. Maine was more civil than could have been expected; their trunks were quickly landed and placed in the carriage which the stranger had in waiting.

"Good bye," said Anne, returning the pressure of Ned's hand, as he assisted her down the gangway. "Perhaps we may meet again in this world—but if not, then God have you in his holy keeping!"

"Good-bye, sir," said Ellen to Casement, in a voice far different from her usual laughing tone; "I shall never, never forget your kindness, your goodness, your tenderness and courage: but you will forget a poor girl like me the moment she ceases to require your care?"

"Never, by heavens!" exclaimed Casement, hurriedly, and with an earnestness which even he himself would be puzzled to account for. "If you have not made life dear to me, you have at least shown me that there is less cause than I imagined to grieve for what is past and gone. But we shall meet again, shall we not?" he added, still retaining her hand in his.

"They say that where there's a will there's a way," answered Ellen, now resuming her natural tone of artless coquetry:—"and so, I suppose, if you really desire to find us out, we shall meet some of these fine days when least expected; but you will have to travel far, I'm afraid," she added, with a return to the quivering tenderness of tone which she had formerly betrayed. "You will have to follow that—" said she, pointing to the setting sun—"for thousands and thousands of miles, I am told; and what could bring a gentleman like you into parts so wild as those? No—no! I must not think of it; we part, Mr. O'Reilly, and part forever!"

What meant the tears which she now strove to hide? Was her nature so sensitive that taking leave of a mere friend could produce the deathly pallor which overspread her fair bright face?

"Come! come! young ladies," cried the harsh voice of their new conductor. "The carriage waits, and this is no time for fooling."

"Good-bye," said Casement, as he handed Ellen into a seat beside her sister. "Be sure that we shall meet again; something tells me we shall, and that our second meeting will be one of longer duration and more familiar ties."

It was an act of common courtesy to kiss her hand before closing the door: it was simple gratitude which made her press his fingers as she said farewell.

"Drive on!" croaked the harsh voice of the conductor; and in another instant O'Reilly and Ned found themselves standing alone on the deserted pier, their trunks lying close beside them and the world before them whence to choose and realize their future settlement.

Wonderful as it may appear, our hero had of late almost forgotten his good uncle's letter: perhaps change of climate may have caused his indifference—perhaps a sea-voyage has the effect of abating curiosity. Be these things as they may—it is certain that the anxiety he once felt to touch American ground that he might read that letter, had entirely abated; and equally certain it is that, far from thinking each week a year until made acquainted with the secret, no weeks of his past life had seemed to go by so rapidly as the last three spent on board the Vulture in Ellen's company.

"I didn't much like the looks of that fellow, sir," said Ned. Only he took the girls away so suddent, I'd have liked to ax him a few questions. He reminded me of Squintin' Dick, the swaddler, that had to lave the counthry on account of settin' fire to Father Casement's haggard. Didn't your honor mind him?"

"Tut—tut!" replied Casement impatiently, "I didn't pay much attention to the fellow; but I saw that his hair was black, while Squinting Dick, as you call him had a mop that might be mistaken for a fox's brush. Yet, stay," said he, as if recalling the feature's of the conductor again; "the hair might easily be dyed, and now that I think of it, your conjecture does not seem so far astray. The blue goggles he wore make a great alteration in any man's appearance, and it is just possible you may be right."

This was a painful thought, but the matter admitted of no present remedy; they had nothing but a mere conjecture to rely upon, and if they had, of what service could even positive proof have been under the existing circumstances.

They put up at the Astor House, where, contrary to Casement's remonstrances, Ned insisted on registering their names as "Mr. O'Reilly and servant." In vain the former pleaded that Ned was an independent immigrant, as rich in money, and probably richer in those qualities which would secure a fortune, than the man whom he persisted in calling master. He might as well have talked to a stone. Ned's fidelity was inexorable.

It was at last agreed upon, as a sort of compromise, that they should nominally continue master and servant so long as they remained irresolute as to their future course. But as soon as they left New-York, on their way to the farm which O'Reilly wished to buy, then Casement was henceforth to dress himself in farmer's gear, as became an immigrant with a very limited capital, and Ned was to do violence to all his old associations by endeavoring to regard the "heir of the Castleronan O'Reillys"—as he persisted in calling him—in the light of a companion and partner. They were to club fortunes in the purchase, and, as Casement's did not then exceed sixty guineas, while Ned had thirty-five, the proportion (taking into account the latter's better adaptation to the life of a pioneer), did not seem an unequal one. Meantime, it would take them a week to look around the city, settle on their future course, and procure such an outfit as the life they decided on might need.

At any other time, or under any less exciting circumstances, Father Casement's letter would have been read with tumultuous agitation. It stated the writer's belief that the children brought home by Matthew and passed for his own, were such neither in law nor in fact. It added that this suspicion was shared by the late family solicitor, who took a warm interest in Casement's fortunes, and by whose advice the rumor that he was going to Australia had been circulated. Of the attorney, it added, "I don't thing your uncle did a wise thing when he dismissed him; for an attorney, Tom Cassidy is the honestest one I ever knew. But he never forgets an injury, and seldom fails to find some means of repaying it fourfold. He saw, he tells me, a certain lady whose visit to Castleronan caused a good deal of talk at the time. He tracked her and found that, though short of money to pay her coach fare from Dublin, she returned in a coach and four, and put up for a few days at one of the best hotels. The last heard of her, she had taken passage to New-York, under the name of Amelia Livingston. Mrs. or Miss you may supply at will, as, if Cassidy's conjecture be the true one, she is rightly neither. Your uncle, shortly after, borrowed the sum of four thousand pounds, which he remitted to Messrs. Treadwell & Brown, payable to the order of Madame Julia de Cascales. Now, Tom is of opinion that Madame Julia and Amelia Livingston are one and the same, and farther, Tom is prepared to take his book oath that—whoever may be the father of 'the brats'—Madame Julia alias Livington is most distinctly their mother. Matthew, you know, gives out that his wife is dead, and is doubtless prepared to support this assertion with certificates of marriage and baptism, which it would be very difficult to disprove, if he chose to suborn false witnesses, &c. Cassidy, therefore, reported that you had gone to Sydney, in order to throw your uncle off his guard by leading him to imagine that this point (legitimacy) would never be disputed. He further bids me tell you, that any information as to Madame de Cascales would materially assist him. I have therefore drawn the enclosed draft for one hundred and fifty pounds on Messrs. T. and B., who may or may not be respectable people, for aught I know. It is payable, you will see, to Mr. Charles Jones—Cassidy not thinking it advisable to let your name appear, as they are possibly in correspondence with your uncle. You must exercise discretion in such questions as you think fit to put, and if you inquire for Madame de Cascales directly, be prepared with some excuse to divert suspicion, should they appear to entertain any."

The letter thus concluded: "The draft is a loan, payable on your return to take possession of Castleronan. Use it wisely, I trust you will; use it honorably, I know you will. Spend it cheerfully when needed, and if ever you see a case of real suffering, that money can alleviate, remember that the gold in your pocket was given by persons almost as poor, to the poor priest who has now had charge of them for close on to forty years."

At any other time, we say, this letter would have caused Casement the most tumultuous agitation. Had he known it before leaving Ireland, no power short of a packed jury could have compelled him to emigrate. His hasty temper would have led to an explosion, and then, with old Matthew on his guard, all hope might indeed be abandoned.

But now, he looked on the discovery with a composure which he fancied arose from philosophy alone. These conjectures might or might not be true. What object could old Matthew have for putting Cuckoos' eggs into the old family nest? If the children were really his, though not legitimate, what moral right would Casement have to rob them of their father's inheritance? At any rate, he resolved to prepare himself for either fortune by securing an independence in the land of his present adoption.

"It is a noble thing," he sighed, "to inhabit a land where man is valued for his worth alone, and woman for her virtues and beauty. Where no artificial barriers can be raised between the heart and its affections."

This may have been philosophy, but if so, it belonged to that modern class with which love is largely concerned. He tried to cheat himself into the belief that his reflections were suggested by Lady Alice and the past. It needed but a little more experience to show him that they arose from Ellen Plunkett and the future.

On visiting the establishment of Messrs. Treadwell & Brown, he was introduced to the senior partner, who received him with an urbanity and warmth such as our Wall street bankers do not commonly exhibit. So distinguished (to use a modern idiom), was his reception, that not a clerk who witnessed it but would have lent him a hundred dollars on the mere security of the banker's smiles.

"I have received a letter on your house," began Casement, as he was about to search for it in his pocket-book.

"From your uncle, no doubt?" interposed Mr. Treadwell, rubbing his little withered hands together and working hard to force a smile into the puckers round his mouth. He must have noticed our hero's astonishment, for he went on immediately to explain:

"Such a face at that of Monsieur de Cascales is not easily forgotten!"

Here was a predicament of a wholly unexpected and most embarrassing nature, which called for immediate action. It was clear that Matthew O'Reilly must have been known to the banker under the fictitious name of de Cascales. Should the nephew therefore acknowledge the relationship, and endeavor to find out all he could of his uncle's past career under that assumption? or would it be more prudent to content himself with what he had already learned, and deny all knowledge of the individual referred to?

There was but an instant for decision, and the family estate might be won or lost by his next few words. He remembered Cassidy's advice, and the report that he had gone to Australia. The relationship, at any sacrifice of the banker's good opinion, must be disowned.

"Pardon me," he said with a smile, as he handed the banker an open letter, "whoever Monsieur de Cascales may be, I must be very like him, for I was told so by another party something less than two months ago. I am not acquainted, however, with any person of that name—at least," he added, as if suddenly recollecting himself, "with no gentleman of that name. There was a lady, if I mistake not, called Cascales on board the ship in which I came from Liverpool."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

*Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT.

Now the blazing God of Day
Hides his face in the West;
Twilight hazes cease to gild
Nature's dewy breast.
Sadly will the cricket's chirp,
From the groves and ferns,
Quiver on the chilly breeze
Till the sun returns.

Hushed are all the pretty birds,
That so free and gay,
Twittered through the sleeping woods
All the rosy day.
Harsh and dismal groans are heard,
From the frog in the brook,
Where he squats, with solemn mien,
In his slimy nook.

Now the lonely whip-poor-will,
Perched on mossy rail,
Tells his wild and plaintive story
To the sighing gale.
Glitt'ring dew-drops, lightly falling,
Bathe the grass and trees,
While the songs of katydids
Float upon the breeze.

Weirdly roams the lightning-bug,
Over pond and brake,
Gleaming through the murky air,
Like a fiery flake.
Hooting screech-owls flit the gloom,
Fierce of eye and will,
Hunting for unlucky mice,
Owlets mouths to fill.

On ev'ry sturdy forest limb
A pigmy tree-toad hums,
'Mid the shadows, rank and dense,
Where starlight never comes.
But why let Night our souls annoy,
With regret, or sorrow;
Will not the sun that shone to-day
Shine again to-morrow?

BELSHAZZAR.

THE MAGAZINES.

HARPER for October opens with an instructive disquisition on the "Cooking of Men." The title must not lead the reader of the contents astray as to the subject. He must not imagine it a paper for the instruction of missionaries, detailing, after Sydney Smith's suggestion, the manner in which savages, not in search of civilization, carve up the gentlemen who desire to confer that benefit upon them. Nor is it an essay following up Thackeray's blundering view of Dean Swift's bitter satire on English rule in Ireland, when he proposed that to prevent famine they should cook up the children. The article in question is not based on either of those ideas, but is devoted to that much-argued question—the races of men, and especially to the manner in which the climates cook them. The writer argues that there is no direct connection between the geography of a place and the complexion of its inhabitants, but that there is between heat and color. How a person keeps warm is matter of indifference so as the warmth is produced; it is all the same, whether by the naked sun, or by double blankets, sets of furs, over-coats and the like; and by these means, says the writer, the temperature around Europeans of our day is very different from what it was in the time of Cæsar. A couple of sentences will give a perfect and suggestive cue to the article. Here they are:

"The weapons with which the brunette is extinguishing the blonde are tongs, pokers, and feather-beds. If this spread of domestic comforts and keeping the people warm in the winter is persisted in much longer, the time will soon come when not a fair face will be seen."

Another exceedingly interesting paper is, "Insects and Insect Life." It is finely illustrated. "A visit to Red River," and "Wild Life in Oregon," follow up with spirit the home notes of travel which Harper has been giving us in happy profusion. They are really beneficial, and worth a dozen old wire-drawn narratives of European meandering. They are fresh, descriptive, observant, and tell us something new, inasmuch as they deal with the land we live in. Europe is "used up." There is "nothing in it" that is not better known than trusted. The comic illustrations this month are not equal to the place they occupy, coming after recent achievements. "Little Dorrit" is continued, and in the literary department we have a very clever article on Emerson's "English Traits." (Harper & Brothers)

PUTNAM'S October number is refreshing. Subjects from the Childhood of the great Haroun al Raschid, as who were not, we read with eagerness the opening paper. The very pleasant article entitled "What is Poetry?" and proposing a reply to that never yet, and never will be, answered question, is evidently from the same pen that gave us the "Poetry of War" in the last issue, and several others of a like congenial character lately. Some of his judgments in the present article are to our mind correct, and have been "time out of mind" received as such. If it is nothing new to regard Scott's "Marmion," Moore's "Silent, O Moyle," Campbell's Lyrics, &c., as "poetry," it is certainly good to remind newfangled readers and writers that such works actually exist. "Gipseys and their Ways," "Military Array of New England in the Olden Time," and the Editorial Notes, will be read with great pleasure and profit. (Dix, Edwards & Co.)

MRS. STEPHENS' ILLUSTRATED NEW MONTHLY (October), which, commenced well, continues to improve. The Tales are much above the usual style of the every-day novelette, while the Novel by the editor, "Lost Jewels," sustains that lady's reputation. It is written with power and elegance. In the present number we have the opening of a new tale, entitled "Harold," by the author of "Blanche Dearwood." The artistic taste displayed in this magazine is worthy of high commendation. We are glad to hear that Dallas will continue the "Poetry of the Pencil." Dallas is a very effective draughtsman, with a fine poetic feeling swaying his pencil. He gives a sentiment in almost every line. The "Things we Talk About," and the notes on books, are as usual pointed and sensible. This magazine should we imagine, become fashionable. It is chiefly devoted to amusement, is elegantly gotten up, has a handsome appearance, is presentable before society—in fact is as dainty as a bouquet. (E. Stephens.)

Godey's Lady's Book, which we have not seen for some time, renews its acquaintance with us in the present month. It appears to be very much improved, both in typography and style and were it not for a very foolish engraving, very unwisely daubed at the opening, we should regard this as a capital specimen-number of a lady's work-table assistant. There is a great amount of matter which we think our fair friends would estimate highly. The stories, to be sure, are almost too lady-like. They are pretty, but a little more hearty, strong womanliness, would not hurt them. We have, however, a beautiful fashion plate, innumerable patterns of innumerable parts and peices of dress, and a dainty serenade by that favorite composer Crouch, the author of Kathleen Mavourneen. These make up for the objectionable picture, (The Star of Dawn) which we consign to the waste-basket.

THE KNICKERBOCKER, for October, contains a great variety of prose and verse, the best of which is a happy translation of a fragment entitled "My Ladye Love," from the Provençal of Rene le Bon. "Eastern Derwiches," by John P. Brown, is worth perusal, and some passages in a piece entitled "Tiberius at Capreæ," exhibit considerable wealth of diction, force and poetic feeling. The ease-loving editor takes exception to the "poetry of War," in Putnam's September issue, and even thinks the very title "poetry of war," shocking. This is rather lackadasiacal.—S. Hueston.

THE UNITED STATES MAGAZINE, is a neatly printed and well illustrated periodical. The October number contains a large assortment of papers. One of the most readable and curious is "Fashions in English Costume." The illustrated papers descriptive of the city of Washington, are well worthy of attention. "The United States Patent Office," is the leading article of the number before us, and is accompanied by some good cuts. In the editor's olio, the "Yankee Doodle" is illustrated by a clever series of sketches. J. McEmerson & Co.

BROWNSON'S QUARTERLY REVIEW for October is a strong number. The chief article refers to the "Presidential Election," and especially to the question of people voting from any religious point of view. Dr. Brownson gives expression, more in detail, however, to the same ideas which we embodied in our articles on that question. As we condemned heartily and emphatically "the Irish Vote" as a distinct, however effective, arm of the Democratic force, he, also, in almost the same words deprecates a Catholic party in politics, acting purely as religionists. As we sincerely opposed "every effort and syllable made or uttered to isolate the people who, thrown here from Irish soil, have found their homes under the Flag of Washington," so Dr. Brownson avows that, purely as a Catholic, he belongs to no political party. He desires to hear nothing said of "the Catholic Vote." He says, "we have no political interests, sympathies, or tendencies, as Catholics, different from those of the great body of the American people, and no political reason for forming ourselves into a distinct or separate political party. * * We vote, if at all, as American citizens." This is right and manfully sustains what we have expressed, and what has met, we are proud to understand, with the respect of the best men in American politics as well as the body of our adopted fellow-countrymen. As far back as August 23d, we advised our readers that—

"In such a contest as the present, every man should vote from an American position, solely and thoroughly in an American spirit, with the determination to acquit himself loyally to the Commonwealth. He should not consider what may benefit Ireland, or Greece, or Schleswig-Holstein, but what will best serve the noble country from which he derives a new existence. Still less should religious partialities determine the complexion of his vote.

"In presence of the Constitution there should be no sect, no race, no selfishness whatever. All sects and races should be one in citizenship and patriotism. Neither in the name of religion nor under the remnants of a foreign flag should the emigrants from Ireland, or any other country outside, isolate themselves within the Union. Beneath the Stars and Stripes, amongst the millions who claim it as their inviolable ensign, there should be but one heart, one mind, one arm. In politics, Irishmen should thoroughly Americanize themselves. So should Germans and Slavonians—Asiatics and Europeans—all who come here."

We are well pleased that Dr. Brownson has lent the vigor of his pen to the promulgation of these sound doctrines. There are other articles of interest and power in the Review, which we commend for perusal. J. B. Kirker.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS and the SCHOOLFELLOW, are as usual, excellent and admirably adapted to their respective readers. With regard to the former, we perceive that Messrs. Dix, Edwards & Co., the enterprising publishers, have made arrangements by which the weekly edition of that periodical will be issued coincidently with the appearance of the same in England.

We have received the Prospectus of a new Weekly Paper, to be entitled the Catholic Visitor. It is the intention of the proprietors to make it a family journal, devoted to religion, literature, poetry, arts, science, agriculture and general news. The paper will be independent of all political parties and associations. The editorial department will be conducted by an experienced gentleman of ability. Religious intelligence, foreign news, legal reports and domestic intelligence will form the leading features of the Visitor, each number of which will contain an appropriate engraving. J. A. Tiernan & C. S. Greene, South Third Street, Philadelphia, are to be the proprietors and Publishers.

Number 23 (October) of "Harper's Story Books" (The Alcove) is like each of its predecessors, a beautiful addition to the juvenile library. We really cannot commend too highly the character of the engravings in these dainty monthly vo lumes. They are drawn well, engraved well, and printed well.

MISS ESMONDE'S READING.

The announcement that this highly gifted and talented young lady would give one of her Readings at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Tuesday evening, drew together, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large and most attentive audience, who testified by their loud and enthusiastic plaudits how much they were delighted with the efforts of the fair Reader. Miss Esmonde's entertainment was indeed one of no common order. The taste displayed in her selections, together with the grace and beauty of her delivery, conferred upon her audience an intellectual treat that will long be remembered.

Miss Esmonde seems to unite, not only the keenest and truest appreciation of the author's meaning, but also identifies herself thoroughly with the spirit of the composition. On Tuesday evening she was greeted by loud and repeated bursts of applause, which evidently proceeded from the hearts of her listeners.

Among the gems of the programme, those that awakened the most enthusiasm were the "Convict Ship, a Tale of Ireland's Wrongs," by the authoress of "Fashion and Famine"—Mrs. Stephens—by whom it was written expressly for Miss Esmonde; and the "Prison Lay," by Thomas F. Meagher. There was a deep pathos in her voice as she alluded to the wrongs of her country, that caused many an eye to be wet with tears of sympathy, while many a heart throbbed with pride and pleasure, as she told them of the glories of the Geraldines. In those of her selections which were of a lighter order, Miss Esmonde was equally at home. She caused the heartiest laughter by the piquant and inimitable manner in which she delivered the mirth-provoking history of "Molly Muldoon."

These entertainments of Miss Esmonde cannot but aid the cultivation of a sound literary taste, and we trust that she will, on a future evening, find the weather more propitious. Literary Societies would do well to secure the services of this talented lady during the coming season.

Literary and Artistic News.

The musical automaton at the Apollo Rooms is a very curious affair. It is the invention of M. Van Oeckelen, a native of Holland. The figure is that of a troubadour, with cap and feather, and a huge clarionet in his grasp, which he fingers as naturally as possible. They screw him up in the back and set him going, and, when once set a-going, he goes for five minutes or so, without stopping. The manipulation of the keys by the fingers of the image is a remarkable instance of mechanical ingenuity. One set of levers operate the fingers of the right hand, and another the left, and still another turns the eyes, or rolls them up sentimentally, if one of the twenty tunes chances to be of the sentimental order. The automaton does his work handsomely, and makes a good bow.

We noticed, says the N. O. Delta, Sept. 21st, about a week since, the arrival in the city of Professor Moore, of Iowa, on his way to South America, to make a scientific exploration of the Andean regions of Equador. We have now the pleasure to note the arrival of Professor E. C. Francis, of Keokuk, Iowa, who joins Professor Moore, and will go out with him on the same mission. They expect to start on the 5th of next month, and to be occupied in their investigations about eighteen months. In addition to their zoological researches, we are informed that they intend to make instrumental measurements and examinations of some of the mountains and volcanoes of the Andes, about which little is now accurately known.

Miss Laura Keene's new theatre will be completed about the 1st of November. The contract required it to be done by the middle of October, but that has been found impossible. The walls of the building, the rear of which is on Crosby street and the entrance through an archway from Broadway, are nearly up, and the framework of the interior already in its place. The floor of the parquette will be some five feet below the curb-stone.

The True American is the name of a new journal started in Alleghany City, Pensylvania. The first number has just reached us. It is a spirited and well-written sheet, edited and owned by James J. Sweeney, who, with Buchanan and Brekinridge on his standard, gives a trenchant evidence of his democratic faith. We wish the True American success.

Mlle. Catherine Hayes has arrived in Paris to enjoy a season of repose after her unprecedentedly long journeyings in the antipodes, the two Americas and the East Indies. The fair artiste returns with a brilliant reputation and a splendid fortune. It is satisfactory to learn that neither her health nor her voice have suffered by the fatigue of travel.

A journal in competition to Charivari is announced in Paris. It will be called La Comédie. Five or six young men of the Quartier Latin are also about to bring out a new literary journal, entitled Voltaire. And yet another new Parisian journal bears the doubtful title of Personalities.

Two musical celebrities are now on their way to this country from Europe. Thalberg, the great Pianist, will arrive in the Africa, and Angri, a Contralto from the Italian Opera of London, is a passenger on the Arago. These artists will, we understand, give concerts in this country.

Mr. Philip J. Forbes, the former Librarian of the New-York Society Library, is now engaged as agent to sell shares in that Institution.

The Posthumous Memoirs of Henry Heine will soon be put to press.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Life of George Washington. By J. T. Headley. Illustrated. C. Scribner.

The Old Regime and the Revolution. By Alexis De Tocqueville, author of "Democracy in America. Translated by John Bonner.....Harper & Brothers.

Human Physiology, Statical and Dynamical; or, The Conditions and Course of the Life of Man. By John William Draper, M. D., LL.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New-York. Illustrated with nearly 300 Engravings.....Harper & Brothers

MILITARY NEWS.

PARADE AND TARGET EXCURSION OF THE COLUMBIAN ASSOCIATION.

From the Boston Daily Times.

It is well known to our citizens, that after the fiat of Governor Gardner against certain military companies in this city, the Columbian Artillery, Captain Cass, voluntarily surrendered their charter. The members thereupon formed themselves into an association called the "Columbian," and since their disbandment as a military corps, they have kept up a civic organization in all respects highly creditable to themselves as citizens, both native and adopted. Yesterday was celebrated as the annual parade and target excursion of the association, when about one hundred men appeared, one half with partial military equipments, and the remainder in citizen's dress. They were accompanied by Gilmore's Salem Brass Band, under the temporary leadership of Mr. Flagg. The following is a list of the officers of the association:—Thomas Cass, Captain; Cornelius Doherty, First Lieutenant; John White, Second Lieutenant; Michael Hooton, Third Lieutenant. James Wheelan, Esq., had the immediate command of those in citizens' dress.

About ten o'clock, A. M., after parading through several of our principal streets, the association proceeded to Liverpool wharf, where they took the steamer Mayflower, Capt. Rouell, for Long Island. Arriving at the Island, they found the Long Island House opened expressly for their reception, by Mr. O. H. Hinckley, the well known host of the Maverick House, East Boston, who, with the able co-operation of Col. Wm. Mitchell, had made the necessary preparations for the accommodation of the association.

After a hurried collation, the association proceeded to the target ground, the neck of land between the hotel and the light-house, a spot admirably adapted for the purpose. The association fired by sections, and after three shots by each man—the target at sixty paces distance—it was decided by the judges—Messrs. Wm. Murray, Thomas Sullivan, and James Wheelan—that the prizes, consisting of three heavy and beautifully wrought silver medals—should be distributed as follows:—First prize to Daniel Kelly, a veteran member of the association. Second prize to Mr. Patrick Hanley. Third prize to Mr. Thomas Harraday.

The target practice over, the association repaired to the hotel, where a bounteous dinner was soon in readiness. Captain Cass presided, and Mr. Cornelius Murphy officiated as toast-master. We regret that our limits will permit us to give but a brief outline of the interesting proceedings at the festive board.

Captain Cass, after presenting the prizes to the winners, congratulated the association upon its creditable appearance, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, and said that as they had and should conduct themselves this day, so would they be inspired to have another similar celebration, and so also would other associations of a like character be incited to follow their example. (Cheers.)

The toast-master proposed the first regular toast:—

The Columbian Association—When as a military organization, foremost to respond to the call of the authorities in protecting law and order, and when proscribed for their birth-place foremost to bury their charter with the weeds a the garden of their oppressor. (Loud cheers and music.)

Lieut. Cornelius Doherty responded, and referred to the unjust aspersions that had been cast upon the corps in consequence of a disturbance that had occurred in the same place in 1854. He denied that the Columbians were in any manner responsible for that disturbance, and said that it was owing to the unfair and unjust reports in certain partizan presses that the public received an impression unfavorable to the company. Lieut D. proceeded to speak of the patriotic spirit which always pervaded the corps, and highly complimented those members of the press who did not sympathize with their oppressors. He concluded with a sentiment in honor of the press of the United States, which was loudly applauded.

Second regular toast:—

The President of the United States—Honored as the people's choice, and as the chief magistrate who displayed such courage and ability in putting down fillibustering schemes, and protecting the industrious citizen as a free man in a free nation. (Cheering, and music.)

Mr. Wm. Murray being called upon, referred to a series of patriotic measures of the President, and after applauding the noble stand taken by the Columbians in not suffering their charter to be taken from them, concluded with a sentiment complimentary to the State of South Carolina, which was well received.

Third regular toast:—

Ireland—The land of our birth. The United States—the land of our adoption. May the latter continue to rise in national greatness, and by her just appreciation of virtue stand a model for imitation and the dread of despots; and may the former shake off the yoke of her oppressors, and be classed once more among the nations of the earth. (Rapturous cheering.)

Lieut. James Gallagher responded, and gave a sentiment in honor of the Columbian Association, which was received with cheers and music.

Fourth regular toast:—

The Press of the United States—The reflex of the People's sentiments. May America never know the want of such a Press, to scourge the enemies of peace and support the friends of virtue and good order. (Applause.)

Responded to by a member of the Boston press.

Fifth regular toast:—

The City of Boston—(Loud cheering, and music.)

Sixth regular toast:

The Memory of George Washington—The Father of his Country—the renowned Warrior and the wise Statesman. May the model Patriot's example be the beacon light to guide struggling nations to freedom.

This sentiment was received standing, in silence, the band playing a solemn dirge.

Seventh regular toast:

The Army and Navy of the United States—The two requisite weapons to defend the rights and liberties of the people. Our valiant soldiers remind us of Washington and Montgomery.

Capt. McCafferty, formerly Commander of the Bay State Artillery, but serving as private on this occasion with the Columbians, was called up, and briefly alluded to the oppressive act of Gov. Gardner in disbanding the corps he once had the honor to command. He concluded with a sentiment not at all complimentary to the despotic power that deprived so many good citizens of their just rights.

The invited guests were toasted, and remarks made by Messrs. Hanley, Glancey and others.

Capt. Cass reminded the association that the time for leaving the island was approaching; and after again referring in congratulatory terms to the highly respectable appearance and conduct of the association, and stated that they were not anxious for active State military duty, unless their country called upon them, gave—

The Day we Celebrate—Endeared to us by the most pleasing recollections, may each annual recurrence find us enjoying the pleasures of the festive board and united in the bond of brotherhood. (Loud cheering.)

Cheers were given for the Salem Brass Band, the Boston Times, Col. Mitchell, Mr. Hinckley, Dr. Darby, and others, and the company all rose from the tables, all apparently well gratified with the exercises. Before departing for the city, Mr. Jas. Darling and others sang several enlivening songs; and altogether it was an occasion to which the Columbians can recur with feelings of pride and gratification. We should state, before concluding, that Mr. Thomas Kelly, who won the first prize, being a member of the association not in military attire, modestly declined receiving the trophy, but the association unanimously insisted on it, and he therefore accepted it. Hurrah for the "Columbians!"

Montgomery Guards of New York and Philadelphia.

From the Trenton Gazette.

These distinguished companies met last week at Trenton for target practice. The prize for the best shot was a large and handsome silver medal, manufactured for the occasion, at the joint expense of the two companies.

The New York company arrived at the State street depot at half-past ten o'clock, and were received by the Sarsfield Guards, Capt. Traverse. They numbered twenty-seven muskets, and were accompanied by Shelton's brass band of twenty-one pieces. They were escorted by the Guards to the South Trenton depot, where the Philadelphia company arrived at half-past eleven o'clock. They were accompanied by the Artillery Band of Philadelphia, with thirteen peices.

The three companies formed, and presented quite an imposing sight—the Philadelphia company numbering 41, the New York 27, and the Trenton company 21 muskets—making, with the musicians, a total of 128 men on parade. They then marched out to Locust Hill, on the Milham road where the visitors were welcomed to Trenton by F. S. Mills, Esq. After a collation, prepared by the Sarsfield Guards, had been properly disposed of, the target shooting commenced.

The prize was won by John McLaughlin, of Philadelphia, whose string of three balls measured but ten inches. The next best string measured twenty-four inches, and was shot by John Murphy. The prize medal was presented on behalf of the companies by F. S. Mills, Esq., and was received by Capt. Harvey, of Philadelphia, on behalf of the winner. The total number of shots in the target was fifty-five, of which thirty-five were fired by the Philadelphia company. There was one shot in the bull's eye fired by John McLaughlin.

The prize having been delivered, the collation finished, and the speeches made, the companies took up their line of march for Trenton—marched up State street to Calhoun's lane—countermarched down State to Warren—thence to their quarters in South Trenton, where they were entertained by Lieut. Gibben, of the Irish Volunteers. Both companies left from the State street depot by half-past six o'clock lines for New York and Philadelphia, after a day of enjoyment, marred by no accident.

Guyon Cadets, Co. D., 9th Regiment N. Y. S. M.

At a special meeting of this company held at their armory on Wednesday evening Oct. 1st, Capt Murphy in the chair, the following preamble and resolution were moved by private J. Cullen, seconded by private P. Morris, and carried unanimously.

Whereas, We have learned with deep regret, that our worthy and esteemed Lieutenant Peter Halpin is about to leave us, to recruit his health in the classic plains of his native land,

Therefore, resolved, We the rank and file of this company cannot part with him without placing on record, our appreciation of his moral worth as a soldier and a man. Whether it be to promote the interests of Christianity, the cause of Fatherland, or individual benevolence, his liberality is alike commendable and generous. By his unassuming manner, and gentlemanly deportment as an officer, he has merited our warmest esteem, and well-wishes for his future prosperity. Ever ready to respond to the call of duty, we will hail his return to our ranks with pleasure and pride. We fervently hope an all-wise providence will, ere long restore him to health, and return him safe to the bosom of his family.

LETTER FROM NICARAGUA.

On Board the Tennessee,
Sept. 21st, 1856.

We expect to land to-morrow, and as I shall not have any time to write by this ship when we land, I take this opportunity to give you a short account of our trip. On our getting clear of the jurisdiction of the United States, we mustered all hands on deck, and enrolled the men in four companies. Charles A. Walters, Company A, one of the party arrested on board the Northern Light, Captain Rachielwitz, Company B, Captain Russell, Company C, Captain Grant, Company D, of British enlistment notoriety. Each of the gentlemen took command of their companies and marched them to the quarters assigned them on board.

The second day from New-York, we spoke the bark Orlando, of Boston. On coming alongside, we ran up the Nicaraguan flag, and gave three cheers for Walker and the Republic. I am sorry to have to state that we lost one of our men. It is supposed he accidentally fell overboard. His name was Emile Sohman. On Thursday, a meeting of the officers was held to elect a major. The choice fell on Captain Walters.

A most interesting ceremony was performed this day (Sunday); the baptizing of a young fillibuster, by the Rev. Mr. Deal. The Nicaraguan flag was held over the little fellow by the four captains. By general consent he was called William Walker, and adopted as the Child of the Regiment. Capt. Wilkins, who is well known in New-Orleans as an agent of General Walker, and the lady of Capt. Rachielwitz were the sponsors on the occasion.

I have nothing more to mention at present beyond this; that all the men are in good health and spirits, and long for the day when they are to try their strength and courage against the Costa Ricans. I will write as soon as I get to Granada. It is now late, and as to-morrow will be a busy day, I shall wish you good night. Ever yours most truly,

M. F. Nagle.

LETTER FROM BOSTON.

"Association Rooms,"
164 Hanover Street, Boston, Oct. 1st, 1856.

Thomas F. Meagher, Esq.

Sir:—I enclose you a report of the target excursion of our "Columbian Association," the members of which were proscribed some two years ago, by Governor Gardiner, from serving in our State militia. Since their disbandment they have been known as the Columbian Military and Literary Association, and have maintained a splendid Hall and Library. We have military exercises every night. Our Association consists of three hundred members, at present, and we daily receive recruits. Knowing that your sympathies are cordially with us, I feel it my duty to inform you of how and what we are doing.

Yours respectfully, Thomas Cass, President.

American News.

A short time ago, says the Pennsylvanian, a large gang of negroes belonging to Baltimore, left that city on a pic-nic excursion. On their return, two Irishmen said something to them at which they took offence, when a number of the negroes got out of the omnibuses and commenced an assault upon them. Several citizens who saw this, went to the assistance of the Irishmen, when the whole of them were attacked by the blacks. A public house near was then attacked by the woolly heads, and the keeper severely beaten. Seeing a liberty pole erected by the Democrats, in the vicinity, the negroes gave three cheers for Fremont, pulled down the American banner, and trampled it in the dust beneath their feet. If these things can be done while Fremont is only in nomination, what atrocity may not be expected should he be elected?

The accounts from the West, represent the present crop of tobacco as being meagre beyond former years, and the crop in Virginia is a small one. The editor of the Marlboro Gazette, who has made diligent inquiry as to the quantity of tobacco, the growth of this year in Maryland, says he is assured that it is far below the average yield. In a few sections of Prince George's county, the crop is fair—in other places not one half as large as usual.

Charleston, Sept. 30, 1856.—W. R. Taber, Esq., editor of the Charleston Mercury, was killed on the 20th ult., in a duel with Edward McGrath, on the third fire. The death of Mr. Taber, is probably owing, directly or indirectly, to a series of very personal and bitter attacks which, within a few days past, have appeared in that paper, signed "A Nullifier," and applied to the Hon. A. J. McGrath, who is up for office, in place of Wm. Aiken, who declined a re-election. The Mr. McG. who fought with Mr. Taber, is a brother of the candidate for Congress.

B. B. Botts, Esq., son of Hon. J. M. Botts, has published a card in the Richmond Whig, denouncing Mr. Pryor, editor of the Enquirer, in severe terms. Mr. Botts says nothing but his physical incapacity, occasioned by rheumatic attacks, has prevented him from inflicting personal chastisement on Mr. Pryor. He then proclaims that Mr. Pryor's conduct towards his (Botts') father to have been brutal, ruffianly and cowardly to the last degree, and invites him to a duel. He declares Pryor to be a bully, a blackguard, a posted coward and a poltroon, and uses language that must cause a meeting.

The widow of Henry Clay publishes a letter in defence of her son, James B., against the animadversions of the Louisville Journal and other papers. Her letter purports to have been written without the knowledge of Mr. Clay, and emphatically denies the rumor that there was a difference between the venerable statesman and his son.

The Fayetteville (Tenn.) Observer says an abolitionist named McKee, was discovered prowling around in that locality last week. He had been tampering with the negroes thereabouts, trying to induce them to run off; but they, more honest than he, exposed him, and forthwith he was treated to a free ride on a rail, a bath in the creek, and a respectable blacking, after which he was started off North.

A farmer in the town of Howard, Winnebago County, Illinois, raised the present year, 3,200 bushels of wheat on eighty acres, being forty bushels to the acre. Another raised 405 bushels on nine acres; being forty-five bushels to the acre. This was spring wheat; the kind called the Canada club wheat.

A convention of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war and the war of 1812, or their descendants, is called to assemble at Bemis' Heights, Saratoga county, on the anniversary of the surrender of Burgoyne's army, the 17th October, 1777.

The London Advertiser says: Mr. John Smith, of Andover, Massachusetts, to show his regard for this, (Brechin, in Wales,) his native place, has pledged himself to give the sum of £1,500 for education, 500 for building and £1000 for endowment.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher "had some words," which resulted in separate beds for the night, during which the lady hung herself by the bed-clothes from her own chamber window, and was found dead. They lived in Chicago, and Mr. F. was a teamster, and somewhat addicted to drink.

Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, recently officiated at St. Paul's Church, Burlington, assisted by three sons, in orders, one being a minister and the others deacons.

The President has fixed the two new Land Offices for Minnesota as follows: for the North-West District, at Ojibwa, and and for the North-East District, at Buchanan.

The consumption of lager beer in the United States is becoming enormous. It is stated that over 60,000 barrels will be manufactured this year in Milwaukie alone.

On the day of the Franklin Statue Inauguration, not less than 100,000 people went into Boston on rails.

A letter from Marlon, Texas, reports that A. E. Moore, Esq., his wife, and an adopted daughter, twelve years old, were deliberately shot on the 26th ult., by some cold blooded assassin.

City News.

At the immense meeting of the Democratic mercantile and commercial interests of New-York, to hear ex-Governor Floyd, of Virginia, on Thursday, October the 2d, in Wall street, an unlucky reporter of the Tribune, somewhat noted for the oddity of the commodity that covers his head, was the subject of much merriment and almost of a serious row. The Daily Times thus reports the miseries to which his brother in short-hand was subjected. Having left the stand, the Tribune reporter "had proceeded some distance up Wall street, on his way to his office, when a number of the roughs, on the outside of the meeting, made some remarks upon the 'enlarged peculiarities' of his hat. They differed inopinion as to its size and style. Some said it was a sugar-loaf crown, while others as loudly asserted that it had a 'bulge.' Some said the brim was three feet wide; while others were equally positive that it was not more than eighteen inches wide. The discussion as to the width of the brim soon took a wide range, and the desire for a personal examination increased in a proportionate degree. Those who didn't like it knocked in the crown, poked it over his eyes, and otherwise treated the hat in a very disrespectful manner. The excitement increased. Having spoiled the crown of the hat, they began to jostle the wearer. The excitement was now serious. The people retired from Gov. Floyd's address, and ran to see what was going on. The hat and the reporter formed the centre of a vast mass that swayed to and fro, carrying the reporter with it. There was now some danger that the reporter might be injured, although until this time the danger sustained was evidently only in consequence of an imprudent desire for fun." He, however, escaped with a fragment of the sad but unconscious cause of his misfortunes.

Shortly after nine o'clock, on the night of the 2nd inst., a fire broke out at the southeast corner of Barclay and Washington street, occupying lots Nos. 80, 82, 84 and 86 on the former street, and Nos. 217, 219 and 221 on the latter, owned by Christian H. Lilienthal, tobacconist. The building was new, and in an unfinished state; seven stories were erected, and the eighth so far advanced that it was in contemplation to lay the roof early next week. The total loss will not fall far short of $75,000, only a portion of which is covered by insurance.

President Pierce arrived in this city about ten o'clock on the night of the 30th September, by the New-Jersey Central Railroad. He was met at the depot at Jersey City by Police Justice Connolly of New-York and Mr. Libenon, who accompanied him across the ferry and to his quarters at the Astor House. Shortly after the President's arrival at the Astor, he was waited upon by John Cochrane, John McKeon, J. R. Broadhead, Postmaster Fowler, and others, who greeted him warmly, and welcomed him to the city. The President was accompanied by Sydney Webster (his Private Secretary), Gen. Anderson and J. D. Hoover. He left by next morning's boat, on his route to Concord.

An Association has been formed in this city, styled "The Self-Sustaining Humanitary Institute." Its object is to dispense with intermediates, or middle men, and bring the producer and consumer together, thus saving the purchaser many dollars that are now paid to an unnecessary agent.

Mary Mount, a native of Ireland, and aged 78 years, was found dead in bed on the 30th ult., at her residence, No. 72 Cannon-street. Dr. George B. Bouton, who made the post-mortem, was of opinion that death was caused by excessive use of intoxicating drinks.

John Deary, an Irish laborer, aged 46 years, was killed on the 30th ult., at Bloomingdale, by the falling of the chimney of a house about which he was at work.

The parishioners of the United parishes of Moira and Maghera-lin have presented a handsome purse, well filled with sovereigns, as a testimonial of affection to their pastor, the Rev. Patrick M'Key, P. P.

MARRIED.

In Chicago, on the 20th September, at St. Mary's Church, by the Rev. P. Y. Morris, Francis Murphy, Esq., of Dubuque, to Miss Eliza A. Kehoe, of Chicago.

OBITUARY.

Died, on Saturday morning, October 4th, William Chambers Cotter, aged 2 years and 7 months, only son of James and Bellemira Cotter, 224 Sixth Avenue.

A bright-souled, merry-hearted, beauteous child, though young in years, his death has caused a pang to many a loving heart.

At Syracuse, on Wednesday, September 24, at the residence of her father, No. 39 Butternut street, of consumption, which she bore with Christian fortitude and resignation, Helena Anne Carroll, aged 20 years, 5 months and 2 days. May her soul rest in peace—Amen.

Irish American and Cork papers please copy.

Mr. Leahy's Advertisement which will be found on the last page of the News, faithfully recounts his business.

The young men of East Brooklyn should not overlook the advantages they can derive by attending the "Cosmopolitan Literary Club," and Mr. Coleman's Evening School.

The Board of Managers of the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, respectfully announce that the Annual Festival for the Benefit of the Institution under their care, will take place at the Academy of Music, 14th street, on Tuesday the 14th of October. There will be two series of performances as last year. The afternoon performance will commence at 2½ o'clock, P. M.; the evening performance at 7½.

The entertainments for the occasion will be under the direction of John Brougham, Esq., who has kindly volunteered his valuable services.

ATTENTION!

To Military Companies.

BEAUTIFUL EMBLEMATIC WREATHS AND BOUQUETS,

For Target Excursions, constantly on sale, or made to order at the shortest notice, and at any price.

Ladies about making a presentation to their military friends are most respectfully invited to make a visit to the old established Book Store 366 Bowery one door above 4th Street.

Robert Coddington, Proprietor.

N. B.—Always on sale a fine assortment of Invitation Note Paper and Envelopes, Books on Military Tactics, Works on Ireland.
The Irish News for sale as soon as published every week. oct11 4t

Daguerreotypes.

FACTS

THAT NEED NO MARKING.

Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. Fredricks, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of several of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. Gurney, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After succeesfully following his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

Charles D. Fredricks, late Gurney & Fredricks, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

Facts which are Known.—Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of business, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhibited. Those desiring Photograps, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M.,

Charles D. Fredricks,
Late Gurney & Fredricks, No. 585 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.
oct11 3mos

Special Notices.

"Musical." A young Lady lately connected with the profession in Europe where she studied under the first and best masters is desirous of giving to a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who will kindly favor her with a trial may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trenor, 90 South 8th street, Brooklyn, E. D. 3mos

Ladies returning from the Country wishing their supply of Shoes for the fall season, can obtain Ladies' Gaiter Boots from 12s. to 20s., Slippers, Ties and Buskins, from 6s. to 10s., India Rubber Boots and Shoes of all kinds, with Boy's, Misses and Children's Boots and Shoes of all kinds and prices, at
sept27 4t J. B. Miller & Co's., 134 Canal street, (West.)

The Fashion of the Season in Gentlemen's Hats was introduced by Genin on the 1st inst. New-York and the Union have for years accepted the Quarterly issues of Genin as the governing styles of the day, and his Fall Hat for 1856 will be found to possess the highest claims to the admiration of men of taste and judgment.
sept27 3t Genin, No. 214 Broadway, opposite St. Paul's Church.

Doctor M. E. Foy, Surgeon, has removed his office to 170 West Nineteenth street, between 7th and 8th Avenues. Office Hours from 7 to 9 A. M., 1 to 3, and 7 to 9 P. M.
☞ To accommodate his patients in the Eastern part of the city, Dr. F. will attend daily from 2 to 3 P. M., at Ryerson's drug store, 185 Avenue B, between 11th and 12th streets. Midwifery Engagements promptly attended to. Medicine and advice to the poor, gratis. sept13 3mos

Furniture.—F. Fitzsimmons respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial Furniture, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. oct11 tf

Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer Baltic, will close at this office on Saturday, the 11th day of Oct., at 10½ o'clock, A. M.
Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

The Great National Political

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

Has already reached a sale unprecedented in the annals of political literature, and the cry is still for more. In order to meet the demand, the publisher has just issued the Sixth Edition of 16,000 copies. This map contains portraits of each of the candidates for President and Vice-President, their letters of acceptance, platforms of the respective parties, &c. Size 34 by 40 inches—showing the territorial boundaries, and a great amount of statistics interesting to all parties. Price, in pocket form, 50 cents; in sheet form 25 cents. Copies sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Agents wanted. Address A. Ranney, Publisher, No. 195 Broadway, New-York. 2t4oc

DR. SHANAHAN,

SURGEON AND ACCOUCHEUR,

Can be consulted at his Office, No. 169 West 38th street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, New-York. oct11 4t

WM. IRWIN,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 174 Bowery, opposite Delancey street, New-York.
oct11 Quick Sales and Small Profits. 3mos

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

This Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellectual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

Mr. Wallack will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," Miss Agnes Robertson, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,
WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	50 cents	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,

Opposite Niblo's Garden,

A New Extravaganza entitled

Times in the Moon,

"Written expressly for Buckley's Opera Troupe"

Preceding which—

ETHIOPIAN MINSTRELSY.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 3-4 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

LECTURE, BY JAMES ROCHE,

At the Stuyvesant Institute.

Subject:—Galway—Its two Sieges—Its Position for an European American Packet Station,

On October 20th, at 8 o'clock, P. M. Tickets 25 cents. For sale at this Office; Col. Butler's, 417 Pearl street; Captain Corcoran's, 42 Prince street; Haverty's Book-store, and Dunnigan's Book-store.

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL

OF THE

EMMET LIFE GUARD.

ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,

At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.

Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the Guard and at this office.

☞ The Life Guard pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by by them to produce the best Ball of the season.

Capt. P. T. Lynch, Chairman.

A. O'Toole, Sec'y.
James Watson, Treasurer. oct11

Mechanic's Hibernian Institute.—Lecture.—On the Adopted Citizens of America, at Hope Chapel, 718 Broadway, on Tuesday, October 14th, by John M. Harrington. Tickets 25 cents.

Publications.

IVISON & PHINNEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

Educational—English, French, Music, etc.

TO TEACHERS, LITERARY INSTITUTIONS, AND ALL ENGAGED IN EDUCATION.

IVISON & PHINNEY, No. 321 Broadway, New-York, publish

THE AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL SERIES,

The result of 25 years' successful experience of its authors and publishers in preparing School Text Books believed to excel in their progressive gradation; attractiveness and adaptation to the young; pure and elevated moral character; conformity to the very highest literary authorities in each department; their combination of all modern improvements with the excellences of the past; their practical adaptation to the ascertained wants of scholars and teachers; their superior mechanical execution, as regards, distinct type, white paper, pleasing and appropriate engravings, and tasteful and durable binding; and lastly, as a result of all, the comparative ease and pleasure with which they are taught and learned.

The Series includes Sanders' New Readers, Speller, &c. Thomson's Improved Arithmetics. Wilson's Histories. Various Text Books in the Sciences. Fasquelle's Complete French Series. Woodbury's Complete German Series. Bradbury's, Hasting's, and Taylor's Music Books, &c.

Ivison and Phinney send their Descriptive Catalogues prepaid, containing opinions of eminent teachers who have tested these books, also critical reviews from able literary journals. Liberal terms to TEACHERS desiring to examine or adopt the books, &c.

FASQUELLE'S FRENCH COURSE;

OR, NEW METHOD OF LEARNING TO READ, WRITE, AND SPEAK THE French Language,

On the plan of WOODBURY'S POPULAR "METHOD WITH GERMAN." By L. Fasquelle, LL.D., Prof. Mod. Languages, University of Michigan. 84th Edition. Price $1 25.

This system is highly commended by President Allen, Girard College; Prof. Schmidt, Columbia College; The National Magazine, Bibliotheca Sacra, Methodist Quarterly, Harper's Magazine, &c., and by many distinguished Professors and successful Practical Teachers, who testify to its superiority over the systems of Ollendorf, Manesca, Robertson, &c., as uniting the merits of the old and new—the theory with the practice. See Ivison & Phinney's Descriptive Catalogue of their American Educational Series, sent prepaid. The French Series includes:

I—Fasquelle's New French Course, 500pp	$1 25
II—Fasquelle's Colloquial French Reader	75
III—Fasquelle's Telemaque	62
IV—Fasquelle's Napoleon (Dumas)	75
V—Fasquelle's Racine	75

These books have all copious notes and references to "The French Course."

Single copies sent pre-paid for above prices; and to TEACHER'S at half price, for examination, with a view to introduction, if approved.

O'DONNELL'S SYSTEM OF PENMANSHIP,

In 7 Numbers. By M. J. O'Donnell, Principal of Ward School No. 5, New-York. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 coarse hand; Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7, fine hand. Price 12½ cents each.

The copies have been newly engraved on copper, in the highest style of art, and unqualified satisfaction and approbation have been expressed wherever the books have been adopted. Teachers who have used them almost unanimously accord to the system the merit of being "the very best extant."

Extract from Testimonial of Joseph McKeen, LL. D., Late Superintendent of Common Schools, New-York.

* A beautiful style of Penmanship, and remarkable success has been manifested wherever Mr. O'Donnell's books and method have been used.

From Henry Kiddell, Esq., Assistant Superintendent of Common Schools, New-York.

* The system by its brevity and simplicity, is calculated to impart to the scholars, in a very short time, a clear and practical knowledge of the principles of correct penmanship.

Hundreds of testimonials have been received which testify to the excellence of this system.

Single copies sent by mail, pre-paid, on receipt of 12 cents in stamps; and for 6 cents to TEACHERS for examination, with a view to introduction if approved.

THREE NEW MUSIC BOOKS!

For Choirs, Glee-Clubs, Families, Institutes, Schools, &c.

BRADBURY—TAYLOR—CONVERSE.

Ready Oct. 10th,

SACRED MUSIC,

THE CELESTINA; Or, TAYLOR'S NEW SACRED MINSTREL.

The New Book for the Season

Of 1856-7, containing, besides the usual variety of New, Original, and Selected Tunes, a full set of Chants for the Episcopal Church Service. By V. C. Taylor, author of "The Golden Lyre," "Choral Anthems," &c. Price 75 cents.

SECULAR.

THE MUSICAL BOUQUET AND INSTITUTE CHOIR.

BY WM. B. BRADBURY AND CHAS. C. CONVERSE.

A new higher class Music Book, for Academies and social singing in families and societies, arranged in the form of quartettes, trios, duets, and songs, with piano accompaniments, and a complete course of instruction with new exercises. Price 63 cents.

JUVENILE.

BRADBURY'S NEW SABBATH SCHOOL MUSIC AND HYMN BOOK.

The Sabbath School Choir. Price 25 cents.

The admirers of Mr. Bradbury's previous works will here find superior books of similar design and scope embodying the results of his riper experience, taste and research, and a tasteful collection of new and original music.

The plan of this work is similar to that which proved so successful in the author's popular "S. S. Melodies."

Either work will be sent pre-paid on receipt of price; and to Teachers and Choirs, &c., as specimens to use in classes, if approved, on receipt of 60 cents, 40 cents, and 18 cents, respectively.

I. & P., continue to publish the previous Musical Works—Sacred, Secular and Juvenile, of Bradbury, Taylor, Hastings and others, of which Lists will be sent on application.

Single Copies of any of I. & P.'s Books sent pre-paid on receipt of the price; and of their Music or Text Books to TEACHERS for examination and introduction into classes, if satisfactory, one half the price to cover postage, &c.

Special discounts made for first introduction.

A Descriptive Book Catalogue of I. & P.'s American Educational Series, &c., of one hundred pages embracing Prices, Illustrations, Reviews, and Critical Notices, by eminent Literary authorities; also terms to Teachers, Schools, &c., will be sent without charge and post-paid, to any Clergyman, Teacher, or person, interested in Education, when address is sent to

Ivison & Phinney,
321 Broadway, New-York.
oct11 1t

IS COL. FREMONT A CATHOLIC.

We find the following letter from Mr. McMasters, the editor of the N. Y. Freeman's Journal, in a Western (Columbus, O.) paper called the Capital City Fact:

Office of the New York Freeman's Journal,
Friday, Sept. 5, 1856.

Sir :—No such article as you refer to has appeared in the Freeman's Journal, nor would I admit it, even to injure the prospects of the candidate of so bad a party as the Black Republicans, because the religion of Mr. Fremont, if he has any left, has nothing to do with his claims for office—or should have nothing to do with it at least.

What is more to the purpose, is the personal veracity of Mr. Fremont. If you can get any one to induce him to say, over his own signature, what he seems to authorize his friends to say for him, viz: that he has never professed to be a Catholic, then I will brand him publicly as a liar, as I know the whole story of his life in Washington, and know that, daily and for years, he professed to be a Catholic, and nothing but a Catholic. That he professed to be so when he was married. That he avowed himself such to his brother officers in the army, and to men in civil life—to Protestants and Catholics who I know and could cite as proof. But J. C. Fremont dare not, over his own name, deny a fact that I can have sworn to by twenty distinct affidavits of highly respectable men and women, priests and lay, Catholic and Protestant, viz: that for twenty years he professed himself a Catholic, and denied having any other belief in any other religion.

A man who will lie about a serious fact in his own history ought to be denounced, if he pretends to run for President, even of so mean a coalition as Black Republicans and Choctaw K. N's. If Colonel Fremont will assert that he has never given himself out as a Catholic, I will clap the hot iron on him quick and sure.

At the same time allow me to say that if you are a Democrat, I am ashamed of your seeking to hurt even Fremont, bad as he is, on a religious question. But, if you are a Hindoo, it is perfectly in keeping with the rest of your principles.

Yours, &c., J. A. McMasters,
Editor and Proprietor of Freeman's Journal.

On this letter the Day Book says :—

We publish a letter from Mr. McMasters, editor of the Freeman's Journal, of this city, in regard to the position which Mr. John C. Fremont occupies before the public in regard to his religion. He has denied, time and again, to clergymen and laymen, that he is, or ever has been, a Catholic, yet Mr. McMasters challenges him to say so over his own signature, as he will thereupon prove him a liar! The matter has now come down to a serious issue. The public generally are not so much interested to know what Mr. Fremont's religion is, as they are to know whether he has been guilty of intentional and wilful deception. Some of Mr. Fremont's warmest friends now doubt his honesty, and nothing will satisfy them but a direct statement from him. It is really a most unfortunate position for a man aspiring to the office of the Chief Magistrate of twenty-four millions of people. The letter of Mr. McMasters, however, is a stinging epistle, and the Fremont men can no longer laugh or ridicule the matter out of countenance. Let us know whether Mr. Fremont is a man of truth or not. Either Mr. McMasters or Mr. Fremont has told a glaring, unscrupulous lie!

The Daily Times calls on Mr. McMasters to come out with his proof and not to wait for a letter from Mr. Fremont. It says: "If he (Mr. McMasters) is not the veriest sneak that ever lived he will waive this condition and bring forward his affidavits."

WAS HENRY CLAY A HIGHWAY ROBBER?

From the Union.

In the National Intelligencer, Mr. John Barney, whom we take for a Know-Nothing Whig, is permitted to say of the Ostend Manifesto and Mr. Buchanan :

"The principles there asserted by him are those of the highway robber, when he asserts it a duty, if Spain refuses to sell Cuba, that we must take possession, because necessary to our self-preservation."

Rather than accept Mr. Barney's version of the Ostend manifesto, let us quote the precise words of that instrument upon the subject in review. They are as follows :

"After we shall have offered Spain a price for Cuba far beyond its present value, and this shall have been refused, it will then be time to consider the question—Does Cuba, in the possession of Spain, seriously endanger our internal peace and the existence of our Union? Should this question be answered in the affirmative, then, by every law, human and divine, we shall be justified in wresting it from Spain, if we possess the power; and this, upon the very same principle that would justify an individual in tearing down the burning house of his neighbor, if there were no other means of preventing the flames from destroying his own house. Under such circumstances, we ought neither to count the cost nor regard the odds which Spain might enlist against us."

Now, let us learn whether this sentiment is peculiar to Mr. Buchanan and his associates in the promulgation of that manifesto, or whether they are not the sentiments of great statesmen in both the great political parties into which the republic has been for many years divided on political subjects. In the "Life and Speeches of Henry Clay," by Mallory, volume first, pages 207 and 208, may be found the following passages from Mr. Clay's defence of President Madison's seizure of West Florida :

"It cannot be too often repeated, that if Cuba on the one hand, and Florida on the other, are in the possession of a foreign maritime power, the immense extent of country belonging to the United States, and watered by streams discharging themselves in the Gulf of Mexico, &c., &c., are placed at the mercy of that power.

* * * * * *

I have no hesitation in saying, that if a parent country will not or cannot maintain its authority in a colony adjacent to us, and there exists in it a state of misrule and disorder, menacing our peace, and if, moreover, such colony, by passing into the hands of any other power, would become dangerous to the integrity of the Union, and manifestly tend to the subversion of our laws, we have a right, upon the eternal principle of self-preservation, to lay hold upon it. This principle, alone, independent of any title, would warrant our occupation of West Florida."

Upon what plea is Mr. Clay to be pronounced innocent by those who denounce Mr. Buchanan in terms so charitable and so dignified?

The engine depot of the various railroads at Atalanta, in Georgia, has been destroyed by fire. Loss $100,000.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

The jolly hirelings of the New-York Herald, says the Belfast (Me.) Journal, made a statement that there are but five Buchanan papers of any account in Pennsylvania, whereupon the Easton Argus publishes a list of sixty printed in English, and twenty-two in German, which all go for Buchanan.

William Carey Jones, son-in-law of Col. Benton, and consequently a kind of brother-in-law of Fremont, publishes a letter in the Pennsylvanian of Friday, which shows that he considers his country's interests paramount to family ties or personal friendship. Mr. Jones is an ardent supporter of James Buchanan. In regard to Fremont it may be said that those who know him best, stand farthest aloof from him.

At a meeting for public discussion in Wilmot's District, Penn., a delegation of 100 Fremonters asked to be received on the Democratic side, and went over and delivered their banners into the hands of the Buchanan men!!

A large number of the most prominent and influential old line Whigs of California are supporting Buchanan. Among them, we observe the name of Jos. G. Baldwin, Esq., author of "Flush Times in Alabama," and "Party Leaders," and the leading editor of the San Francisco Herald, the only paper in that city which opposed the Vigilance Committee. A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, in speaking of this gentleman says: "He has employed his pen in this crisis with wonderful power and effect."

Amongst our files of American papers to hand, says the Limerick (Ireland) Observer, we have the New-York Irish News (T. F. Meagher's paper), and the Boston Pilot to the 30th ult., both of which quote largely from us. It appears from both those influential journals that the powerful Irish party in the United States support Mr. Buchanan for the Presidency, a fact which we commend to the notice of the Irish journals at home, who are writing up Colonel Fremont as warmly as if their support or opposition signified a straw to any of the candidates, or could influence the election in the most distant manner.

A new feature has been introduced into political meetings at Wheeling, Va. At the conclusion of a discussion which recently took place near that city, a number of beautiful young ladies appeared upon the speakers' stand, and sung two songs in favor of Buchanan."

Hon. S. D. Ingham, of Pennsylvania, has "come out" against the Democracy. The N. Y. Day Book says, this Ingham was one of the first Cabinet of Gen. Jackson, who quarrelling about some petticoat question, was dismissed by the Old Hero, and who has since sunk into oblivion. It is over twenty-six years since this Ingham was dismissed from the Democratic party.

The N. Y. Daily News, already a bright and spirited sheet, has been enlarged. This betokens a steady growth and increased popularity.

The Journal of Commerce also announces a large accession to its daily subscribers, giving it now a circulation of about 7,000. These facts show that Democratic principles are popular, and that the people are determined to support the papers which uphold their interests.

The News asks, why was Bennett so tender-footed, when he published Thomas Addis Emmet's letter to Rufus King? He left out a note that was appended to that letter in allusion to Sir John Temple. See the American Citizen, published in 1807, by Dennison and Chatham, now in the City Library. There is an asterisk, near the name of Sir John, and the note at the bottom of the page explains what Mr. Emmet meant by "The caprice of fortune." The note reads thus: "Mr. Rufus King in early life was a servant to, and wore the livery of Sir John Temple, a near relation of Mr. Emmet."

GOVERNOR CLARKE IN CANADA.

Governor Clarke has been in Canada. Among many addresses presented to him was one from the St. Patrick's Society of Kingston, which, with the Governor's reply, we give from the Kingston Herald.

To His Excellency Myron H. Clarke, Governor of the State of New-York.

The St. Patrick's Society of the City of Kingston beg respectfully to offer you its cordial welcome to Canada.

Representing the Irishmen of this city, the Society would be remiss in its duty if it did not tender its respect to one filling your distinguished position in the Empire State of the neighboring Union; for the Society cannot forget that the United States, and particularly that portion of which you are the chief head, have for years afforded an asylum to our exiled countrymen.

It has, however, to respectfully express its deep regret that in some parts of the Union within the past few years, a spirit of hostility has been evoked against our countrymen. It has faith, however, in the acknowledged justice and integrity of the American character, and confidently anticipates the check of so great an evil. We believe that the United States will perceive, with the mother country, that the valor and patriotism of Irishmen have been and will continue to be as a right arm of power to the Empire.

The Society desires that you will convey to Mrs. Clarke and family the assurance of its respect, with the hope that their stay in this Canadian city will be agreeable to them, and that they will take back to the seat of your Excellency's Government pleasant reminiscences of their visit to us.

J. O'Reilly,
Pres't S. P. Society.

Kingston, 25th September, 1856.

REPLY.

Mr. President and Gentlemen :

It affords me great pleasure to meet you at this time, and I return you my sincere thanks for the kind expressions with which you have addressed me.

The sons of the Emerald Isle form no inconsiderable portion of my constituency, and I bear cheerful testimony to their patriotism and good conduct as adopted citizens. 'Tis true a fleeting prejudice against them has lately sprung up in the United States; but I am happy in believing that it is again subsiding as rapidly as it arose.

And I may remark that the party of proscription to which you have alluded, has already abandoned to a great extent its original platform, and now relies on quite a different issue.

With a Constitution recognizing on every page the great doctrine of Equal Rights, it is not possible that such an anomalous state of things can long endure among our people.

I shall carry with me, on leaving this hospitable city, the memory of this honor you have done me, as among the pleasantest incidents of my visit.

Accept my cordial acknowledgments for the personal good will you have manifested in your very friendly address.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

August 28, at the Church of the Conception, Marlborough street, Dublin, Anthony Metcalf, of Ballyline Park, county Wicklow, to Mary, daughter of David Morgan, of Liverpool.

September 17, at York street church, Kingstown, John Kyle, of Cork, Hon. East India Company's Service, to Mary, daughter of the late James Morrow, of Crevagh, Dungannon.

September 18, at the Church of the Conception, Marlborough street, Dublin, J. J. Fitzpatrick, son of P. Fitzpatrick, of Ballinakill, Queen's County, to Columba, daughter of the late P. Hart, of Watling street, Dublin.

September 16, in St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Major A. R. Garrett, of the 46th Regiment, to Elizabeth Harriet, daughter of the late Colonel King, for many years on the staff of the army in Ireland.

September 16, at Glasnevin church, the Rev. William West, of Chittoe, Wiltshire, to Alice Cordelia, daughter of R. Mallett, C. E., of Delville, county Dublin.

September 13, at Birkenhead, J. Green, of Chester, to Jane Elizabeth, daughter of the late T. Haslam, of Dublin.

July 23, at Georgetown, John F. Caulfield, son of James P. Caulfield, of North Great George's street Dublin, to Philipa, relict of Colonel Bibb.

June 18, at St. Kilda, Australia, Edward B. W. Sandwell, Solicitor, of Melbourne, to Elizabeth, daughter of John Kidd, of Rutland square, Dublin.

September 16, at Glanmire, Richard Townsend Gray, late Captain in the 50th Regiment, son of the Rev. R. D. Gray, of Myrtle Hill, county Down, to Jane Alicia, daughter of the Rev. W. R. Nash, Rector of Kilbonane, county Cork.

September 16, at Holycross, John Lecky Phelps, to Georgianana, daughter of Major Robert H. Maunsell, of Beakstown House, county Tipperary.

September 11, in Limerick, George, only son of J. Belshaw, of London, to Mary, only daughter of the late R. Tuthill, of Limerick.

September 9, at Queenstown, the Rev. Francis Hopkins, Curate of Ballycotton, to Susanna, daughter of the late J. Wherland, of Cork.

September 9, at Ennisnagg, William G. Turner, late Lieutenant in the 26th King's Own Borderers, to Sarah, daughter of the late T. Hartford, of Kilkenny.

September 11, at Castleconnell, Richard Maunsell, son of Joseph G. Maunsell, of Limerick, to Frances, relict of Henry Bailey, and daughter of the late Richard M. Yielding, of Belview, county Limerick.

September 11, in Galway, the Rev. James Lancaster, Rector of Kiltennel, county Wexford, to Anne, daughter of the late James O'Hara, of Lenaboy, and granddaughter of the late Archbishop of Tuam.

September 11, in Armagh, J. M. Shaw, of Belfast, to Emily Maria, daughter of J. M'Kinstry, of Armagh.

September 11, at Rutland, county Carlow, Hardy Eustace, of Castlemore, to Anna, daughter of John D. Duckett, of Duckett's Grove.

September 9, at Ayr, William H. Sproull, Solicitor, of Belfast, to Bonnella, daughter of the late A. Macdowal, of Nether Cullean, Ayrshire.

September 11, in Nenagh, Peter B. Cooke, Ensign in the Tipperary Light Infantry, to Kate Mary, daughter of the late John Devane, of Nenagh.

September 12, at the Friends' Meeting-house, Cooladine, in the county Wexford, George Thompson, of Belfast, to Anna, daughter of the late Thomas Mason, of Enniscorthy.

September 13, at Attanna, the Rev. George L. Shannahan, to Emily, daughter of the late John Mosse, of Ballyconra, county Kilkenny.

September 10, in Glasgow, Charles Shannon Livingston, of Merryflats, to Helen Shaw, youngest child of the late Henry Ferguson, of Belfast.

September 11, at Sullington, Sussex, Commander H. King, of the Royal Navy, to Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. George Palmer, Rector of Sullington and Parham.

September 11, in London, Lucius H. Fitzgerald, Barrister-at-law, to Mary Katharine, daughter of the late Admiral the Hon. Sir J. Talbot.

September 6, at Stoke, Colonel L. Smythe O'Connor, of the 1st West India Regiment, Governor of the Gamba, to Ann, relict of Captain C. Murray, of the 76th Regiment, and daughter of Robert Scott, of Outland, Plymouth.

September 11, at Woolwich, Edwin Ward, Barrister-at-law, to Agnes Mary, daughter of the late Lynch Talbot, Captain in the Royal Artillery.

September 11, at Sheffield, Captain Henry T. Richmond, of the 98th Regiment, second son of S. Richmond, formerly of the 49th Regiment, to Esther, daughter of the late John Wilson, of Oakholme.

August 26, at Quebec, Ambrose Hickey, Barrister-at-law, second son of the Rev. William Hickey, Rector of Mulrancan, county Wexford, to Emily, daughter of the late Robert Shore Milnes Sewell, Advocate.

June 10, at Geelong, Australia, Henry James, son of the late Robert Neill, of Belfast, to Isabella, daughter of William Gray, of Geelong.

June 14, at Melbourne, Australia, Arthur David Harvey, late of Queenstown, county Cork, to Elizabeth Jones, late of Dublin.

IRISH DEATHS.

September 13, at 22, Kildare street, Dublin, Maryanne, widow of Bryan Molloy, formerly of Millicent, county Kildare.

September 11, at Sandford-terrace, Ranelagh, aged 68 years, Edmond French Boys, formerly Lieutenant Colonel of the 45th Regiment.

September 14, at Blackrock, Catherine, relict of T. Falkiner, of Osberstown Hill, Nass.

September 12, at Worthing, Sussex, Alfred, son of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, of Rathfarnham Castle.

September 11, at Loughrea, Edward, son of the late Captain Pigott, of the 84th Regiment.

September 7, in Limerick, the Rev. Mr. Reeves, an old and respected clergyman, formerly parish priest of Dromcolloher.

September 14, at Seaview-terrace, Eliza, relict of Richard Reade.

September 14, at Holywood, Jannette, wife of Professor Craig, of the Queen's College, Belfast.

At Walsall, Staffordshire, James R. Newsam, formerly of Belfast.

September 12, the Rev. Robert L. Joyce, son of the late John Joyce, Comptroller of Customs, Cork.

September 8, at Instow, Devonshire, Cadwallader, only son of Cadwallader Edwards Palmer, and grandson of the late Very Rev. Joseph Palmer, Dean of Cashel.

At Willesden, Middlesex, Harriet Margaret, relict of W. H. Holmes, of Manor House, Kilrea, county Londonderry.

In London, after a premature confinement, Elizabeth Hesther Rose, wife of John H. Jephson, and eldest daughter of the Rev. A. M. Evanson, Vicar of Aghnameadle, diocese of Killaloe.

September 9, in Cheltenham, Pierce Moore, son of the late Henry Moore, of Cremorgan, Queen's County.

September 8, at Sandhurst, Louisa Augusta, wife of Lieutenant Colonel P. L. Macdougall, and daughter of Lieutenant General Sir William Napier.

July 8, at St. John's Antigua, Hugh Thompson, aged 80 years, formerly of Londonderry.

September 1, in Paris, Madame Marie de St. Cecile, Abbess of the Convent of St. Elizabeth, and sister of Sir J. Walmsley, M. P., aged 60 years.

September 10, at Brighton, Wm. P. Jervis, formerly of the 2d Life Guards.

At Thurso, suddenly, Lieutenant Colonel John Ramsay, late of the Bombay Fusiliers, fifth son of the late Lieutenant General John Ramsay.

July 1, at Peshawur, Bengal, Captain Croker, of the 24th Regiment.

August 1, at Poona, Bombay, Lieutenant Mainwaring, of the 24th Regiment.

September 9, at Bagnalstown, county Carlow, Susan, daughter of P. Mahon, proprietor of the Maid of Erin Hotel, William street, Liverpool.

September 14, at Kilmacow, county Kilkenny, Andrew Walsh, Superintendent of the Male Training Establishment of the Commissioners of National Education.

September 11, at Kinallen, parish of Dromore, county Down, aged 88 years, Elizabsth, relict of William Doake.

September 15, at Blackhall-parade, Dublin, at the advanced age of 87 years, Barnaby Nanry.

Arthur Knox, son of George Knox, of Brownstown House.

At Airfield, St. Dolough's, Sir Edmund Nugent, in the 90th year of his age.

At Bray, John Wills Brown.

In Dublin, the infant child of Charles T. Walmisley.

In Bandon, Anne, relict of the late Henry Bowles Legres, Surgeon.

Lucy Yielding, daughter of the late Jeffrey Egar, of Tralee.

Special Notices.

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, broche and woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, wollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c., all at very Economical Prices!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street,
and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

oct4 3mos

Holloway's Pills.—They Never Fail.—Other Remedies may relieve pain, but these Pills expel disease. They cleanse the blood, remove obstructions from the bowels, invigorate the digestion, calm the nerves, and renovate the constitution. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London, and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and $1 per box.

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
66 Liberty street, N. Y.

sept13 3mos

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall."
R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street.
FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms."
EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn.
GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y.
RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y.
P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall."
Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street.
M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms.
T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory.
WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms."
JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each night at the Eagle Rooms.
EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y.
M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn.
MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street.
W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa.
MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue.
JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City.
—— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia.
P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia.
Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me.
JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill.
CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond.
P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston.
GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta.
EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo.
D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati.
JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York; also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y21june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASH OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

Improved Billiard Tables and Cushions.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 18, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug23 10t

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.
JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept13

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application, personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until enquiry has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY'S establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY'S colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. GURNEY'S plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY'S Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY,

oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

MRS. HAYES' SYRUP.

For Dysentery and Bowel Complaints.

WARRANTED to cure the worst cases in less than twenty-four hours, if used according to directions. It has stood the test of thirty-five years and has never been known to fail, even when the most eminent physicians had pronounced the patient beyond the reach of medicine. Over two thousand satisfactory references and certificates can be produced, sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for these complaints.

The Syrup can be given to a child a week old with perfect safety. It is pleasant to the taste, and harmless in its composition, it being free from opium, alcohol, &c. Prepared and sold by Mrs. M. Hayes, 175 Fulton st., Brooklyn. Sold also by Joseph W. Hayes, 159 Atlantic st., H. Parker, cor. of Fulton Avenue and Cumberland street, M. Evans, corner of Myrtle and Classon avenues, Brooklyn. In New-York by F. C. Wells & Co., 115 Franklin street, C. H. Ring, 92 Broadway, T. T. Green, 862 Broadway, Guion, corner of Bowery and Grand streets, W. S. Dunham, 476 Broadway. In Williamsburg, J. D. Norvill, 26 Grand street. In Newark, by R. VanBuskirk, cor. of Market and Broad streets. 3m19jly

Special Notices.

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, August 12 1856.—To the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York:—Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the general election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to-wit:—

A Governor, in the place of Myron H. Clark.
A Lieutenant-Governor, in the place of Henry J. Raymond.
A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Cornelius Gardiner.
An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Thomas Kirkpatrick.
A Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Benjamin F. Harwood, deceased.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Thirty-five Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.
A Representative in the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States for the Third Congressional district, composed of the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Eighth wards in the city and county of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fourth Congressional district, composed of the Fourth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourteenth wards of the said city and county.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fifth Congressional district, composed of the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of the said city and county, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth wards in the city of Brooklyn, in the county of King's.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Sixth Congressional district, composed of the Eleventh, Fifteenth and Seventeeth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, composed of the Ninth, Sixteenth and Twentieth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Eighth Congressional district, composed of the Twelfth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second wards of the city of New-York.
City and county officers are also to be elected:—
A Mayor, in the place of Fernando Wood.
A City Judge, in the place of Elisha S. Capron.
Two Governors of the Almshouse, in the places of Isaac Bell, jr., and Simeon Draper.
Also, sixteen members of Assembly for said city and county.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Your's respectfully, N. P. STANTON, Jr.,
Deputy Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, New-York, August 20, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES O. WILLET, Sheriff of the City and County of New-York.

All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, chap 6, title 3, article 3, part 1, page 140.
aug30

DENTISTRY.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for only One Dollar and Fifty Cents! Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 81 Park Row, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.

N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2.

sept6 3mos Conklin Smith.

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. FALL IMPORTATION. 1856.

Arthur Donnelly,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS

IS now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at	14s to 18s	per yard.
Velvet,	"	10s to 16s	"
Tapestry,	"	6s to 12s	"
Brussels,	"	7s to 12s	"
Three-ply,	"	7s to 10s	"
Ingrain,	"	3s to 7s	"
Common Ingrain,	"	18d to 3s	"

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has opened the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to his customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city.

Gentlemen's Furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

☞ Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

CARPETINGS FROM AUCTION.

TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK AND VICINITY.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, between Waverly and Clinton Place,

BEGS to call the attention of the ladies to his large and varied stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloth. The collection comprises goods of every grade and style, from the richest and most beautiful of foreign manufacture to the lowest price domestic.

All who are acquainted with the Carpet trade and have visited our New Store, acknowledge our stock the most varied assortment and best selected on exhibition in the city. The facilities we enjoy for purchasing cheap, and an experience of many years in connection with the largest houses in the country enables us to present to our lady friends and the public the cheapest and most select stock of goods in the city.

sept27 1m STEPHEN LEAHY, 93 Sixth Avenue.

Men's Furnishing Goods.

84 William Street, corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

GEORGE M. TRACY,

HAS now on hand a choice stock of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, nearly all of which are made under his own inspection, of the choicest fabrics and newest styles. Merchants will find this a desirable place to make their selections. Annexed is a catalogue of some of the articles:

Hosiery and Gloves.	Improved Napoleon Ties.
Silk Beaufort Ties.	Stocks, in great variety.
Linen Collars.	Silk and Linen Handkerchiefs.
Silk Albert Ties.	Dressing Robes.
Fine Shirts.	Travelling Shawls.
Cravats and Stocks.	Silk Under-shirts and Drawers.
Suspenders.	Silk and Gingham Umbrellas.

His Shirts are of superior make and quality and warranted to fit. Persons wishing Goods for their own use will be served at retail as well as wholesale, at the lowest prices. oct4 2mos

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,

NEW-YORK. 3m

☞ SHIP STORES SUPPLIED. ☜

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26 1y

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

WRITING INKS.

WE ask the attention of all who wish imperishable records,—a matter great importance to State, County and Town Offices, Banks, and others, to Dr. Chilton's test of the prominent Inks in use, made with a view to show their different degrees of permanence by exposure. Engraved facsimiles of the test can be seen at our office.

Thaddeus Davids & Co.

ap19m6 Manufacturing stationers, 26 Cliff street.

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19ly

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN A. McSORLEY,

CUSTOM HOUSE AND SHIP BROKER, AND NOTARY PUBLIC,

7 BROAD STREET,

Clergymen, importing Vestments, Church Ornaments, &c., will be liberally treated with by calling on the subscriber.

REFERENCES:

Messrs. Thos. McClune & Co., C. Meletta, | Messrs. D. & J. Sadlier & Co., James Cook & Co. 6m

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to.

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,

ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled. JOHN HAMILTON,
S. W. JOHNSON.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap26 1y

Hotels.

STEVENS HOUSE.

(LATE DELMONICO'S HOTEL.)

21, 23, 25, & 27 Broadway, New-York.

THE undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of informing his friends and the public that he has leased the above named house for a term of years, and has made extensive alterations and repairs, and omitted nothing that will tend to the accomodations or comfort of guests. The house having been newly furnished throughout in the most thorough and modern style, with a view to convenience and comfort, and as it will be conducted on the European plan, and with an experienced caterer, and thorough cooks, he hopes to give satisfaction to those who favor him with their patronage which has never failed while in other Hotels in this city.

Catholic families and clergymen visiting New-York will find in the arrangements of this spacious establishment, elegance, convenience, and comfort, at moderate charges. JOHN O'GRADY, JR.,

3m5jly Formerly of Judson's Hotel and the Brandreth House.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

8m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

Business Directory.

THOMAS RUSSELL.

209 FULTON STREET, BETWEEN CHURCH AND GREENWICH STS. and across town, at 111 Attorney-st., corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform the public that he has opened the above establishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES. &C.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call attention of buyers to his Stock, consisting, in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated Brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, Vintage 1823 and 1842.
Otard, Dupuy & Co., Vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

(Imported by the subscriber to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.)

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.
Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a select supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Connor, Wall Street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care, being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 36th street, and 6th Avenue: T. Russell & Co., corner 4th Street and 6th Avenue, and at the corners of 13th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those in need of nourishment; and it is, undoubtedly, the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three hundred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old-fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the ELIZABETHAN ALE most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oct4 3mos

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly6y

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English pickles, sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 3m16au

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.

my31y

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES 6 CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann St., cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1856. NO. 28.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXVIII.

Editorial.

IMPORTANT TRIAL.—NORTH versus SOUTH.
THE FIREMEN—THE CHIVALRY OF THE COMMONWEALTH.
THE REV. DR. MORIARTY IN BROOKLYN.
BISHOP ENGLAND ON AMERICAN SLAVERY.
MUNICIPAL POLITICS.
OULART HILL.
NOTES FROM NICARAGUA.
THE MAN FOR GALWAY—JAMES ROCHE'S LECTURE.
EVENING FREE SCHOOLS.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part V.—By Garland O'Halloran—Lives and Times of Thomas Addis and Robert Emmet—Comic Miseries.

Correspondence.

Letter from "Kilmainham"—Letter from Col. Doheny on Mayor Wood—Letter from T. F. Meagher to Captain Rynders—Glimpses of the South; from the Note-Book of a Reporter—Military News—The Irish News Guard—The Montgomeries of Bridgeport, &c.

Miscellaneous.

Buck and the Press—In Memoriam—Abduction of Slaves—Revelations of Sadlierism—Bishop England on Southern Slavery—Archbishop MacHale—The Revolutionary Party—Secret Societies—Prosperity to Ireland—William Russell—The Russian Coronation—How M. P.'s are Bought—Louis Napoleon—More American Annexation—European, Californian and Irish News—Deaths, Marriages, &c.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

Terms.

For subscribers, $3 per annum: 6 cents a copy.
For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned
GEOFFREY KEATING.
With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,
By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00.

The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly-authorized canvasser, or to

A list of subscribers will be printed in the work.

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher,
tf 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a subscriber to Mr. O'Mahoney's translation of the Foras Feasa ar Erinn.

That is a book long wanted, and which the "Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Eliot Hudson had lived, it wouldhave been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes, as Mr. O'Mahony.

I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Now Ready.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF
ROBERT EMMET.
By DR. R. R. MADDEN.

With a fine portrait on Steel, engraved by O'Neill.

AND A MEMOIR OF
THOMAS ADDIS EMMET.

With a fine portrait on Steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo, cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:—

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF CLONCURRY.
MADDEN'S UNITED IRISHMEN.
SAVAGE'S '98 AND '48.
GILBERT'S STREETS OF DUBLIN.
FITZPATRICK'S LIFE OF CLONCURRY.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.
LIFE OF O'DWYER THE OUTLAW.
MOORE'S LETTERS TO MACKENZIE.
LIFE OF ROBERT HOLMES. By Savage.
LIFE OF CORBETT.
B. P. BINNS' LETTERS.
GRATTAN'S LIFE. By his Son.
PHILLIPS' RECOLLECTION OF CURRAN.
JOHN BINN'S LIFE.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
MACNEVIN'S PIECES OF IRISH HISTORY.
MAGOON'S AMERICAN ORATORS.
CURRAN'S LIFE. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by Mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher,
110 Fulton street, New-York.

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX., is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities in the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its general appearance, as well as to the chasteness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably. Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

This work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,
Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

THE SHAM BATTLE OF OULART HILL IN '98!

Advertised for the 7th of October, at Hastings, is POSTPONED until MONDAY, October 20th, in consequence of THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER'S Lecture on the 7th.

Tickets 50 cents each. The green tickets only are good, the white tickets are recalled.

The steamboat and barges will leave Broome street, E. R., at 7, Peck Slip, half-past 7, Pier 3, N. R., at 8, Spring street at 9 o'clock.

JOHN H. RYAN, Sec. JOHN FOLEY, Chairman.

There will be a DRILL of all who wish to take a part in the proceedings EVERY FRIDAY EVENING, at the Eagle Drill Rooms, at 7½ o'clock, by F. Maguire, of the Fitzgerald Guard; J. Huston, of the Brian Boroihme Guard, and J. O'Connor, one of the old veterans of '98.

TENTH EDITION OF THE GREAT NATIONAL POLITICAL MAP OF THE UNITED STATES, is now ready. Size 34 by 40 inches. Containing portraits of Buchanan, Fillmore, Fremont, Breckinridge, Dayton and Donelson—the platform of the respective parties—letters of acceptance—a large amount of statistical matter, &c. This edition of 16,000 copies will be sold at the following rates, and sent by mail free of postage. Single copies 25 cents. 12, 25, 50, or any number above 12 and under 100, to one address, at the rate of $12 50 per hundred. 100 copies to one address, $10. 500 or 1,000 copies to one address, $8 per hundred. Politicians of all parties, now is the time to act; and the above map will fully set forth the claims of your respective candidates to the suffrages of the people. Address your orders, which will be promptly supplied, to A. RANNEY, Publisher, 105 Broadway, N. Y. oct18 1t

Special Notices.

INFORMATION wanted of ROBERT A. COX, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 43 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Arago, will close at this office on Saturday, the 18th day of October, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, &c., per U. S. steamer George Law, will close at this office on Tuesday, the 20th day of Ober, at 1 o'clock P. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

☞ Removal.—DR. J. M. CARNOCHAN, has removed his office to No. 45 Lafayette Place, near Astor Place. oct18 4t

Publications.

EVENING FREE SCHOOLS.

EVENING SCHOOLS FOR THE EDUCATION OF MALES.—Notice is hereby given, that EVENING SCHOOLS for the education of Apprentices or others, whose ages or avocations prevent their attending the Day Schools, will be opened on Monday Evening, October 6th, at 7 o'clock, for a term of twelve weeks, in the rooms of the Male Departments of the following School Houses:

1st	WARD, SCHOOL HOUSE	No. 29, 97 and 99 Greenwich street.
4th	.. .. ..	William street, near Duane.
5th	.. .. ..	No. 44, Corner North Moore and Varick streets.
6th	.. .. ..	No. 23, City Hall Place.
7th	.. .. ..	No. 31, Monroe street, near Montgomery.
8th	.. .. ..	No. 38, Clarke street, near Broome.
9th	.. .. ..	No. 8, Corner Hudson and Grove streets.
10th	.. .. ..	No. 20, Ludlow street, near Delancy.
11th	.. .. ..	No. 15, Fifth street, near Avenue C.
12th	.. .. ..	No. 39, One Hundred & Twenty-fifth st., Harlem.
"	.. .. ..	No. 43, Manhattanville.
14th	.. .. ..	No. 32, Baxter street, near Grand.
15th	.. .. ..	No. 35, Thirteenth street, near Sixth Avenue.
16th	.. .. ..	No. 11, Seventeenth street, near Eighth Avenue.
18th	.. .. ..	No. 40, Twentieth street, near Second Avenue.
20th	.. .. ..	No. 33, Thirty-fifth street, near Ninth Avenue.
22d	.. .. ..	No. 28, Fortieth street, near Eighth Avenue.

Evening Schools for the Education of Females.

NOTICE is also hereby given that EVENING SCHOOLS, for the education of Females will be opened on Monday Evening October 6th, at 6½ o'clock, in the Female Departments of the following School Houses:

1st	WARD, SCHOOL HOUSE	No. 29, 97 and 99 Greenwich street.
4th	.. .. ..	No. 26, James street, near Chatham.
6th	.. .. ..	No. 24, Elm street, near Leonard.
7th	.. .. ..	No. 31, Monroe street, near Montgomery.
8th	.. .. ..	No. 38, Clarke street, near Broome.
10th	.. .. ..	No. 20, Ludlow street, near Delancy.
11th	.. .. ..	No. 15, Fifth street, near Avenue C.
14th	.. .. ..	No. 21, Marion street, near Prince.
15th	.. .. ..	No. 35, Thirteenth street, near Sixth Avenue.
16th	.. .. ..	No. 45, Twenty-fourth street, near Eighth Avenue.
18th	.. .. ..	No. 40, Twentieth street, near Second Avenue.
22d	.. .. ..	No. 28, Fortieth street, near Eighth Avenue.

A SCHOOL FOR COLORED PEOPLE (Males and Females) will also be opened at at the School House in Laurens street, between Grand and Broome streets, at the same time.

Experienced Teachers have been engaged, and everything provided that will be required to conduct these Schools, and afford thorough instruction to pupils, free of charge. Application for admission must be made at the School Rooms as soon as the Schools are opened.

An additional term of nine weeks will commence on the 5th day of January, 1857.

Executive Committee on Evening Schools:—ANDREW J. PERRY, WILLIAM JONES, Jr., ALBERT SMITH, FLORENCE MCCARTHY, ELIPHALET BOOTMAN, GEORGE WHITE, WILLIAM SINCLAIR. oct4 1t

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD'S noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of CHAMBERS' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday, price, (free of postage) Six Dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the First Series, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principal cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale at Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents; and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day.

JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age.

J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For Three Dollars a Year, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent, (free of postage,) to any post-office in the United States.

Two Copies, Five Dollars a year; Five Copies, Ten Dollars a year. Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable quarterly in advance.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

oct18 tf

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
R. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,
OLD LINE PACKETS,
Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following six magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS
ON
BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 662 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 6mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street, New-York.

sept27 8mos

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Are prepared to do Printing of all kinds in the best style and on reasonable terms. PARTIES desiring printing for BALLS, PARTIES, EXCURSIONS, CONCERTS, or PUBLIC MEETINGS, are invited to give us a call.

8mjly26

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

European News.

FROM LIVERPOOL TO THE 27TH ULT.

Leading Topic—Naples.

Italian affairs are the chief topic in Europe. An expedition to Naples was the point of attraction. The Anglo-French alliance has issued an ultimatum which was retained in Paris, to allow, it is said, "an opportunity to the Neapolitan Government to make the necessary concessions. The expedition is formidable. Eight steamers were provisioning at Spithead, and the Cæsar, Colossus, Dauntless, Malacca, Gorgon, Perseverance, and Urgent, British auxiliary steamers, are ready to sail. The French contingent consists of the Bretagne, Ulm, Algeciras, and Napoleon—ships of the line—and of the Isly, Duchayla, and Mgere, steam frigates and corvettes.

The expedition is said to be very unpopular in France. Sardinia takes part in the expedition, and will send ships for the protection of the Sardinians there.

A Vienna letter states that the English and French Ministers had notified Austria of the intended expedition against Naples, to which the Vienna Cabinet interposes no obstacle. This, however, is doubtful. Prince Petrulia, the Neapolitan Envoy at Vienna, has resigned—the cause of the resignation is not stated. It is understood that immediately M. Brenier, the French Minister, leaves Naples, the Marquis Antonini, the Neapolitan Minister, will withdraw from Paris to Brussels. Meantime, hopes are entertained of receiving during the present week, by telegraph, such an answer from Naples as would supersede the necessity of the fleet's sailing. The London Star of the 26th ult., says: "Something serious has certainly occurred to stay the Anglo-French mission to Naples, for it has not yet sailed. There is a statement that King Ferdinand has fortified his coast and is likely to secure the enthusiasm of the army." There is another report that, if compelled to yield, he will proclaim the Constitution of 1848, and thereby present his compliments to Palmerston and Napoleon. It may be that eventualities are foreseen by the two men who rule France and England, or they may have heard that Naples would be supported by Austria and Russia. At all events, the game, whatever it may be, does not go on well."

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, (September 21,) announced that the premature intelligence of the withdrawal from Naples of the English and French Legations produced a fall of a quarter per cent. in the funds.

"It is difficult to predict the extent of the effect which this unfriendly demonstration will have on the public of Naples; but if things are carried on further and French and English ships of war appear in the bay, many think that an insurrection may be expected. The King appears to be taking every precaution in anticipation of rebellion against his government. The accounts that reach us from Naples are discordant as to the temper of the nation, but, after carefully weighing them, and making allowance for partisan statements, one remains pretty well convinced that great discontent and a strong revolutionary spirit exists there. We shall see what effect the withdrawal of the Ambassadors will have upon King Ferdinand. If none, England and France must necessarily, one would think, take a further step, or their attitude will not be worthy of their position."

The next day, (22d ult.,) the same correspondent writes:

"The tone of the Paris papers of to-day shows that the belief is general that France and England have abandoned fruitless remonstrances for positive demonstrations. It is stated that Ajaccio is to be the rendezvous of the combined squadrons, and that the French ships will leave Toulon immediately. * * * The funds have fallen again to-day. It is said that Baron Hubner is expected at Marseilles, whence he will proceed to Biarritz to see the Emperor. I have been told that letters received from Naples give grounds for expectation that he may be the bearer of good news, but perhaps the wish is father to the thought, for many here would be very glad to see the affair settled by the King of Naples yielding to the reasonable demands of the Western Powers."

Summing up items of news and rumor, the Paris Debats adds:

One circumstance may perhaps cause some delay in the execution of these movements, and that is the absence of the King of Naples from his capital. It is, in fact, stated that he is at present at Gaeta, and that it is at that place that he proposes to receive the communications of the Allied Courts. The consequences of the Congress of Paris commence, it will be seen, to develope themselves, and the measures now taken with regard to Naples were contained in principle in the conference and in the protocol of the 8th April, which has been so frequently spoken of. * * * * As far as regards the measure which the French and English Governments are now adopting towards the Court of Naples, we think that its bearing—at least its immediate bearing—must not be exaggerated. It is said that the Moniteur will in a few days publish a note explaining the object and meaning of the determination which has been come to by the Allied Powers. This note will probably be couched in terms not of a nature to encourage any revolutionary movement. It is probable that this note will much resemble the language made use of in the Congress; that it will repeat that the two Governments do not interfere in the affairs of Naples except in a conservative interest, and for the purpose of maintaining, and not disturbing, European order; and it is not unlikely that an energetic protest against any attempt at disorder will be appended to it.

SUBSCRIPTION FOR MUSKETS IN GENOA.

The Risorgimento, of Turin, of the 18th of September, says that it has received from Genoa a list containing the names of 500 subscribers, towards the purchase of 10,000 muskets, accompanied by the following letter:

BASLE, Switzerland, Sept. 1, 1856.

SIR—Of all the subscriptions, called national, which have hitherto been opened in Piedmont, none is more entitled to that name than the one you have proposed in your patriotic journal for the purchase of 10,000 muskets, to be given to the first Italian province which will rise in arms against the common enemy. Consequently, and it being my conviction that Italy ought to assert her independence, and that it is the duty of every Italian citizen, whether he inhabits the country or resides abroad, to assist his brethren, by every possible means, in arming themselves against the oppressors of his country, I request you, Mr. Editor, to inscribe my name on the list of that eminently national subscription for 150 francs, the price of a Swiss carbine, which I will shortly forward to the Committee by a safe conveyance. I remain, &c.,

ALLEMANDI, General.

Count de Cavour, President of the Council, subscribed 500 francs for the purchase of the 100 guns of Alessandria.

SPAIN.—Madrid letters of the 19th of September mention the resignation of seven Cavelera, from which probably arose the report that O'Donnel had resigned. The Espana announces that the Council of Ministers, on the entreaty of the Queen, have stopped the sales of the Church property, and that consequently the ministerial crisis had ceased. Marshal Sevans, the new Spanish Minister to France, is to go to St. Petersburgh on a secret mission, and will return in about a month.

TURKEY.—The Frontier Commission was at Belgrade on the 8th of September, and it was expected that the survey would be completed by October. The Frontier Line is marked off by a furrow under a plow. The Turks are fortifying both sides of the Danube with, it is said, the approbation of Austria. The Turkish troops have also moved from Widin to Kalafat on the left bank of the river.

THE QUESTION OF THE PRINCIPALITIES—DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF A SETTLEMENT.

The correspondent of the London Times thus speaks of the note from the Turkish Government to its Ministers resident at the different European Courts. The motives that induced the Turkish Government to take this step, are the agitation got up in the Principalities as well as in the west of Europe, about the union of Moldavia and Wallachaia, and the decided opinions which several of the European Governments have expressed on the subject; although calm, and couched in friendly language, it is not without a certain dignity, and one can read, even through the polite language of diplomacy, the resolution of the Turkish Government not to give way on the question of the Union.

After a short introduction, in which it is said that the Porte thinks it important to express its views on the question of the reorganization of the Principalities, and, after repeating that his Majesty the Sultan wished not only to maintain all the privileges and immunities granted by his ancestors to the two Principalities, but likewise to develope by-means of a revision of their organic laws, their welfare and prosperity, the document goes on to put forward the views of the Sublime Porte with respect to this reorganization.

In order that this reorganization be worthy of the wise thought of conservatism which suggested it to the Conference of Paris, the Turkish Government thinks that two principles ought to be kept in view—namely, the maintenance of the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire; consequently, the sovereign rights of the Sultan and the development of the moral and material welfare of the Molde-Wallachian population.

Guided by these principles, the Turkish Government declares itself quite ready to make all the improvements which may be judged necessary in the internal administration of the Principalities, as it thinks it not only a right, but a duty to defend the rights of all classes. But while the Porte is willing to guarantee such an independent and national internal administration, it cannot consent that the form of their government should be opposed to the constitution of the empire to which they belong.

GREECE.—Athens letters say that the English and French Ministers have drawn up a list of new Ministers, which they demanded should be appointed, but the Queen refused to accede to their demands, alleging as her reason for not doing so, the absence of the King.

THE BRITISH TREATY WITH HONDURAS.

The Liverpool Albion publishes the copy of a communication from Don Leon Alvarado to the Governor of the Republic of Honduras, advising him of the conclusion of the negotiations with England, and specifying the terms of the Treaty. The letter is dated, "Legation of Honduras, London, Sept. 15, 1856; 35th Anniversary of the Independence," and intimates that the negotiations with England are concluded. Although claiming the Bay Islands, Honduras was willing to leave them free to the enterprise of the world, on condition that her sovereignty were recognized and the Musquito Territory were returned to her. The United States accepted these conditions, and England saw in them a means of getting out of a disagreeable question. The ambassador then announces that the Treaties are concluded as follows:

1. The restitution of the sovereign rights of Honduras over the Islands of Ruatan, Bonacca, &c., and declaring them "free territory," governed by its proper municipality.

2. Acknowledges the territorial limits of Honduras marked in the map by Hon. G. Squier—say from the river Wans o Segovia to the river Negro.

A Tribunal of Reference, composed of one citizen of Honduras and one British, and—if necessary—an impartial third of any nation, will fix the boundary, indemnify the Mosquito Indians for the losses which they suffer, and adjust all claims whatsoever.

3. Memorandum of the basis of negotiations:

Senor Minister:—True wisdom teaches that a nation should march with the circumstances of the day. Honduras now enters a new political life; her steps should therefore be, to declare:

1. That she knows no enemies or parties, and forgives all past offences.

2. Cultivates friendly relations with all who will accept of them.

3. To avoid all compromises, offensive or defensive leagues, so common in America, and so disastrous.

4. To form no league, diet, or confederation.

5. Invites all her neighbors to regulate territorial limits, and to examine the claims made by Copan on the part of Florida, and in six or eight months the titles should be exhibited.

6. Prohibits or abolishes from the public press all politics, give regulations for education, &c.

In announcing this treaty, Don Leon Alvarado expresses his thanks to Mr. Marcy, to Lord Clarendon, to Mr. Dallas, to Mr. William Brown, M.P., to Mr. Squier, &c., for their several shares in effecting this Treaty.

Foreign Miscellany.

Mr. Dallas, as the guest of Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, had dined with the Heats Agricultural Society, and made a speech in return to the toast of lasting concord between America and England.

Louis Napoleon and family are making the most of the rural enjoyments at Biarritz, including bull fights.

The Bank of France has raised its rate of interest to 6 per cent.

The London Times says:—"We believe we are correct in stating that a division of the See of London is contemplated, and that this was the reason why the vacant bishopric was not filled by translation. The See of Durham will also be ultimately divided, but at present it was thought more desirable to fill it by translation rather than by a new appointment. We may add that, except in the case of the archbishoprics, the principle of "translation" has been definitively abandoned.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times understands that the entire number of arrests made on account of the plot discovered against the life of the Emperor is 49. Some of them were made subsequently to the night of the 16th instant. A portion of the prisoners were seized when assembled together, and others were taken at their own places of residence.

The Paris correspondent of the Times alludes to a report of its being the intention of the United States to form an alliance with those European Powers that may be disposed to adopt as an article of law the immunity of merchant vessels, and merchandise from capture in time of war, even by men of war.

On the evening of the 21st of September, the nuptials of the Princess Louisa of Prussia with the Grand Duke of Baden were solemnized in the Royal Schloss, with all the prescriptive solemnities.

The Emperor of Russia has confirmed the organic statues of three steam navigation companies destined to facilitate trade throughout the ports of the South of Russia and the Mediterranean.

Sir Robert Peel has taken a dog-cart with him to St. Petersburg and his smallest tiger. The hon. baronet is apparently intent on "astonishing the natives.

It is stated that establishments are in process of formation at the French settlement of New-Caledonia for the reception of political and other criminals.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the East India Company, Mr. Lewin moved that the annexation of Oude was an unjustifiable act of speculation. The motion was negatived.

By order of the Lisbon Board of Health three Brazilian ships were sunk at the Quarantine, because they were infected by yellow fever. By last accounts cholera was decreasing at Lisbon.

The United States ships Congress, Constitution, and Susquehanna were at Palermo on the 18th of September, and would leave in a fortnight for Genoa.

The vintage in Italy was generally satisfactory. The crops of maize was good, and rice was abundant, but silk was not so favorable.

The Gazette publishes the Treaty between Great Britian and Siam. By it British subjects may trade freely with all the ports of Siam, but may reside only at Bangkok.

Lord Hardinge, late Commander-in-Chief of the Army, is dead. His age was 71 years.

The Presse D'Orient intimates that the differences between England and Persia are not likely to be promptly adjusted.

The Limerick papers record the death of a respected citizen of Limerick, whose name was not more generally known than his character was regarded with esteem and kindly feeling. Mr. Marshall for twenty-five years held a prominent position as an auctioneer through the south and west of Ireland, during which period many hundreds of thousands of pounds passed through his hands. His dealings were always characterised by the strictest honor, probity and punctuality, and his arrangements were always so complete and effective as to leave nothing to be desired on the part of the owner of property entrusted to him for disposal, and nothing to complain of on the part of the purchaser in the shape of misrepresentation. He did much for the improvement of agriculture, and was for a number of years past the Honorary Secretary of the Limerick Races, which, by his untiring energy and active business habits, were always brought to a satisfactory issue. He was also Secretary to the Limerick Coursing Club, and the members of that body will feel a deep loss, apart from their personal friendship and regard for him.

In Dublin, the continued beautiful weather, which has enabled farmers to save, seasonably and thoroughly, the harvest produce, is still as bright and promising, though cold, as at any time since its commencement; and it has exercised a favorable influence, to some extent, upon trade, which will soon, no doubt, experience a further improvement, when the pressure of rural operations has passed and the produce of the crops begins to get into circulation. The stock market, which had been so much depressed during the past five or six weeks, has experienced a rapid rebound. The cattle and provision markets are largely supplied, though prices did not yield in proportion.

With deep regret we announce the death of the Rev. Bernard Kirby, of Dublin, who, for nearly twenty years past, has prominently distinguished himself as an earnest laborer in the cause of the hopeless female outcasts in connection with the Olivemount Institution, of which he was the founder. The illness which has terminated in his death originated in his unceasing labors in the good cause to which he had so long and so earnestly devoted himself.

A very long and angry public inquiry has been just brought to a close in Clonmel respecting the alleged insecure storage of powder in that town. The Magistrates have taken steps to have the powder more safely placed than, it seems, it was some time since.

Color-Sergeant Michael Downey, lately a pay-sergeant in the 68th Regt., is under close arrest, for misappropriation of large sums of public, and several sums of private money intrusted to his care for the payment of his company.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Colonel Hastings Doyle to be Inspection of the Irish Militia, and the Commander of the forces, and has directed him to visit every depot of that body in this county, to report on the selection and efficiency of the staff, their barracks, &c.

Joseph Kenny, Esq., J. P., Mayor of Clonmel, has been appointed by order of his Excellency, the Lord Lieutenant in council, a Director and Governor of the Clonmel Lunatic Asyum.

On the 2nd of October, the Agricultural Exhibition of the Tipperary Uuion, established by Lord Stanley, was to have been held in the town of Tipperary. Lord Stanley was to have delivered the prizes awarded by the judges.

Five Officers of the Tipperary Light Infantry have applied for a Court Marshal, arising out of the reprimand given to the corps by the Commander of the Forces.

We find from the Waterford papers, that the Bilberry road is gradually improving under the influence of the crow-bar.

Irish News.

A whale-fishing brig, called the W. F. Safford, 172 tons, belonging to New-York has arrived in Queenstown from Nova Zembla. On her voyage, she captured three whales, from which nearly eight tons of oil have been obtained. A new system has been introduced by which it would seem that this valuable animal is more surely, safely, and speedily destroyed than by the old means. The credit of introducing the present mode belongs to the Captain of the W. F. Safford. The fish are now shot, and after the ball enters the flesh it explodes in the body on the same principle as a shell. Captain Roys, the master of the whaler, is at present merely engaged in an experimental trip, and his ship is in Cork Harbor for the purpose of enabling him to judge of its suitability as a place of despatch for the fishing grounds. It is his intention in the summer months to fish in the North Seas, and in the winter to visit the coast of Patagonia.

An inquest has been held before Thomas O'Meara, Esq., coroner for the district of Tipperary, on the body of a man named Thomas Dwyer, of Refadda, who died in consequence of wounds which fractured his skull, at Garryshane. The deceased was returning home after being paid some money, he was overtaken by two men named Thomas Dwyer, of Donaskea, and William Loughnane alias Davern. They induced the unfortunate man to accompany them down a bye-road, and when he was next seen, he was lying by the side of the road bleeding profusely. As Sub-constable John F. Noble, of the constabulary depot, Phœnix Park, was passing along the quays of Dublin, he perceived a man whom he instantly recognized as the Thomas Dwyer named in the coroner's warrant. The man was arrested, and has since been committed by Major Brownrigg, Inspector General of Prisons, to Clonmel gaol, where he now awaits his trial at the spring assizes of 1857.

The tide of emigration, according to the Tuam Herald, has not reached its highest mark. Great numbers are still leaving Ireland for America and Australia. There is a counter tide of returning emigrants—persons who have amassed some wealth or who have fallen into an ill state of health; but the numbers are merely fractional compared with the outward bound movement. The great cause of the present impulse is the difficulty of getting land upon reasonable—in a word—any terms. Almost all the land of the country is let or being let only for grazing purposes. This, says the Herald, coupled with the absence of security for tenant industry in Ireland, forms the main cause of the yet continuing efflux of the population.

The Waterford News has heard from influential quarters that there is no chance of obtaining one of the large barracks for Waterford, but there is a prospect of getting a small one for 2,000 men. A detachment of the Royal Artillery has arrived at the Artillery Barrack. The men were mounted on their guns. Some of the troops wore Crimean medals. These are the first men that entered the barrack since the departure of the Waterford Artillery. The News further adds that Lord Seaton, Commander-in-chief of the Forces, was in town and inspected the neighborhood of Lisduggen, and other places in the vicinity of Barrack-street, where, it is hoped, the new barracks will be erected. He spoke favorably of the locality.

On visiting Hampstead Heath a short time since, a correspondent of the Clonmel Chronicle informs us, he found that the two fir-trees, which over-shadowed the little eminence where the supposed dead body of John Sadleir was discovered, have been completely cut away to the roots by visitors anxious to secure some relic of the tragedy. The name Sadleir, is cut out on the grass in large letters, and the places where the razor and silver mug were found are marked for the observation of the curious. The broad dyke which surrounds the hillock has been bridged over with stones, which, notwithstanding the dryness of the present weather, are rapidly sinking from the moist nature of the ditch.

A young soldier of the 18th Royal Irish, named MacDonnell, a native of Dublin, was blown to atoms before Sebastopol. A few days since, we learn from the Tralee Chronicle, that before the regiment was removed to the camp at Curragh, the widowed mother of the brave boy had his medal with four clasps presented to her. In the course of the evening, the poor woman "laid out" the medal on the kitchen table, and having procured four mould candles, collected the neighbors and kept up the "wake" until an early hour the following morning.

From the Limerick Reporter we understand that the reading of the reply of Smith O'Brien to the Address of the people of Newcastle and Rathkeale, was frequently interrupted by applause. There was waving of hats and handkerchiefs and every possible demonstration of enthusiasm. The proceedings soon after broke up, the meeting cheering for Mr. O'Brien and family, Thomas Francis Meagher, and the other exiles. In the evening there were illuminations in Newcastle, and a display of fireworks.

The factory in Kevin-street, Dublin, owned by Messrs. William Fry & Co., has been the scene of great festivities, in celebration of the recent marriage of two of Mr. William Fry's sons, Mr. William and Mr. Thomas Fry. This eminent firm, takes occasion annually to afford the hundreds of persons in their employment an opportunity of enjoying themselves at an evening party in some of the extensive apartments of the factory. The members of the firm, their families, and numerous friends of both sexes, attend, and every effort is made to promote the happiness of the people present.

Some boys amusing themselves bowling a metal bullet in Abbey-street, Wexford, were spoken to on the impropriety of the act, and the risk of being taken up by the Police. They at once desisted, and one of them began to hop it on the granite flagging. After some half score trials, it burst in four pieces exhibiting a perfectly white centre. A bye-stander took it up, and found the ball to be a nodule of dark flint, having a core, or centre of pure chalk, shaped like the yolk in the centre of the egg.

An election to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. J. E. Currey, as medical officer to the Lismore dispensary has taken place. Dr. Managan, a resident physician, and who had been the acting medical attendant to the institution since the resignation of Dr. Currey, after the diplomas and testimonials of the different candidates had been read, was declared duly elected.

A respectable buyer of stock informs the Waterford News that the carriage to Waterford of every pig he buys in Dungarvan, costs him 4s. He therefore says that he never goes to Dungarvan and Lismore, when he can get pigs or cattle elsewhere. Were there a railway to Dungarvan, the carriage of a pig would not exceed 1s.

The Waterford Chronicle says it's enough to make the blood in a man's temples boil, to witness the degrading exhibitions of vain folly to which whole masses of brave, honorable men, under authority, are sometimes subjected by their superiors. An English lady, who happens to be amusing herself here in Ireland, takes it into her head to present a piece of music, her own composition, to the first regiment that entered Sebastapol—18th Royal Irish—now stationed at Kildare Curragh. Major Campbell, who is at present the commanding officer, arranges that his men shall appear in "detached groups," parades the band of the regiment, and keeps them playing all day, while a mess-room full of Dublin guests, summoned for the "interesting occasion," partake of a sumptuous "Dejeuner," and sip "recherche" wines. Fifteen hundred heroes, hot-foot from a tremendous battle-field, called out by the commanding officer, to see him receiving, on their behalf, a piece of home-made music, from some feather-headed Englishwoman! What (the News indignantly asks) would the English people think, if some young lady from Waterford went over to London, to present the Guards with some verses on their Crimean glories, and that their commanding officer called out his band, and summoned his officers for the occasion?

A recent rencontre with the Police at Kilmuckridge, turns out more serious in its results than anticipated. One of the countrymen, named Francis Edwards, who was lodged in gaol for the assault, has since died of bayonet wounds he received in the affray. It appears that Constable Byrne, with Sub-constables, John Walsh, and Christopher Walsh, were on patrol, in Kilmuckridge, when they arrested deceased for disorderly conduct. Immediately a party in a public house rushed out, and were joined by several others, who rescued Edwards, when the latter forcibly wrenched the carbine from sub-constable John Walsh, and struck him in the skull with it so violently, that a fracture is apprehended. In the scuffle the unfortunate man received the fatal wounds which terminated his existence.

Mr. Spring, clock-maker, Ellen street, Limerick, has received the following curious directions for the repair of a flutina:—"This poor patient is very far gone this time—quite prostrate. You may observe that by neglect, his cranium has got ungilded, and, by hard work, his bowels are all disarranged. Even by force of labor, his equilibrium has been, in a great measure, detached from his body. Try all your skill on him this time—for nothing short of your own perfect abilities, could restore him to his speech."

The third and last meeting, for the season, of the Wexford Archers, came off at Ballinkeele the seat of John Maher, Esq. The first prize was adjudged to Miss Bell. A handsome prize presented by the Hon. Lieut. Col. Carew, for which the ladies were handicapped, was also gained by Miss Bell, and a valuable Ring presented by Lord Henry Loftus, to be shot for annually, fell to the lot of Miss Richards. Dinner soon after came off in the Marquee, to the enlivening strains of the band of the Wexford Regiment, now kept up at the expense of Lord Carew and the officers of the Regiment.

The Fermanagh Reporter is gratified to learn that the historic grounds of Devenish Island are about being enclosed, so as to preserve what remains of the ancient churches and monuments. This noble act, says the Reporter, for which every Fermanagh man and Irishman, who knows the history of his country, will feel grateful, is to be forthwith carried out by George Wood, Esq., and the entire expenses are to be defrayed by Anthony Denny, Esq., proprietor of the island.

The ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a new Catholic Church, has taken place in the picturesque litte town of Tramore. The old chapel, where the preliminary ceremonies took place, was densely crowded; and groups of people, who had been unable to obtain admission, knelt around the door, and on the tombstones in the Churchyard. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Bishop of Waterford.

Private Reedy, of the 55th Regiment, who was shot in the thigh in the late militia riot in Nenagh, has had his leg amputated in the Military Hospital of that town. The limb was removed from the upper part of the thigh.

The Cork Examiner informs us that Father Matthew's delicate state of health has rendered it necessary for him to seek the genial warmth of Queenstown. On entering the steamer, which was to take him down the river, he was greeted with the warmest demonstrations of sympathy and reverence.

Dr. Mangan, resident physician, in Lismore, has been elected medical officer to the Lismore Dispensary, in room of Dr. J. E. Curry, resigned. There were four candidates for the appointment—Dr. Mangan, Dr. Poole, of Ardmore, Dr. Quinlan, of Ballyrafter, near Lismore, and Dr. Herbert of Clonakilty.

The arrivals of Irish provisions in London, two or three weeks ago, were 18,438 firkins of butter, and 1,098 bales bacon, 16,200 casks butter, and 775 bales bacon. Of bacon, the supply landed, of Irish and Hamburg, of prime quality, was barely sufficient for all wants.

The editor of the Kilkenny Journal has been shown an ancient medaleion of Greek or Roman art, found near Gort, in the County of Galway. It represents a bust of Minerva in strong relief, and exhibiting a great deal of excellence in the execution. The material is bronze, and the shape is oval.

Mr. T. O'Brien, M. P., and other gentlemen, have been in Carrick-on-Suir, for the purpose of establishing there a branch of the Hibernian bank. The building formerly occupied by the Tipperary bank has been taken for the purpose.

Thirty-four well-dressed, and comfortable-looking persons, principally young girls, have recently left Clonmel for Liverpool. The greater number of them have been sent for by relatives residing in America.

The Right Rev. Dr. Walshe, Bishop of Ossory, has administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to nearly 200 persons of various ages and sexes, in the parish church of St. Patrick's, Kilkenny.

Sir T. Redington is to be chief of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the state and management of the District Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, with a view to increased buildings and classifications of the inmates.

Mr. Daniel Hughes, formerly of the Agricultural Bank, after landing at Melbourne, purchased a lot of land, which he lately sold to the Government at a profit of £10,000.

The member for Dungarvan, John Francis Maguire, was announced to appear on the hustings of Clonmel.

By the new arrangements, Carrick, Ross, Dungarvan, and Ballinamult, will cease to be military stations.

Miss Catherine Hayes will sing at the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, previous to her departure for America.

At the great annual fair of Banagher, the number of sheep sold, amounted to 9,000, being in excess of last year's sales, of about 3,000. The business of this day was appropriated to the sale of horses, which for many years has not been equalled. Several buyers for the army picked up large lots of young horses, and for which prices were given from £30 to £45. Hunters were in great request, and sold from £60 to £120. Mr. Clarke, of Portumna, sold one at £110, and another at £65. Mr. Sherlock got 70 guineas for a four year old Frenchy. Rev. Mr. Egan got 60 guineas for a horse which was offered to be sold last week at £20. Mr. Henry Kenny, Lismore Castle, obtained £50 for a three year old colt. In fact such a good fair has not been in Banagher for years.

A farewell ball has been given at Fethard Barracks by the officers of the 17th Lancers. Amongst the fashionables present, were—Messrs. Thomas B. and Samuel H. Barton, Grove, and the Misses Barton; Captain and Mrs. Sankey, Coolmore, and Captain Harman; Mrs. and Miss Hayman; Mrs. Maher, Tullamaine Castle; and Miss Butler, Garnavilla; Captain Richard Orlando, and Mrs. Kellett; Mrs. Millett, Lismortagh, and Miss Johnson, Cork; Captain Hugh Gough, T. A.; Mr. Ross, 17th Lancers, commanding detachment, en route from Cashel to Dublin. The band of the regiment was in attendance, from Caher, and dancing was kept up until four o'clock in the morning.

The laborers employed on the estate of John C. Anderson, Esq., of Bushmills, were sumptuously entertained on the cutting down of the harvest. They assembled in a large store at "Bushmills Old Distillery," and after partaking of dinner and a plentiful supply of whiskey, commenced dancing, which was kept up with great spirit till an early hour next morning. John C. Anderson, Esq., the present heir to the Anderson estate, at Bushmills, arrived about a fortnight before, from Melbourne, Australia. On the evening of his arrival, the inhabitants of Bushmills gave him a most hearty welcome. The houses on the Anderson property were brilliantly illuminated.

The Cork Reporter speaks of the convict M'Cready, who has undergone the extreme penalty of the law, in front of the county gaol, having been convicted at the last assizes of having killed Sergeant Guinea, by discharging a loaded musket at him, in the Fermoy Barracks. The unhappy man had since his sentence, deported himself with the utmost propriety of conduct, attending with the most marked attention to the religious ministrations of the Roman Catholic chaplain of the prison. M'Cready was reconciled to the fulfilment of the terrible sentence.

A conference has taken place between Mr. Kinderley, a director, Mr. Clarke, traffic manager of the South Wales railway, Mr. O'Connor, secretary of the Waterford and Limerick railway, and Mr. Cotton, traffic manager of the Waterford and Kilkenny railway, for the purpose of arranging through fares to London by the Malakoff and South Wales line for merchandize from Waterford, and down the Limerick and Kilkenny lines. The result, we learn from the Waterford News, was most satisfactory.

Mr. Edmond Walsh is taking down his late dwelling-house, corner of Barronstrand street, Waterford. It held out for a long time against the corroding effects of time, and the assaults of the agitators for the opening of the street. The house once down, it is to be hoped that the others will speedily follow. How is it, the Waterford News indignantly asks, that the Corporation is idle, whilst a private individual is taking down his own house? Is the Corporation waiting for November?

A poor, honest, struggling woman, named Mills, residing in Ballytruckle, Waterford, and who, but lately, received £20, sent her from a relative in the United States, has had her box forcibly broken open by her son, a lad of 16 years old, who, immediately on obtaining the money, disappeared, and has not since been heard of. His mother made the complaint at the Police-office, to Mr. Hanrahan, but on being informed by him that no steps could be taken for his apprehension, unless upon her sworn informations, she declined doing so, and went away.

The Waterford papers regret to learn that some miscreant has written an anonymous letter to the lady of Nicholas O'Neill Power, Esq., Snowhill, threatening the destruction of her life if, in the words of the notice, "she did not part that murderer, Patrick Hogan," who is now acting as steward at Snowhill. The notice was in the shape of a note, enclosed in an envelope, badly written, and bearing the Waterford post-mark.

A Stocktonian was, a few days ago, describing to an Irishman the monsters who visited him during an attack of delirium tremens. 'But,' concluded he, in a consolatory key, 'it is all imagination, you know.' 'By me sowl,' replied Paddy, evidently disconcerted, 'I am not so sure of that. It is strange you never imagine you see angels flying at you at such times!'

The festival of the Stigmata of St. Francis, was celebrated with particular devotion in the Church of the Capuchin Convent, Walkin street, Kilkenny. High Mass was solemnized, and an effective discourse was delivered by the Rev. James E. Tommins.

An accident has occurred on the Midland Railway, near Oranmore. The train got off the rails about two miles from the station. Several of the passengers, among who were Mr. Kerin, of Dublin, and Mr. O'Farrall, Solicitor, of Loughrea, were seriously injured, by having their ribs and other bones broken.

Mr. James Hogan, late of Emill, near Moneygall, and now teacher of the Ballyegan Agricultural National School, Parsentown, has received a premium of £3 for the order, cleanliness, and discipline observed in his school, and the efficiency with which it is conducted. He received another premium when in charge of the Emill School.

The officers and men of the Great Western Railway are thinking of paying a well-deserved compliment to their chief engineer, Mr. Wilson, by presenting him with a beautiful service of plate, purchased from Messrs. Waterhouse and Co., of Dame street, Dublin, consisting of a claret jug and complete coffee and breakfast service in the Louis Quatorze style, with dinner and dessert forks and spoons.

Rev. Timothy Hanrahan and Rev. Michael Walsh, both of the diocese of Limerick, having finished their studies at Maynooth, have received the Order of Priesthood at the Convent of Mercy, in Limerick, at the hands of the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan.

One of the tenants lately evicted from the Creggs Estate, County Mayo, writes to the Tuam Herald, stating that having expended nearly £1,000 in buildings and permanent fixtures upon his holding, he has been turned out, without getting any compensation for his outlay.

Several tons of cabbage have been sent from Limerick to Rathkeale, and proves a profitable speculation to those concerned in the traffic.

Mr. Dargan, the railway contractor, has concluded a contract for the completion of the Limerick and Ennis line, for the sum of £53,000. Mr. Dargan takes 300 of the Company's shares in part payment of the contract, and enters into a bond for the completion of the railway in fifteen months. He has also engaged to takes shares to the extent of £10,000 in the Kilrush and Kilkee Railway, the construction of which is to be taken up by the Foynes and Limerick Railway Company who, by placing steamers between Foynes and Kilrush, will enable travellers to make the journey from Limerick to Kilkee in about three hours.

Three or four weeks ago, at the Petty Sessions of Killaloe, John M'Keough was prosecuted by Mr. Alton, for having leaders of greater length than 20 feet, to his eel-weirs. Defendant is tenant to the Commissioners of Fisheries, one of whom, Mr. F. Fennell, appeared to sustain the legality of the weirs. He contended that the law, as regards the length of leaders, applied exclusively to salmon weirs. Mr. Alton argued that it applied also to eel-weirs. The Bench were unanimously of the same opinion, and forthwith convicted the defendant in a penalty of £1 1s.

A troop of the Royal Artillery lately passed through Carlow. As soon as they were freed from duty, though saturated with wet and fatigued after a long march, they proceeded to the Mercy Convent to return thanks to the nuns who had been in the Crimea, for their kind attention to the sick and wounded. What adds more weight to this touching scene of gratitude, observes the Carlow Post, is the fact, that of the whole party only one was a Catholic.

Reports have been prevalent in Dublin, of the appointment of Mr. Justice Ball, as the Judge of the new Court of Appeal in Chancery. The Attorney-General, they said, was to have the vacant seat in the Common Pleas. The new Court of Appeal was to have been constituted soon after the opening of the Michaelmas Term. It will consist of the Lord Chancellor, with a new Judge of Appeal, (whose salary is to be £4,500), and one of the Common Law Judges.

Mr. Warner has favored the editor of the Waterford News, with the view of some of his casts of the most eminent men of past times, including Shakspeare, Milton, and O'Connell. They all reflect great credit on the skill of the artist, who is a native of Stratford-on-Avon, in England. The likeness of the late O'Connell is inimitable. We learn from the News, that many of those who differed in opinion from O'Connell, have given Mr. Warner orders for his likeness.

The Limerick Reporter refers with pleasure to the consecration of the new stone altar, and the solemn dedication of the church itself to St. Mary of the Annunciation, in the city of Limerick. The altar is the gift of Mrs. Christina Mary Hogan. The design, by Mr. McCarthy, of William's Park, Dublin, is a beautiful specimen of Gothic architecture, and is every way worthy of one of the most distinguished pupils of the great Pugin.

The proceedings taken in reference to the ruined Tipperary Bank, continue to excite the liveliest interest. Mr. Stanislaus Lynch, according to the wishes of the official manager, Mr. McDowell, recently attended at Phelan's Hotel, Clonmel, for the purpose of receiving payment of bills due at the branch of the concern in Carrick.

The consumption of tobacco has increased to such an extent, in Ireland, that the old manufactories, notwithstanding the immense additions they have received within the last few years, are insufficient to provide for the demands.

Mr. Marsh, the well-known Cork auctioneer, has made a very successful debut before a Limerick audience, at the sale of Mrs. Nason's household property in Mallow street, in the management of which he evinced consummate tact and judgment. The prices realized were excellent.

At a meeting of the Carrick-on-Suir Town Commissioners, it was agreed, on the motion of Mr. Phelan, T.C., to have the resolution of the 22nd August last, read, pledging the meeting to the project of establishing in town a branch of the Hibernian Bank.

By the last mail we learn that the Mayor of Waterford has left for London, for the purpose of urging on the attention of the Commander-in-Chief, the Duke of Cambridge, the claims and eligibility of Waterford for one of the proposed barracks. The Secretary at War, Lord Panmure, will also be waited on for the same purpose.

The Managing Committee of the Waterford Mechanics' Scientific Institute acknowledge the receipt of 27 vols. of Parliamentary Reports, &c., 118 Reports of Bills, and other Parliamentary Papers of the Sessions of 1855 and 1856—a donation from Robert Keating, Esq., M.P., to the Library.

The Waterford Chronicle says that when Lord Seaton, the Commander-in-chief, was in Waterford, he praised Waterford; but next day, when he went to Clommel, he praised Clonmel ten times more.

The Very Rev. Dr. Yore has presented to the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Cabra, county Dublin, the sum of £120, received by him for the clerical services rendered to them by him in his capacity of Rector of St. Paul's.

Several persons in the vicinity of Rathkeale have received by the last mail from Australia large money orders from their friends in that country and cheering accounts as to the state of business in the Antipodean regions.

From the Cork Constitution we learn that the prosecution of Connors, in the case of the Blarney murder, had cost the country $3,000; and a post-office case, where the value of the property stolen was about 1d., cost £800.

Charles M'Cready has been executed at the county goal, Cork, in the presence of three or four thousand people, for the murder of Sergeant Owen Guinny, of the 68th Durham Light Infantry, at Fermoy Barracks, in May last.

Several buyers from Meath, Westmeath, and other distant parts attended the last fair of Rathkeale in consequence of the facility afforded them by the railway for the transmission of their stock.

John R. Hewson, Esq., of Russellstown House, has been appointed agent over the Tipperary estates of Augustus Stafford, Esq., M.P.

Four of the Redemptorist Fathers opened a mission, three weeks ago, at Bree, county Wexford, the parish of the reverend Philip Devereux.

The parishes of Rockhill, Bruree, and St. Coleman's Well, have contributed £261 towards the funds for the erection of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, Limerick.

Correspondence.

Dublin Letter.

DUBLIN, Sept. 27, 1856.

Smith O'Brien's speech at Cahirmoyle is the great topic of gossip all round. They discuss it in the United Service Club Stephen's Green. Grave, gray-whiskered officers of her Majesty's army—old fellows like Joe Bagstock—smack their lips as they sip their Burgundy, in the shadow of the lemon-colored curtains of the coffee-room. They say it's sensible—dev'lish sensible—dev'lish gentlemanly. Young Lancer officers, grouped in front of the great pier-glass of the news-room, twist and sharpen their moustaches into cobbler's awls, dawdling out their approbation of that "demnition fine slap-up speech." In social parties, in dim, decent, cosy chambers—inside the gates of Trinity College—over brightly-covered tables—tables reflecting in their varnished depths carnation-hued crystal jugs, and amber-tinged decanters, and porcelain plates rolling over with clustered luxuries from the hot-house—the moderation of tone, subdued elegance of composition, and delicate toleration of adverse opinions—all its merits are exquisitely discussed. All this takes place among the Fellows—the comfortably-pensioned aristocracy of the Elizabethan University—and amongst them are McDowell, once the warm friend of Davis, and Ingraham, the author of the Memory of the Dead. Cracking their nuts and jokes, they say—of course, they say—it's an admirable production—it's so gentle, courteous, modest.

In an atmosphere infinitely less refined—within walls infinitely less redolent of the nectar and ambrosia of the gods—the speech in question has been, and is still, the fruitful subject of debate. Over tumblers of punch—punch, made with brown sugar, and stirred with spoons, every second one of which has a different crest, or no crest at all, and instead of being pure silver, is pewter, or iron and tin-foil—sit the metropolitan relics of the Repeal Association—Arkins, Reynolds, and Ray—thumping the table, and swearing O'Brien, after all, is the man.

The newspapers—daily and weekly—hither and thither—lengthways from the Boyne to the Blackwater—crossways from the Hill of Howth to the Poldoody oyster-beds—all echo this sentiment. No public document ever before elicited such unanimous approval. Even Judge Keogh looks better than ever, under his wig, since reading it. The London Examiner, striking his pen on it, flashes into a thousand encomiums. "Queen Victoria," exclaims this exhilarated antiquity, "has not a more loyal subject than Smith O'Brien, of Cahirmoyle."

How exuberantly grateful these Provincials are for the slightest favors which, negatively or still more equivocally, a man, who despises them in his soul, may bestow upon them!

O'Brien, as all the world knows, is urbane, kind, forgiving, sensitively reluctant to hurt a human being—even the wickedest and most malignant—sensitively so to a fatal excess. To a fatal excess, I say. For, relieved in a great measure from the terrors of conscience, by the extraordinary leniency they experience at his hands, all these political tricksters and swindlers exult in their impunity, and in their hilarious hysterics, drain their glasses and toss up their hats for the man who has only whipped them with flowers. It is this which astonishes them, and in their astonishment they explode into praises, the indecent profusion of which only establishes their ignoble deficiency of manhood. For all their meanness, hypocrisies, perfidies—for all their reckless promises to the people, and, as a matter of course, their reckless violations of the same—they had conscience enough left to expect, some day or other, from some one competent to inflict it—competent to inflict it with a vengeance—the severest castigation. But, as I have said, from the proud strong hand that had the power to scourge them, they have received the sweetest clemency, and so they kiss that hand, and over convivial cups, from the attic to the kitchen, they cry out it is the jewel of a hand!

And yet, if these recreant public men of Ireland—these riotous Repealers of 1843—these men, who from the turbulent tripod of Conciliation Hall disturbed the soul of the country with prophecies which their own want of truth, their own treacherous selfishness, served to defeat—if these men had still an impressionable spot left within them—if they had not been hardened into flint by the rottenness in which they have been steeped—as fragments of oaks have been hardened by their submersion in bog-holes—they would have been touched to the quick by the allusions (minutely worded as they were) which O'Brien made to those who had "saw fit to change their opinions."

O'Brien says that he will not impugn the motives of these gentlemen. He says he won't. But saying he won't, he does it. His reserve, after all, graceful and considerate as it is, serves the delinquent parties not a whit better than the pacific disposition of the Quaker did the British marine on board one of the American frigates in the Revolutionary war. Two ships came together—fastened their deadly iron coils about each other—locked themselves mutually in a murderous grip on the brink of the bottomless abyss—for such the ocean was to those gladiators, flinging curses at each other, thick and fast. The one carried the Lion. The other the white Stars and the blood-red Stripes. A marine, leaping on the quarter-deck of the Republican war-craft, with levelled bayonet, was temperately collared by a Quaker, who, unarmed and undismayed, curiously and complacently surveyed the fight.

"Friend," he whispered, "I fight not, but thee must go overboard."

And overboard the bristling intruder went—the Quaker, without a ripple on his brow or cheek, counting the bubbles which, as it were noted and checked off the depth of the watery fathomless shaft down which, with weights upon his heels, he sunk irrecoverably to sulphureous perdition.

And so it is that O'Brien, with the most sensitive scrupulosity, slips the political prevaricator—the pledge-breaker—the recusant Repealer—the brazen-faced repentant from Nationalism to the most submissive Vice-regal Provincialism—slips him, with the most mellifluous syllables, overboard. Down he goes! down he goes! Without a curse—without a storm! But down he goes, for all that. O'Brien "won't impugn their motives"—but his tenderness is as killing as the roughness of another.

KILMAINHAM.

MAYOR WOOD—LETTER FROM COLONEL DOHENY.

MY DEAR MEAGHER:—When I wrote last on this subject, I expected that the opponents of the Mayor of New-York would attempt to show some act or omission of his in his present office of which they could complain, or which they could at least cavil at. They have not ventured on such an attempt, and, considering the character of the charges they do make, it is certain, if they could find a fault, or even the semblance or shadow of a fault, they would loudly urge it. He therefore stands clear on this point, the most essential—in fact the only one of solid consequence presented by the issue.

No higher testimony could be offered in his favor—none more conclusive against their claim or pretense, than their own most eloquent silence. He has political enemies in all sections and sects. I heard two gentlemen, high in the confidence of both the so-called "American" and "Republican" parties, discussing the probability of Mayor Wood's re-election. Both were vehemently opposed to him. Either—from the bitterness of their tone—would sooner see a demon in the civic chair; but they seemed mutually to admit that the chances against him were desperate. One proposed, as a dernier resort, that the "Republicans" and the "Americans"—that is to say, both branches of the Know-Nothings, for the Republicans are, in fact, as our old friend Lord Derby said of the Irish Orangemen, "the rotten rump of that rotten faction," sprinkled over with a few straight-line or straight-laced Whigs—should mutually accept from each other the nominees for Mayor and City Judge. I mention this to show that he has enemies in all organizations. The Whigs detest him—the Temperance men abhor him. The Hard Democrats are in wrath with him, as appears by the Daily News. Now is it not strange that all these sections or factions cannot supply one man bold enough to charge Mayor Wood with official misconduct. Surely if they could they would. Men do not stoop to what is vile from instinct or by nature. They in general prefer fair means to foul. If they had legitimate weapons to use against an opponent they would use them instead of weapons dipped in poison.

Now let us test those to which they have recourse. Some one has written what he calls Mayor Wood's Life; the value of which may be tested by the author's avowal, that he ministered to the darkest passions for hire. When one couples this avowal with the undertaking—base enough without a base motive—the whole proceeding seems so abhorrent that it would be unjust to our nature to believe for a moment that it could have any other effect than that of exciting general disgust.

There is one charge, vehemently urged before his former election, which is echoed and re-echoed by every party, viz: his partnership proceedings with Marvine. You will remember that this case is not finally decided; and it is therefore wanton and unjust to urge it so loudly; for I believe it is an admitted principle, that subjects under investigation should not be prejudged. I cannot conceive anything in political warfare more repugnant to every sense of decency, than this. But supposing that the case, instead of being "adhuc sub judice," were irrevocably decided against Wood, what then? It amounts simply to this: that he represented to Marvine that the vessel he supplied for the partnership—which no doubt belonged to him at the time—cost a great deal more than she really did. I have myself been concerned in some partnership cases, and I have read several others, and I find the invariable practice to be, to prove, not the represented, but the real value of the stock which belongs to one of the partners before the partnership. This was not done in this case; but, on the contrary, a course was followed which seems to me irregular and illegal. Is there anything more common, than for sellers to represent that they paid so much for their goods? What would be thought of a man who buys goods on such representations, bringing an action for the difference between the real and the represented price. And yet it is precisely similar to what has been done in Wood's case. Legally, I see no distinction. Morally, there certainly is none. If it be lawful to misrepresent the price when you are selling to a stranger, it is lawful when you are selling to a partner. What was it to Marvine what the bark cost? His sole business was to see what she was worth.

The other points in the case are of a similar character. Wood bought all the goods. Marvine knew their prices. He took them at these prices. If Wood got the credit, what was that to Marvine? The whole question was, Were the goods worth the money charged by Wood? And that question Marvine was bound to determine for himself.

And, furthermore, I must say, that I have often seen suits at law, where the prevailing party was the wrong-doer. Courts of law are governed by inflexible rules of evidence, and many and many a time it has occurred, that a man, having a most undeniable right, is defeated for want of evidence, or through the means of false evidence against him. Therefore it is, that it is most unjust to deduce grave immoralities from decisions of this kind, and especially when the decision is appealed from.

It is urged against Mayor Wood, that the person who fills the Civic Chair ought not to be a prominent party man. Why? Is it not to secure equal justice to all? If this be the real end in view, would it not imply that the present Mayor was influenced in his official duties by a party bias?—that he warped justice in favor of one party and against another? If so, when, where, for, or against whom? He was charged with getting up prosecutions against derelict officials in this city. It was said he was officious, intermeddling and tyrannical. Be that as it may—I offer no opinion either on the prosecutors or prosecuted—one thing is certain, the prosecuted were not selected from any one party; and some of them belonged to Mayor Wood's most ardent supporters.

"'Verbum non amplius addam."

Sincerely yours, MICHAEL DOHENY.

Bridgeport, Conn., Oct. 3d.

EDITOR IRISH NEWS:

DEAR SIR:—Our "Montgomery Guards" had a parade and target excursion on last Monday. They turned out forty-one muskets, and presented a truly soldier-like appearance. I observed a very decided improvement in their evolutions, and their shooting was quite as good as usual. The first prize was won by Private John Lane, who, bye the by, is a credit, in appearance and address, to the "Montgomeries." The second and third prizes were won by Privates P. O'Donnell and Bernard Nugent. So you see the privates had it all their own way. The company entertained their friends in a most hospitable and agreeable manner in the evening. Everything, from first to last, passed off most happily. DOLPHINS BARN

LETTER OF ARCHBISHOP MACHALE.

From the Nation.

A letter, bearing the well-known signature of the illustrious Archbishop of the West, has been given to the public, and with good reason has largely occupied the attention of the Dublin papers. Living and laboring for the cause of religion, justice, and charity, when that great and good Prelate raises his voice it is in defence of that sacred cause; the maintenance of truth, the defence of God's poor. In him, at least, virtue, public and private, ever found a friend, when treachery and deceit found, alas, but too often a champion where they ought to have met a foe. When a flood of corruption covered the face of the country, and honesty and truth seemed to have disappeared for ever, they found sanctuary with him; when a people bowed their heads in mute and sinful despair, beholding the triumph of fraud, the ruin and betrayal of all their hopes, and the exaltation of their betrayers, one voice was heard, even in that dark hour, with words of assuring, cheering, sustaining hope—the hope that is strong to the last, and overcometh all things. It spoke of confidence in God's providence, of the ultimate triumph of truth, and the retribution which sooner or later was sure to overtake the guilty traitors. And so, many an Irish heart, exiled for ever to a foreign land, prays gratefully to Heaven for the friend who never deserted the poor, but stood by them in the day of distress, who withstood the exterminator and the faith-robber, when others looked on with sealed lips and folded hands, with criminal apathy or guilty silence. Far away in the mines of England we have heard his name named with accents full of gratitude and veneration by the poor fellows who regarded him as the faithful guardian of the old father and mother at home; the protector of "the cabin-door fast by the wildwood." His splendid letters, full of scathing rebuke of the exterminator, of appeal for the noble peasantry being scattered over the earth—have been spelled out at the firesides in England by English-born children of Irish parents; children who inherit the parents' love and veneration for one they have never seen, and probably never will see.

The letter we publish to-day, like all the rest, is a powerful effort on behalf of our poor people; a masterly appeal for justice and manumission for the poor but chivalrous Irishmen who fight for England with the slave's collar on their necks. Never was appeal more opportune, never more powerful, more irresistible. Never did the mean spirit of Catholic servility receive a more trenchant scourging. On a recent occasion we adverted to the unhappy position of the Irishmen serving in the English army. We showed how they were driven by inexorable necessity into the service of England. They never disgraced the country of their birth by cowardice; they lavishly poured out their heart's blood—for what? Not for home or country—not in defence of their altars and firesides; the peculiar aggravation of their humiliation consisted in the fact that the very power in whose support and defence they bled, was that which denied them the attributes of freemen, and rendered their position that of mere mercenaries. We saw that any act of bravery or spirit that could be pointed to as performed by English troops in the late war, was the work of those poor fellows; and we grieved to think that such valor should be unrequited, that such men should fight with servile manacles on their limbs, and fall in a cause in which they had no interest, save as the paid soldiery of England. We read in the same papers the list of our countrymen who fell in England's cause at Sebastapol, and those who were evicted by English laws at Connemara—the name of the son who fell by the Russian bullet, and the father who was slain by landlord law. Scutari and Beicos received the wounded Irishman at the moment a workhouse became the home of his aged parents. When "peace was proclaimed," the English-born soldier, with gladsome heart, sought the old rooftree, while through burning tear-drops the Irish soldier gazed upon the blackened rafters and desolate walls of his once happy, though humble home. The soldier who fears not death is truly brave—the Irish soldier was asked to meet death by those who refused him the consolations that take from death its sting. He was deprived of the greatest strength soldier or citizen ever knew, the ministrations of religion; for the Englishman, who fought as a freeman, those were plentifully supplied; for the unfortunate Irishman there was no such boon, until his masters were coerced by selfish considerations to permit it to a limited extent. The endurance of privations unparalleled, spiritual and corporeal, did not shake the indomitable courage of the hardy Celts; they returned home, feeling that though England might have cause to hang her head for defeat, they at least were victors. Mimicking, as usual, the London fashion, the aristocracy and landlord class in this country declared that the unequalled bravery of the troops, especially the Irish portion, deserved all possible gratitude and praise, and in order to exhibit those feelings they propose—not to raise the Irish soldier to an equality of rights and privileges, as he bears an equality of danger, and exhibits an equality, if not a superiority of bravery, with his English comrade—not to recompense his services by removing the galling badge that renders his position ignominious as compared with that which he ought to fill. No; they propose to bestow upon him a "transient display of convivial hospitality," as the Archbishop designates it—to give an hour's food, where they ought to give a life's freedom. The Catholic Irish soldier is to sit down and eat his pudding, like the contented and grateful employé of a liberal master, and buckle on his knapsack next morning, the bond slave he was before.

And Catholics were found amongst those who offered this insult to the Catholic soldiers; who talked of how those soldiers had "fought for their country!" And quasi liberal journals, venal as servile, were found to write up this "dance in chains" as a national ovation—a great popular demonstration. Not a word of allusion to the anomalous and ignominious position of the Irishman in the service of England; not a voice aided our own in pointing out that he fought in fetters—that he battled for no country of his, for no faith or fireside dear to him, until the great and illustrious advocate of the Catholic Irishman spoke out, and forthwith the bell-man of the troupe rattles his instrument, and, in the best words he can master, declares that the Archbishop has said exactly what he has said, or intended to say, or was about to say, or would have said, perhaps, if "an honest penny" were as likely to be turned by saying as by not saying it. Meantime, he endeavors to convey that the words in which the illustrious Prelate forcibly and clearly points out the true way of honoring and rewarding the Irish soldiers, and the glaring mockery of the proposed plan, is only another way of applauding the whole scheme; and so with suspicious haste he bells the announcement that the Archbishop has joined the party. But the bitter wails and lugubrious wit of the Mail and the Packet reveal the true state of the case—their ill-concealed rage is humorous to behold—a dinner they may have on as large a scale as money can procure, but they know that all the blarney in a tun of Maderia will not make the soldier forget the reward he ought to receive, but is denied. He will contrast the conviviality of a night which a few noblemen have kindly given him, with the boon which has been demanded for him, as a well-won right, by the soldier's true friend, the loved and venerated Archbishop of Tuam.

THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY—SECRET SOCIETIES.

From the Paris Correspondent of the Times.

The revolutionary movement in France has two great centres, which are perfectly distinct and independent of each other. They are sometimes opposed, but often act in conjunction, according to circumstances. The one has always had its principal seat in Paris, where the projects and systems are devised; the head-quarters of the other are at Lyons, where the mass of the people is more easily and more surely acted upon. In fact, Paris is, in the revolutionary scheme, the head that plans—Lyons the arm that is expected to execute. In the associations of Lyons may be found men of nearly all political color—red, white, blue, and black; and, so far from being exclusive on account of different shades of opinion, they seek, on the contrary, to draw within their sphere all the elements of discontent that are to be found in the surrounding provinces.

At Lyons the party generally most remarkable for audacity, is that of the "Revolution"—this term being now particularly applied there, as throughout the empire, to the Republicans, Socialists, and Communists—the agglomeration of men who are in a state of material destitution, and consequently of discontent; or who are, in fact, incendiary agents, whose main object is the overthrow of all public order, utterly reckless of consequences, and who, provided the work of destruction be done, care very little about what is to come after. Among the divers theories and systems that prevail in that general association the most prominent is that of 1793—in fact, of Robespierre, St. Just, Marat, Chalieu, and Babœuf, who are all regarded in the light of sages and guides in articles of revolutionary faith. The institutions of St. Just appear to form their code of morals; their idea of the constitution would be modelled on that of Robespierre; and their legislation based on the doctrines of the Ami du Peuple of Marat.

The origin of this sweeping Jacobinism is traceable to the Lyonnais. It is spread through the districts that are watered by the Rhone and the Saone, and is found on the banks of the Loire, and by these channels of communication it makes its way through a considerable mass of population of naturally ardent character, and whose social condition renders them apt instruments for political convulsion. It descends the Rhone, and passes on to the Isere, reaches the Alpine districts, and penetrates to Marseilles. This sort of geographical distribution is not without interest, as it proves that the most active propagandists, the more persevering, and the more reliable of all those agents of the great centre of action, are chiefly those whose occupations connect them with the rivers, such as the raftsmen, or flotteurs of the Nievre, and the debardeurs of the Yonne. These rivermen are of a wild and independent character. Their fathers were among those who never ceased to conspire under the restoration. They composed the mass of Liberals known as forming the Drapeau Liberal. They know by heart every song that Beranger has ever written; and they perpetuated the traditions of the empire and cherished the flame of Bonapartism in the hearts of the peasants. What the rivers just mentioned, have left undone, is attempted to be completed by means of the railroads, and across the valley of the Loire the propagandists of the Lyons school reach the Rive de Gier and St. Etienne. These last two are the fortresses of the Socialism of Louis Blanc, exalted and inflamed by local hatreds and passions among the iron and coal men, who abound in these districts.

The topographical sketch already given, enables us to follow the revolutionary movement in its course more easily. The blacksmiths, the ironmongers, and the miners of the Rive-de Gier and St. Etienne have always been the most ready allies in all such emergencies. The poor miners in particular, with bodies exhausted by excessive labor, poorly paid, and incessantly goaded to exasperation by the petty chicanery of village lawyers, have been found always ready to rush on at the first summons against the bourgeoisie and the proprietaires who are the objects of their hatred.

The secret societies of the department of the Allier do not present a very menacing character; they exist, but mostly want the power of initiation. They invariably wait for the mot d'ordre from Lyons and Paris, and while in that expectation, maintain an utterly passive position. They are discreet, cautious, and suspicious—qualities which are said to be peculiarly characteristic of the peasants of the Allier, and which exclude a readiness to assume the offensive. In other times, however, the Allier had a regular revolutionary chief at Donjon—a man of action, of a decidedly energetic nature, and a Jacobin by temperament. He had organised and commanded, with arms in hand, the Bourbonnaise movement in 1851. He was imprisoned, condemned, and transported to Algeria. Donjon is, with La Palisse, the highest point of the revolutionary agitation of the Allier. Those of the association who held the rank corresponding to that of sub-officers in the army used to receive their orders from a former member of the French Assembly now in exile; he has been an old Montagnard since 1830, and was named a Commissioner-General after the revolution in 1848. The Allier was one of the departments that sent Red representatives to the National Assembly after that catastrophe; among those were Madet, Fargin Fayolle, Ledru Rollin, and Laussidat, who are now either transported to the colonies or in exile.

The department of the Nievre is different from the one just described. It can hardly be affirmed that the Nivernais is a Socialist Republican, or by character disposed to Jacquerie, though some sanguinary revolts have taken place at Corne and at Moulinsen-Gilbert. The Nivernais suffer a good deal from the oppression of the wealthy proprietors. The remains of the old feudal noblesse and the inheritors or acquirers of real property, in number from two hundred to three hundred persons, keep the county, which is chiefly covered with wood or laid out in meadow, in their own hands. The wood and the crops are sold, but the proprietors do not reside on the soil to which they owe their fortune, and the proceeds are spent abroad. Beyond his small stipend, the laborer receives few acts of kindness, and no portion of the wealth which is spent at Paris or elsewhere, returns to him. He is attached to the soil, but he has no house that he can call his own—no enclosure—no land, and, of course, but the smallest savings. He lives from hand to mouth, the victim of usury, and without hope of bettering his condition. When employed, he earns about 25 sous a day without food, and 10 with. His great resource against illness or destitution, is when his wife goes up to Paris as a nurse. His moral and intellectual condition is very low, and his ignorance complete. It is not surprising that these men should be easily beguiled by propagandist agents, who make the strongest appeals to their passions and their necessities. Under this influence, when they vote, they vote Red; and when a collision takes place, their fight is a Jacquerie. From 1789 the choice of the Nivernais was fixed on the candidates of Jacobinism. St. Just, though representative from Aisne, was a native of Decize, a town of the Nievre. Milot and the brothers Gambon were natives of the same department. The "flotteurs" of the Nievre and the Loire are their principal agents and their messengers. By them is transmitted the summons of convocation, as well as the supply of arms. Once roused from their habitual inertness, these men are capable of anything; it was they who organised in December, 1851, the insurrection of Clamecy. The central points of Socialism are La Charite, Cosne, Fourchambeault, where the workmen were said to be irritated by fines and stoppages, and at Clamecy.

There is reason to believe that some of the exiled who have been allowed to return to France, have not renounced their former convictions, or abandoned any of their hopes; that they are again desirous of trying the chances of conspiracy, and are still laboring to spread the infection and plant it where it had not previously penetrated. The sabotiers, or makers of wooden shoes, and the forgerons, or blacksmiths, are said to be those who are most easily seduced. Several among the smaller class of advocates and attorneys are said to be infected with Socialism, and communications and correspondence are kept up with the revolution committees abroad by means of the flotteurs, the mariners, and the hawkers of cheap publications, who, under the pretext of selling their wares, carry to the remote villages the instructions and orders of the distant demagogues.

BISHOP ENGLAND ON SOUTHERN SLAVERY.

From the United States Catholic Miscellany, December 9, 1843.

We understand that considerable attention has been excited by a document going the rounds of the papers under the title of a Bull of Pope Gregory XVI. against Slavery,' and several inquiries are made as to the meaning of the document, and the truth of the charge that the Catholics have concealed or suppressed it in the United States for the last four years.

On recurring to our own files, we find that the document itself, not a 'bull,' but an Apostolic Letter, was published in the Miscellany of March 14th, 1840, and that our late lamented bishop, in his two first letters to the Hon. John Forsyth, then Secretary of State, published likewise in the Miscellany, October 3d and 10th, 1840, fully explained its true meaning. We cannot now say whether it was published in the other Catholic papers of the day, as we have not regular files; but we are under the impression that such was the case. In the acts of the Councils of Baltimore, there is a record of its having been formally read and accepted by the prelates in the Council of 1850. So much for Catholics concealing or suppressing it. It was likewise given to the public through other channels. It is found, for example, in the appendix to Mr. Forsyth's address to the people of Georgia, on the nomination of General Harrison for the Presidency. And yet, in just three years it is again trumpeted through the land as something new and hitherto unknown! Truly, we can somtimes be hoaxed.

As to the meaning of the Apostolic Letter, we can see no room for doubt. His Holiness speaks of reducing Indians, Negroes, and such others, into slavery; of assisting those who engage in that inhuman traffic, and through desire of gain, and to foster their trade, go so far as to excite quarrels and wars in their native country. He opposes the continuance of the evil which several of his predecessors, whom he names, endeavored with imperfect success to repress. They speak explicitly of reducing freemen, Indians in South America and Negroes in Guinea, to slavery. In one word, he condemns what our own laws condemn as felony—the Slave Trade. Domestic slavery, as it exists in the Southern States, and in other parts of the Christian world, he does not condemn. This is evident from the tenor of the Apostolic letter itself, from the declarations made concerning it in Rome, and from the fact that, at the fourth provincial council of Baltimore, in which the majority of bishops were from the slaveholding States, it was accepted without any one's thinking it interfered at all with our domestic policy. We apprehend there is a vast difference between the slave-trade and domestic slavery. At least our own laws make the distinction, punishing the one and sanctioning the other. It is absurd, then, to conclude that because the Apostolical letter condemns the piratical slave-trade, it is also aimed against domestic servitude.

There is no danger—no possibility, on our principles—that Catholic theology should ever be tinctured with the fanaticism of abolition. Catholics may and do differ in regard to slavery, and other points of human policy, when considered as ethical or political questions. But our theology is fixed, and is and must be the same now as it was for the first eight or nine centuries of Christianity. During that period, as Bishop England has ably shown in his series of Letters to the Hon. John Forsyth, the church, (lett. xvi.) by the admonitions of her earliest and holiest pastors; by the decrees of her councils, made on a variety of occasions; by her synodical condemnation of those, who, under pretext of religion, would teach the slave to despise his master; by her sanction and support of those laws by which the civil power sought to preserve the rights of the owner; by her own acquiring such property, by deeds of gift or of sale, for the cultivation of her lands, the maintenance of her clergy, the benefit of her monasteries, of her hospitals, of her orphans, and of her other works of charity, repeatedly and evidently testified that she regarded the possession of slave property as fully compatible with the doctrines of the Gospel; and this whilst she denounced the pirate who made incursions to reduce into bondage those who were free and unoffending, and regarded with just execration the men who fitted out ships, and hired others to engage in the inhuman traffic. In Catholic theology the question is a settled one; and no one would be recognised as a Catholic who would utter the expressions we have heard from the lips of American abolitionists who call themselves Protestants: "If the Bible allows slavery, it should be amended." "The Christianity of the nineteenth century should as far excel the Christianity of the early church, as that did the old Jewish law," &c.

The line of conduct prescribed especially to the Catholic clergy, is laid down by the venerable and learned Bishop of Philadelphia, in his standard work, Theologia Moralis, vol. i., tract v., cap. vi., and tract viii., cap. iv. From the first cited chapter we translate the following paragraph:

"But what is to be thought of the domestic servitude which exists in most of the Southern and Western States, where the posterity of those who were brought from Africa still remain in slavery? It is indeed to be regretted that in the present fulness of liberty, in which all glory, there should be so many slaves, and that to guard against their movements, it has been necessary to pass laws prohibiting their education, and in some places greatly restricting their exercise of religion. Nevertheless, since such is the state of things, nothing should be attempted against the laws, nor anything be done or said that would make them bear their yolk unwillingly. But the prudence and the charity of the sacred ministers should appear in their effecting that the slaves, imbued with Christian morals, render service to their masters, venerating God, the supreme Master of all; and that the masters be just and kind, and by their humanity and care for their salvation, endeavor to mitigate the condition of their slaves. The Apostles have left us these rules; which, if any one should neglect, and, through a feeling of humanity, endeavor to overturn the entire established order, he would in most cases but aggravate the condition of the slaves. The Pope, in the before mentioned constitution, omitted not to lay this before us: 'For the Apostles, inspired by the Holy Ghost, taught slaves to obey their temporal masters, as they would Christ himself, and to do the will of God cheerfully: and they also gave a precept to the masters to act kindly towards their slaves, to give them what is just and reasonable, and to refrain from threatening them, knowing that the Lord of both is in heaven, and that with Him there is no acceptation of persons."

How strictly this instruction is complied with, and how beneficial are its effects is known to every one who has any knowledge of the character of Catholic slaves. They are everywhere distinguished as a body for orderly habits and fidelity to their masters; so much so, that in Maryland, where they are numerous, their value is 20 or 25 per cent. above that of others.

We have said this much, not to vindicate the Southern clergy of our church from the charge of abolitionism, for we believe it has never been preferred against them, but simply to satisfy the inquiries of some of our fellow-citizens, whose attention has been drawn by recent events to this subject.

PROSPERITY TO IRELAND.

From the Kilkenny Journal.

At this delightful period when the air resounds with a jubilee over the modern Golden Age, the Report of the Irish Census Commissioners strides like a spectre into the Banquet Hall. With a sublime audacity, inspired by the complete consciousness of our inability to resent the affront, England submits to public scrutiny one of the darkest records of her dominion in Ireland—the history of the ten years from '41 and 51; and so callous have we become to the story of our own sufferings, that it scarcely excites as much sensation as would the last new novel of Dickens or Thackeray. Frigid Political Economists analyze it as a curious study; balmy Whig philantropists think the result rather satisfactory on the whole; and the Times gleefully chuckles over it as a memorial of successful statesmanship. And yet it is the history of the short period of ten years, during which the enormous number of TWO MILLIONS of the Irish people perished of famine!

Let us glance at a few of its revelations. We are not quite certain that all the statements of the Census are to be relied upon, but in general the best sources of information seem to have been resorted to, and considerable care taken in testing the accuracy of the reports. Here and there, however, we are still left to mere conjecture, as to some of the most important data which such a Commission should have developed, For example, the actual number of deaths by famine, during that dreary decade, can still only be speculated upon. The figures under this head, however, understated as they are, inspire one with horror. In 1842, there were only 187 deaths by starvation; in 1845, three times the number—516; next year they amounted to 2,041; in 1847 the deaths amounted to 6,058! And, passing over the year's '48 and 49, how many of the Irish starved to death, think you, in 1851—the great and glorious year of the Exhibition of all Nations? No less than six hundred and fifty-two! Ireland was supposed to be in ecstasies about that magnificent event, while nearly a thousand of her wretched people were dying of hunger. But as we have said, these figures are not at all an adequate indication of the deaths by famine. Even the Times admits this. "It is difficult (says the great British organ) to ascertain the deaths by actual starvation, because much mortality that is referred to fever, to cholera, and other maladies, is primarily due to the insuffieiency of food; and then, again, those deaths which are attributed to 'infirmity, debility, and old age,' and which in the years of famine are very numerous—in 1847, for example, being more than twenty-two thousand—are not easily distinguished from the cases of downright starvation."

But this is not all. Who shall tell the number of gaunt victims, who passed away in their lone misery, on the bleak roadside and in the dingy hovel—no friendly hand to reach them even a drop of water—no eye but God's to witness their dying agony. "No pen," observes the Report, "has recorded the numbers of the forlorn and starving who perished by the wayside or in the ditches, or of the mournful groups, sometimes of whole families, who lay down and died, one after another, upon the floor of their miserable cabin, and so remained, uncoffined and unburied, till chance unveiled the appalling scene."

Of course it was in the rural districts that the famine committed most terrible havoc; and the Commissioners enable us to form some estimate of it by giving the rural population of 1841 and 1851, the number of square miles of arable land, and the number of inhabitants on each square mile during the two years. Let us glance over a few items. In our own county of Kilkenny, in 1841 there were 236 to the square mile; in ten years the proportion dwindled to 185! In Kerry the number dwindled from 416 to 216! In Longford from 361 to 253; in Clare from 377 to 229; in Cork from 334 to 221; in Donegal from 472 to 231. On the whole, the rural population of the country alone was diminished one-third!

But enough of these sickening details for the present. In fact we feel that we are quite "behind the time" in lamenting them at all; and "sensible" people actually regard them as symptoms of "Irish progress and prosperity." Hear how philosophically the Times comments upon the matter:—

As the famine which brought the Israelites to Egypt ended in the happiest results, since by means of it they obtained the land of Goshen, it is every day becoming more apparent that the fearful miseries of 1846 are destined to prepare another Goshen for the people of Ireland. The improvements which have been made in the distribution of lands, in the culture of the soil, in the encouragement of manufactures, and in minor points, are blessings to be enjoyed by the Irish themselves, and to be felt in their influence througout the whole of the United Kingdom.

Such is the prevailing cant of the day, and unfortunately it is not limited to the truculent Times, but promulgated by many an Irishman who is happy over his own mess of pottage, whatever betide. The people have disappeared and are still disappearing, into the pauper grave or the emigrant ship; but then, English and Scottish capitalists are "consolidating" the land, our breeds of stock are improving beyond calculation, and the landlords are at perfect liberty to do what they like with their own.

So, "Prosperity to Ireland!"

HOW M. P.'S ARE BOUGHT OVER.

From Mr. Roebuck's Speech at Sheffield.

What I would impress upon the people's minds is, that their only hope of reform in the administration of this country is through a reform of the Commons' House of Parliament. It is not simply in the House of Commons, it is in the constituencies of this country that reform must take place. And now let me say one word about yourselves. You are called upon by the law of England, it is said once in seven years, but in fact much oftener, to elect members of parliament. Whom do you select? I judge by the result. Now what occurs? I speak in a town far from London—a manufacturing town—a new borough called into existence by the Reform Bill; and I tell you what has occurred in my own observation. You have returned men to parliament who, the moment they got up to London, have forgotten you. You have chosen men to go to parliament who, the moment they have got there, have been overwhelmed, have been utterly destroyed, as it were, politically speaking, by the influence to which they have been subjected. Mr. So-and-So has a wife. Going to London, he desired to go into society, and Mrs. So-and-So to take her place as the wife of a member of parliament. Now I recollect some time ago telling the story I am about to repeat to you, as a singular illustration of the influence of society upon a member of parliament. When Lord Melbourne's administration was coming to an end, his majorities were very small; and any man who stood out, who had scruples upon that occasion, became of importance. Now there were certain men who could not obtain importance in any other way, who suddenly found themselves beset with scruples. They did not know how they were going to vote. Thereupon they were fastened upon by the whippers-in, and they were beset to ask how they were to vote. There was one gentleman, and he came from the manufacturing districts, who suddenly was beset with scruples. Coming events cast their shadows before, as was wittily said after a majority of only four for ministers. The coming event was that they were going out, and he discovered that his vote was a matter of great importance, and he gave the ministerial whipper-in to understand that at that moment he was unsettled how to vote. Now that was a very significant statement. The whipper-in knew what it meant, and he immediately set about to know how he could gain Mr. So-and-So's vote. And how do you think he gained it? By offering him a place? No; that was not his weak side; but he sent him an invitation to the Queen's ball. The man from that time was caught—he was bound to the ministerial chariot-wheel—he voted for the ministry, and swelled the majority from four to five.

WILLIAM RUSSELL—THE CRIMEAN CORRESPONDENT—THE RUSSIAN CORONATION.

From the London Times.

We confess to some pleasure in the thought that for once, at least, our columns exhibit an achievement for which all our readers must have a profound appreciation. Till they have tried it—which possibly they have no wish to do—they may think it no very difficult task to report a trial or a speech, to write a leading article, to compose a diplomatic dispatch, or even work out a problem in high mathematics. They don't know but what they could do these things, if they tried. But there is one thing that almost everybody has tried to do, and desired to do most earnestly, and has been conscious of a very ignominious failure. That is to describe fully, exactly, forcibly and graphically any remarkable scene that one may happen to have witnessed. Our correspondent at Moscow had to get up at four, and to fight his way through crowded streets to a gate of the Kremlin, where, as he says, "a mass of officers, of ladies in full dress, of mujiks, of well-clad burgeois, of strange peasants from distant countries, of tchenovniks in official costume, blazing with stars, and orders, and crosses, fret and fume at the narrow entrance, which is blocked up with carriages, horses, droschkies, and soldiers. Such is the first move, and such the first scene of a day every minute rising in variety, splendor and interest, and creating fresh necessity for keeping the mind, and the heart, too, open to every impression." The eye, however, and the pen that were not thus overwhelmed by the fatal charge of Balaklava and the dread confusion of Inkermann have happily been equal to sights and sounds scarcely less surprising and stunning than those of a battle, though peaceful and painless. Yet—as we cannot add to this description, we will content ourselves with calling attention to its merits—will our readers just observe how completely the writer has been able to keep up the quickness of his observation, the keenness of his perception, and the freshness of his taste for the picturesque or the quaint throughout a day of which every minute made new demands on those delicate faculties? The minute distinctions of rank, of service, of honor, in the generals and staff of the army; the semi-barbarous head-dress, the singular decoration, the unusual color or material; the costly or beautiful regalia and jewels; the veterans of the French war, with their obsolete uniforms and historic recollections; the grotesque pomp of heraldry; the great names of Russia and the late war, the two Gortschakoffs, Biruleff, Menschikoff, Luders, Stalipine, Todleben; the representatives of a hundred races differing from time immemorial in aspect, dress, religion, and character; the strange architecture and peculiar arrangement of the edifices round this marvellous scene; the vast and gorgeous city showing itself beyond them; the feverish movements of the crowd; the signals of the long ceremonial; the arrival of the various embassies, with their national characteristics, their persons, their uniforms, their manner and gait; the solemn acts themselves, the dignity and grace of the chief personages, the beauty of their dress, the simple reverence of their bearing; the frantic devotion of the people, the shrill tones of ecstatic loyalty, a thousand living pictures, a thousand echoing sounds, a thousand breathing forms, a thousand throbbing pulses, are all seized in rapid succession—the work of one day—fixed in perpetuity, and transferred from mortal gaze and cold oblivion to the imperishable pages of history. Yes. In all his sixty million subjects, in his hundred races, and his names of terror—in that devoted band of servants that stand round the throne of the Czar, he had not on that day a more useful and effective friend than the skillful Irishman who was recording for all the world, on tables more enduring than brass or stone, the greatness of his power, the magnificence of his court, the loyalty of his subjects, the devotion of his church, and the simple, natural affection of his family. What will strike a discerning mind still more than this is, the unflagging spirit which could be alive to the humorous and ridiculous in the midst of strong impressions of a wholly different character. Another pen might have described the antique magnificence of the French equipage as it drove up to the doors of the cathedral to set down the ambassador, without noticing the little outbreak of impatiencewhich distinguished anEnglish coachman and "help" disguised in French pageantry. Another eye might not have caught the white gloves of the "veterans" soiled by contact with their blackened moustaches. The fine old Austrian gentleman in puce velvet, pearls, and high-heeled boots, stands out a picture by himself—a day's work for some men. Others might easily have omitted the striking juxtaposition of the Turkish embassy and the Cossack and Greek spectators; the odd contrast presented by the scarlet uniforms of the Italian and Spanish diplomatists; the musicians not knowing when to begin and when to stop; and last, but not least, the Jew behind the clock-tower improving the occasion by the sale of bad gazeuse and donkey sandwiches, of which, as long as the demand lasted, he had, with no visible stock, the mysterious means of keeping up a perpetual supply.

Commenting on this article, the Ulsterman, published in Belfast, remarks:

This is an eulogium well merited. And not the least hand-some part of it is the acknowledgment (not often willingly made by English journals when they celebrate our men of genius) that Russell is an Irishman. Indeed, Irishmen have made a grand figure in this past war. Not only have they, in the rank and file of England's army, proudly upheld their traditionary valor, but their pens have been the truest depicters of the terrible incidents of the battle. Russell, the Irishman of the Times, Woods, the Irishman of the Herald, and Murphy, the Irishman of the Daily News, have as well supported Ireland's literary character with their pens, as the Irish soldiers maintained her fame for valor with their swords.

MORE AMERICAN ANNEXATION

From the Leinster Express.

A new annexation is about to be effected by the United States, which is by far the most useful ever attempted, and which will prove equally unobjectionable to the most fastidious conservator of the "balance of power." The American Minister, Mr. Dallas, at a banquet of the Cutlers' Company at Sheffield, alluded as follows to the projected telegraphic communication between the Old and New worlds:—

"You have probably heard already that the irresistible and insatiable cupidity of my countrymen is about undertaking a daring exploit of annexation (laughter)—an annexation that will at once embrace these islands (laughter), and ultimately include all Europe, Asia, and Africa. I have actually in my possession a piece of the line recently forged to bind these three venerable continents to the new one of Columbia.

The preliminary soundings have been made,—the cable is in process of fabrication, and thus we may before many years expect to see realized, in a plain manner of fact application of science, more than the boasted celerity of the fairy Puck, that he would "put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes." Little thought the immortal bard of Avon when he penned the line, that the wildest freak of his exuberant fancy could by any agency ever be fulfilled. Distance is no insurmountable obstacle, and time itself will be the medium of communication between Valentia, in Ireland, and St. John's in Newfoundland. America is already laced with electric wires; a little more and they will cross to California; and shortly afterwards a Pacific line must be added as a completing link in the magic circle that will surround the globe. But it is not merely as a scientific wonder that this project is invested with a deep interest, it is from its commercial utility, and the close connection in social relationships that must unite the nations of the earth, linked when so together, that we regard it as one of the most important events in this age of improvements. Not many years ago and a reply received from America within a couple of months would have been thought very expeditious; at present nearly four weeks are occupied in the process of question and reply; and soon it will not require as many minutes to give an order and receive assurance of its fulfilment—to offer a sale and receive its acceptance. In many a counting-house, communications from one part to another are not more rapidly made than they soon may be executed between the great mercantile communities of the eastern and western hemispheres. The value of such dispatch is well-known in commercial circles, and the rapid intercourse effected by the introduction of steam, if not actually the cause of, is an essential assistance to, that great increase in traffic which has taken place between the old and the new countries. Such links as these bind so closely, that the danger of hostilities between these nations is materially lessened. For many of the great purposes of civilization, the United States would then be as near to Europe as England is to France, and our Canadian colonies would be within as easy reach of the mother country as Ireland is of the sister kingdoms. These are the triumphs which confer substantial benefits upon society, and before which the ensanguined trophies of war sink into utter insignificance. From the care taken in the survey, and from the scientific skill already displayed in the management of the undertaking there can be little doubt, should the weather prove favorable for laying down the cable, that the enterprise will be eminently successful.

LOUIS NAPOLEON.

From the New-York Herald.

For eight years, at least, France has been in an unsound financial condition. Even under Louis Philippe, the annual public deficit was much larger than a mercantile nation would consider safe; after his expulsion things from bad got worse, the debt was increased, the revenue fell off, makeshifts were eagerly resorted to by the ministries of the day, and when Louis Napoleon assumed the direction of affairs, the kingdom was on the verge of bankruptcy. Has he done anything towards a wholesome remedy? In plain truth, he has done nothing but spend money and stimulate speculation. He and his creatures founded the Credit Mobilier, that fraudulent version of the United States Bank, helped it to declare dividends not earned, suffered its managers to knock its stock up and down for purposes of stock-jobbing, encouraged it to embark in all sorts of wild speculations, hardly any of which have ever proved really remunerative, and crowned it the leading financial institution of France. In the way of economy Louis Napoleon has set up the most expensive court seen in France since the days of the old empire, has plunged into a war which must have cost him $400,000,000, the whole thrown away without hope of return, has kept the people from revolution by sustaining the price of bread below that of flour, has dispensed with productive items in the customs duties, has spent millions upon millions in improving Paris. Not in a single act of his reign can we discover any intelligent purpose to retrench or to save money. On the other hand, he has not increased the productive power of the country. In none of the branches of French industry has the increase been larger than usual since he became Emperor, and one of the most extensive producing interests—the wine interest—has enormously fallen off. Add to this, that, while setting the example of extravagance himself, and imposing the same conduct on his court, he has tried to help it along with the people by fostering their natural proclivity to gambling, and has given his sanction to more joint stock companies than ever existed under the old regency—and cause enough will be seen to tremble for the financial stability of France.

James Aldrich, well known in the literary circles of New York, died last week. In 1840 he was editor of a paper called the Literary Gazette, and in 1842 he visited Europe as correspondent of the New World, of which Park Benjamin was editor. He ranks as a fine poet in Dr. Griswold's collection, and is author of the well-known "death-bed scene:"

"Her sufferings ended with the day,
Yet lived she at its close;
And breathed the long, long night away,
In statue-like repose.

"But when the sun in all its state,
Illumed the Eastern skies,
She passed through glory's morning gate,
And walked in Paradise."

Answers to Correspondents.

TO MY MUSE.

ON A "DECLINED" POETICAL CONTRIBUTION.

My faulty Muse,—presumptuous jade,
What wild work in my breast you've made;
The rhyming freak of late we've played—
In faith 'tis shame:
Sir Critic says he'll not parade,
And you're to blame.

He says ours was no lofty flight
O'er fancy's wild Olympic height,
Albeit I've writ night after night
In plain, bold rhyme,
That which he says—(and sure HE's right)
Is out of time.

For me, I own not e'en a fault—
I merely wrote just as I thought,
Of wrongs with which the world is fraught;
But you, my muse!
To aid me sing, as minstrel ought,
Should ne'er refuse.

"I sung the tale as it was told,"
In words that simple were, and bold;
Not in the language stern and cold,
That Glass and Art,
A rapture o'er the hearing hold;
BUT NOT THE HEART.

If well I have not sung my song,
My head and not my heart, was wrong;
Yet best the blame should e'en belong
To my dull pen,
I'll strive to mend,—and then, ere long,
I'LL TRY AGAIN.

ALBANY, Sept. 29, 1856. J. B.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 2, '56.

T. F. MEAGHER, ESQ.:

Dear Sir—Your correspondent "Kilmainham" is in error as to the pension of "Sheares Armstrong," the annual "blood-money," of which he had too long been the recipient, having been discontinued by the administration of George Canning some thirty years ago. Nor did the vexation of the pensioned Iscariot of '98 end with the deprivation of his dear-bought stipend! His mansion, over the river Brusna, in the village of Ballycumber, was entered about two years since, by a worthy burglar; and a gold medal commemorative of his achievements upon the "green table," as the "Saviour of Ireland"(!) was numbered among the spoils abstracted by the intruder. Thus passed away the last material memento which linked the name of Armstrong with the fate of his victims. But "Kilmainham" is right as to the nom de plume of "Sheares'"—opprobriously attached to his patronymic, and the odium of a blighted name has, indeed, outlasted its miserable recompense of medals and pensions.

It was my fortune in '46—7, as an independent rate-payer, associated with the Magistrates of the barony of Garrycastle, for the purposes of the Parliamentary Relief measures of the time, to have a place upon the Bench, of which "Sheares Armstrong" was Chairman, and from close and frequent personal observation I can bear testimony to the correctness of "Kilmainham's" remark of "a most forbidding aspect," and I can assure you that more persons than "crying children" have been awed into silence by "threatening to call Sheares Armstrong."

Yours, respectfully,

KINGS COUNTY.

We are constantly receiving a number of letters on legal business, from different parts of the United States, and also from Ireland, requesting opinions upon vague and doubtful claims, or making inquiries concerning the property of deceased relatives, &c. &c. We have hitherto been in the habit of procuring the desired information, and answering such letters, at no small expenditure of time and trouble, and have incurred expense, which, even in the very moderate item of postage, amounts to a considerable sum in the course of a year. The result of our inquiries is generally the same. If a nephew writes to us that his uncle died in New York, and that he is the next of kin, we find on inquiry, that the deceased either left a will, or had a large family of children who were his heirs at law. We communicate the fact to the supposed heir, and never hear from him again.

In justice to ourselves, we are compelled to adopt a different rule for the future. The time of a professional man, is as much a part of his capital, as the stock in trade of a merchant; and to ask a lawyer to give a day to making inquiries about your business, in the hope of future business which will pay, is precisely the same case as if you were to step into a dry goods store in the evening, and politely request the proprietor to give you the profits of that day's business, upon the promise that you will afterwards deal with him.

For the future then, we shall consider ourselves under no obligations of courtesy or otherwise, to answer any letter of the character alluded to, unless it contains a reasonable fee, to compensate us for the trouble and expense in attending to it and answering it.

☞ JOB PRINTING NEATLY AND EXPEDITIOUSLY executed at the News Office, 29 Ann street, N. Y.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1856.

GREAT LEGAL CONTROVERSY.

IMPORTANT TRIAL — NORTH versus SOUTH.

This important controversy has produced greater public excitement than any we have known in the annals of litigation. It was tried before the Supreme Court of the People by a Jury duly empanelled. It was an action of trespass (quare clausum fregit), brought by a Mr. North against a very beautiful lady named South, for the destruction of a certain fence or boundary wall, and damage fesant, caused by the black cattle of the Defendant straying into and enjoying the green pasture land of the Plaintiff.

The defence was an absolute denial of any cause of action. Mrs. South averred that the land did not belong to Plaintiff, but had been left for public use and benefit as an unreclaimed Common. The Plaintiff's privileges therein were not paramount to her own, and her black cattle were free to use the same, without hindrance or molestation from Plaintiff or any one in his behalf.

Eminent counsel appeared and conducted the case for the respective parties. The inquiries, during the progress of the trial, took a wide range. The most prominent were:

Who put up the wall?

Who knocked down the wall?—including an examination into the law of "knock down" in general.

On this point, counsel cited Brooks, on Capitol Offences; Law of Sumnerry Proceedings; Cane, on Assault and Battery. And, Whether the knocking down the wall was not abolishing a public nuisance?

The testimony, on the various points involved, was somewhat conflicting, but manifestly in favor of South. North's witnesses stated, that on the occasion of the marriage settlement of a certain Miss Souri, a mutual relative of the parties, more than thirty years ago, it was agreed between Plaintiff and Defendant the wall should be put up. It remained up, after being erected, until South's people knocked it down.

On the part of the Defendant, many witnesses conversant with all the facts and circumstances of the case, testified that the wall had been originally erected as a matter of mutual convenience to both parties. Within a very recent period, North agreed that the settlers on, and cultivators of, the waste lands, should determine for themselves whether or not they should erect fences to prevent the incursions or pasturage of the black cattle. He, the Plaintiff, having agreed to remove the wall, wanted still to keep it up, contrary to his agreement. North and South's tenants had joined together and knocked the wall down as a useless incumbrance.

When the testimony had proceeded thus far, North could no longer keep silence. He rose up, and said:

"May it please the Court, I did not consent to the agreement about the erection of the wall in the first instance. I was opposed to it. I directed my agents to oppose it. But some of them would not listen to me, and carried the measure through. After the wall had been put up, however, I did not care much about it, one way nor the other, until"——

Here North was interrupted by a fidgetty old fellow in court, named Botts, who was very much excited while North was speaking. He roared out:

"I think Mr. North had better sit down and not make a fool of himself. He should leave his case in the hands of his counsel."

North, acting on this advice, took the hint and sat down.

Mr. Wise, of counsel for Defendant, then addressed the Court. He said:

"I hope this gentleman Botts shall not be permitted to interrupt the proceedings in this manner. I request that he be not allowed to make any statements, unless on the stand as a witness. I propose to contradict and impeach his testimony, fully and conclusively."

Botts attempted to reply, but was prevented, by the Court commanding silence, and the constables giving to him their immediate attention.

After the examination of other witnesses, from whom much important testimony was elicited in favor of South, and much sparring between counsel, as to the admission and pertinency of certain documentary evidence, as far back as 1787–1820, and '21 to 1850 and '51—the counsel for the Defendant vested their case.

Plaintiff's counsel, by way of rebutting testimony, then called to the stand, as a witness,

John M. Botts, who was examined at great length, and occupied two whole days in the giving of his testimony. This was owing to his great garrulity, and his statements about his own private and personal quarrels. He seemed to be anxious to prove himself a great original Know-Nothing. He had long ago, he said, before the time of the great Henry Clay, declared, he knew "no NORTH, no SOUTH, no NOTHING."

He appeared to be particularly vindictive against Mrs. South, from the circumstance she had withdrawn an agency he had held in her behalf at Washington. He said he knew that South wanted the wall up—and then she wanted it down. In fact, in his opinion, South did not know her own mind on any subject—was very fickle and changeable.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wise—Declines to answer whether or not he has made a wager as to the result of this cause, or whether or not he is to be benefitted, if the Plaintiff obtains a verdict. Did know a certain Captain Tyler. Does not remember, whether or not, he said he would head him off or die. If he did say so, he must have headed him off, as he, Botts, is not dead yet, and does not mean to die at all, if he can help it.

Knows a thing or two about horses. Has a large bet on a horse-race soon to come off. Has betted his money on a bob-tailed nag, called Phil More, against South's stud, Old Buck. Admits he has hedged, so as to save himself, on a Woolly Horse, owned and entered for the same race by Abby Lishon. Is very friendly with Abby. Thinks Mrs. South quite jealous of her on his account. Feels himself quite frisky. Considers his dancing days not over yet. Has no ill feeling against South on account of her taking from him the Washington agency—oh, no; not in the least; by no manner of means howsomever. Thinks North should have kept up the War, or rather the Wall. Considers also South did wrong in allowing it to be taken down, because her cattle are now likely to stray away and be lost on the Common. Thinks they should be penned up and packed closely together in a tight enclosure, but is well aware there is a great difference of opinion on the subject.

After much eloquence of Counsel in the summing up of the case,

The Court charged the Jury: They should discharge from their minds everything likely to disturb a dispassionate judgment or decision of the case on its merits. They should decide it, without prejudice or favor, bias or partiality, for either party.

If they considered North had an exclusive title to the domain—prescriptive rights that could not be impugned—they should find a verdict in his favor.

If, on the other hand, they should be of opinion that South had established that the Land was a Public Common—that North had arrogated to himself exclusive jurisdiction over the soil, without law or authority, and to the prejudice of the just and equitable rights of South to the free and uninterrupted use thereof equally with North, they should find a verdict in favor of Defendant.

The Jury, without leaving their seats, immediately returned a verdict for the Defendant. It was received with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of popular favor.

The Counsel for the plaintiff, evidently much chagrined, demanded a "polling" of the Jury. They were "polled" accordingly, the voice and vote of each juryman staunchly maintaining the verdict.

Mrs. South received the warm congratulations of her friends, who gathered around her, from all parts of the country, while North, acccompanied by Abby Lishon, in a fainting state, was seen to sneak quite chop-fallen out of Court.

THE FIREMEN—THE CHIVALRY OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

We have seen no King's head crowned. We have been present at few, indeed, of the European spectacles which fill ancient abbeys, like Westminster, or ancient palaces, like the Kremlin, with such heaving waves of splendor. In fact, we have never solicited a ticket for a royal show. The only pageants we have witnessed were those emphatically of the People. Two of these remain in our memory, the grandest pictures of the past we have lived through. The one was in Dublin, on the occasion of O'Connell's levee in the Rotunda. The other was in Paris, the day the deputations from the various nationalities—Poland, Italy and Germany—rolled, like a vast river reflecting some gorgeous sunset, from the Column of July to the Hotel de Ville, with their banners, tricolor scarfs and plumes.

In the first, stood a colossal figure in the centre of a crowded scene, of which the spires of St. Patrick and St. George, and the Record-tower of a gloomy sprawling Castle, were the salient points of the frame-work. There he stood, the impersonation of his race, receiving from noon to sundown the congratulations of tens of thousands. Chief-magistrates in their scarlet robes and golden chains, carrying their white wands of office, bore to him the prayers and greetings of ancient cities. The Trades of the Metropolis, glittering with the insignia of their different callings, rendered to him their homage. "Never," exclaimed Davis in an ecstasy of eloquence, "never on our soil was a prouder pomp. It was a parade which might have graced an Emperor's triumph."

In the other—in that thrilling scene on which the towers of Notre Dame and the victor of Austerlitz from the summit of his brazen spoils looked down—it was something far greater than Russia, with her countless hosts of subjugated tribes, which moved along. It was something far more beautiful and touching than the sight of an old and prosperous nobility, with uncovered head yielding, on bended knee, reverence to a gentle girl-queen in the mausoleum of the Edwards, the princes, soldiers, poets and statesmen of an empire a thousand years old. It was Europe with her chains broken, with the palm-branch in her free hand, returning thanks to God for having called her from the dungeon. A vision only—the swiftly-passing vision of a summer day in history—it was, with exultant song and flashing weapon, prophetic of what Europe shall be when the masters of the Democracy take the place of their victims in the vaults of Speilberg, the snow-wastes of Siberia, the deadly morasses of Cayenne.

The parade of Monday—the marching of the Firemen of New-York, with their brothers from near and distant cities—in scenic splendor and moral grandeur far outstripped the solemnities we have spoken of, though both were orations of the People. From a crevice in the vast crowd which gazed with gratitude, and pride, and wonder on that well-ordered army of brave young citizens—most, if not all, so intelligent, handsome, and athletic—we, too, looked out with a throbbing heart, and thinking of the freedom from which has sprung a chivalry so pure, generous, and dauntless, rejoiced in the destiny which has interwoven our hopes and labors with the American community.

THE REV. DR. MORIARTY IN BROOKLYN.

Our friends in Brooklyn, we perceive, are about to have the advantage of hearing once more the glowing eloquence of the Very Rev. Dr. Moriarty, of Philadelphia, whose lectures, delivered some years ago, many of them still remember with pleasure. It has been announced that he will deliver five successive lectures in the Church of the Star of the Sea, Court street, South-Brooklyn, commencing on Monday, the 20th of October, and continuing each evening to the close. The lectures will commence each evening at seven and a-half o'clock.

He should have a large audience every evening, for his powers as a lecturer are well known, and one of the objects of this course is to enable the venerable Pastor of the Star of the Sea to pay for the painting of his church, which wants only that adornment to be certainly the most beautiful in Brooklyn.

The Greenwood cars, from Fulton and Hamilton Avenue Ferries, are constantly passing its doors.

BISHOP ENGLAND ON AMERICAN SLAVERY.

We publish in the present number the first of a series of powerful letters on the subject of American Slavery, from the pen of the late most eminent divine, the Right Reverend Bishop England, of South Carolina.

They were addressed to the Hon. John Forsyth, then Secretary of State.

As some importance is said to be attached to an alleged Bull of Pope Gregory XVI., now being extensively republished by political schemers, we have considered it necessary to reproduce the letters of Bishop England, as authentic evidence on the subject. We shall continue their publication until the four numbers composing the series, are completed.

The alleged Bull, Bishop England shows to be a mere Rescript, or opinion of the Pope, to which no other deference was due from Catholics, than it was entitled to from their own conscientious convictions.

Bishop England it is well known, always spoke as an oracle. His intimate knowledge of the subject of Southern slavery, and the cultivated resources of his mind, particularly qualified him to discharge what he considered a duty in the letters he addressed to Mr. Forsyth, with the ability of an American statesman.

MUNICIPAL POLITICS.

The fact of our not having a vote, ought sufficiently to explain the propriety of the silence we observe respecting the candidates for the different offices and posts of honor in the gift of the citizens of New-York. Add to this, that having been resident in New-York for little more than a twelvemonth (though we have been in the United States for nearly five years), we do not feel qualified to express an opinion on so delicate a subject as the conflicting merits of the candidates present. The gentlemen, therefore, who have begged us to speak out, will forgive the neutrality we have seen fit to maintain. Letters, it is true, which warmly support some of the more prominent claimants, have appeared in our columns, and continue to do so. Coming from parties who hold themselves publicly responsible for their opinions, we could not feel ourselves at liberty to exclude their communications. Upon all such questions, and from all such parties, it is a duty we owe our readers to make public any correspondence we receive. For the accuracy of the opinions set forth in such correspondence, however, we do not by any means or to the slightest extent pledge ourselves. Politically we commit ourselves to no sentiment, whether of hostility or preference, which has not been expressed in our own words and writing.

On the Presidential question, a different course has seemed proper to us to pursue. It is a question in which the world is interested. The consequences involved in it—the results growing out of it—will affect countries lying far away from America, and other ages besides this one in which we live. The magnitude of the question will be our apology, if it excites our interest, and the interest excites some study, a fund of warm sympathies, and reiterated good wishes. It would go hard with us to take up the European papers, as every mail brings them to us, and to find the organs of state-craft in France, in Spain, in England—the apologists of O'Donnel, Napoleon, and Lord Palmerston—writing down Buchanan, without using to some extent, in favor of the United States, the privilege which utter strangers cultivate under such aristocratic auspices to the present disparagement, and it may be, the future detriment of the Republic. All the choice organs of European absolutism support Colonel Fremont in his pretensions to the Chief-Magistracy. They are equally eloquent and earnest in their depreciation of the merits of Mr. Buchanan. From which fact it has long since become evident that the great question now pending in America is of a consequence, which as it engages the attention of thousands abroad, justifies us in the position we have assumed beside it on the spot.

OULART HILL.

Oulart Hill has been well called the Lexington of the Irish war for independence in '98. Here it was that Father John Murphy, the noble Priest-General, with his outraged parishoners, lit the torch of insurrection, and commenced the brilliant campaign, of which Wexford was the memorable theatre in that year of flame and vengeance. Immortal be the memory of Murphy, of Boolavogue, who exhorted the people to conquer or perish! For ever honored be those men who, revolving about his brave heart, like spokes round the axle that holds them, raised the flag of Ireland on Oulart, and scarcely left a royalist to carry the news to Enniscorthy!

Some of our Militia companies, which were to have gone through the evolutions of that memorable Whit-Sunday (May 27th,) on the 7th inst., at Hastings, postponed the fete champetre until Monday next, when we are certain they will attract a host of admiring friends to witness even a feint of '98. We beg to call attention to the preparatory drill which takes place at the Eagle Drill Rooms, at 7 1-2 o'clock, Friday, 17th inst.

NOTES FROM NICARAGUA.

The latest news from Nicaragua is very interesting, and, if it is to be credited, very important. The point and pith of it is this:

First, that Gen. Walker, at the head of eight hundred men, is still in Granada, revolving in his mind the taking formal possession of San Juan del Norte.

Second, that having done so, he will proceed to Costa Rica, and probably take possession of it.

Third, that he is about to confiscate to the Nicaraguan Government all property for which the present "owners" or dwellers thereon, cannot produce satisfactory title-deeds.

Fourth, that great dissatisfaction existed among Gen. Walker's troops, some forty of whom, including some of the General officers of the army, declared their determination not to serve any longer; and—

Fifth, that after having twenty-four hours to re-consider their rashness, and still persisting in it, the General ordered them out, and shot every mother's son of them.

This spicy programme of things done, doing and to be done, is furnished by the Panama and Aspinwall newspapers, sources or mediums of intelligence, we may remark, which in the present case must not be considered of sufficient purity to warrant the wholesale use of their decoctions, without at least the public being made aware of the ingredients.

These papers are notoriously opposed to President Walker, and to the means by which a handful of gallant Americans are disentombing from beneath the effete and deadening influences of Spanish dominion, one of the brightest and most prolific spots in the world. These journals intentionally desire to deter Americans in the States from sympathizing with the Liberating party of Central America; and from their position, in being the traffickers of news-items on the Isthmus for the steamers, are well calculated, even with slight effort, to give currency to many fables, or so to jumble up fact and fiction, that in the startling panics of the latter, the resolute power of the former is made but of secondary importance.

We do not believe that forty men, knowing General Walker's firm character, would be so stupidly foolish to attempt a mutiny; next, we don't believe that they had any notion of it; and—consequently, that the shooting affair is one of those over-drawn incidents by which men blindly desirous to injure an enemy, frequently expose themselves. Rivas remains fortified in Leon, with his own forces, and a combination of Guatemalans and Salvadorans, amounting it is rumored (by the same authorities) to twenty-five hundred men. He is only waiting, they say, until the dry season, November, sets in, to attack Walker. We fear if the rainy weather continues until he does so, they will have, as Professor Merriam would say, "an elongated wet turn" in the "paradise of Mahomet."

The allied States of Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala "are getting a small naval force" in readiness; while Costa Rica, ruined almost in its commercial prospects, gives vent to its great dissatisfaction against President Mora, on account of the terrible loss of life, resulting from the late invasion of Nicaragua, and which has affected nearly every family in the Republic. They are preparing however to repel, as best they can, the talked of invasion of General Walker, and for this purpose have posted five hundred men on the frontier in Guana Costa, under General Canas.

THE MAN FOR GALWAY.

Thirty miles eastward of the isles of Arran, at the head of one of the noblest estuaries in the world, stands the town of Galway. A sombre, most picturesque old town it is. Vast square-built houses—the same as one meets in Malaga and Cadiz—with a good deal of ragged finery, in the way of heraldic shields and scrolls above the doorways, chronicle the days when the merchants of this Moorish-looking seaport supplied the whole of Ireland with Spanish wine.

Right royal days they were. For Galway merchants and their galleys, they were Venetian days—Venetian in adventure, wealth and splendor. Sir Oliver St. John, in 1614, writes of these merchants, that they were rich and great adventurers at sea. Old Heylin speaks of the place as "a noted empire of great fame with foreign traders."

The swarthy features and raven hair of the people indicate their community of blood with the chevaliers and ladies of old Spain; and we have the fastidious Mrs. S. C. Hall, in her most polished phrases intimating, that these people are, for the most part, so finely formed, so naturally graceful, that almost every peasant girl might serve as a model for the sculptor. On a Fair day, in those narrow streets, where the shadow is ever deep and motionless, and some ancient gateway intercepts the avenue which conducts to a church, of which the chimes in the dusty tower is all that is left of the glory of its youth, the red woollen hoods which cover those heads, give a rich coloring to a picture which, architecturally viewed, is one of the most romantic in Ireland.

Behind these features lies a history, which, under the magic of an eloquent pen or voice, could be woven into an Irish epic, nobler even than Carolan himself could have sung. There is the Invasion of the Normans—the driving out of the ancient Septs—the war waged against the O'Flaherties—the prosperous doings of the Tribes—the episode of Lynch Fitzstephen—the persecution of the Burkes and Kellys. There is the story of the second siege it stood, when Ginkle, trampling his Irish foes under foot from Aughrim to Lough Corrib, forced its gates, and brought the Tribes upon their knees.

Yet the past of Galway is but the antique altar, above which shine forth prophecies of the eminence and fortune it could attain were justice done it. Inaugurated as the mail-station between New-York and London—authorized to be the starting and receiving point of the steam-traffic between Europe and America—the traditionary glories of its Spanish trade would fade off, like white clouds, in the irradiation of a new prosperity. As it is, the arabesque reminiscences that cluster massively about it, and the glowing speculations its suggests to the patriot, the merchant, and the shipwright, render this old town of Galway a grand subject, indeed, for a popular address.

Our friend, James Roche, who, as a member of the local press, was for a long time identified with the labors, interests, and hopes of the City of the Tribes, delivers a lecture next Monday evening, in the Styvesant Institute, on this subject. In no other hands we know of could this ancient casket of Irish oak—perfumed with the wine of Xerxes, and so curiously carved—be exhibited to such advantage. It will be a pleasant, a bright, an instructive evening, and we must all be there.

EVENING FREE SCHOOLS.

No matter what health, strength of mind, or elasticity of thew and sinew, the day-laborer, artizan, or shopman, may bring to the States' wealth or his own physical comfort—no matter how philosophers may look upon them as, and tell them they are, the foundations of Society—no matter how politicians may flatter them, while they use them as the machinery which propels themselves into power—no matter what railroads, aqueducts, and public buildings they can fashion, still—without the rudiments of a popular education—they are inferior as citizens, and in every capacity of usefulness, to the humblest man who can read and write; and who, by thus comprehending the true merits of the political movements of the day, which holds Society in its position, are better enabled to add with tenfold strength his acquiesence or opposition to their support.

Popular education is the life and soul—the blood, brains and body-guard of a Republic. Freedom of opinion—which cannot exist without popular knowledge—is the foundation of the State. It is the fountain of the Faith which enlightens it, and the guaranty of the strong will, which shall preserve it. Therefore it is that every man should zealously apply himself to the attainment of that which yields such benefits, and indicates such just and necessary responsibilities.

In this country there is no excuse for not possessing the first principles, at least, of all that is needed in the way of education for the ordinary duties of life. In this Republic every citizen is a sentinel, and should not only know but understand the password—which is the Constitution.

For those who in early life were debarred from the attainment of such rudiments and principles, other means are offered, which should be hailed by every young man, as a premature legacy, and by every old one as so many years added to his life. We allude to the Evening Free Schools. Here the laborer and mechanic—they who have been earning for their wives and little ones the bread of life—may achieve that "salt of existence" which preserves humanity and dignifies labor. Here may the bright lad upon whom has devolved the care of feeding a widowed mother, learn, when his manual labor is done, that he is worthy of Grecian and Roman tribute, and receive those seeds into his brain, which may grow into healthy laurels around it.

We earnestly entreat the attention of our readers to this subject, and to the announcement in another portion of our columns, which exhibits the localities devoted to this noble and needful project. It can be fraught with nothing but good, by keeping our youth from the dens which entice them at every corner of the city. The name of our friend, Judge Florence McCarthy, which we recognize among the Executive Committee, is a guarantee of the faithfulness with which the management will be conducted.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

"Very singular, indeed!" muttered the man of capital and caution. "Singular that you should be so like him, and singular again that you should have made the voyage with his wife. She is uncommonly quick, as far as I have seen of her. Did not she remark the extraordinary resemblance?"

Here was a new dilemma, for which a new evasion had to be forthwith coined. He had gone so far that retreat was no longer possible?

"She never did," he quietly returned: "In all probability she never saw me. The distance between first and second cabin passengers, though only the thickness of a board, is, socially, a gulf over which the keenest vision cannot lift itself. A majority of ladies," continued Casement, bitterly, as he thought of Lady Alice, "would not recognize their own son or husband from the quarter deck, if they saw him taking his meals in the steerage. Is it likely, then, they would notice a resemblance where the original must remain unknown?"

"For a man of your years," observed Mr. Treadwell, with a smile, "you seem to have had a large experience. Are you in search of employment?"

"I am. That is to say, I mean"—stammered Casement.

"Suppose I were to offer you a seat at that desk," continued the banker, pointing with the feather of his pen to a high stool which stood in front of a ponderous ledger.

"Ah, sir," answered Casement, again evasively, "are not heavy securities required from those who aspire to such offices?"

"But suppose," urged Mr. Treadwell, more seriously, "suppose I dispense with these, and ask nothing but your face; what then would be your answer?"

The clerks who overheard this last remark dropped their pens in amazement. "That fellow's fortune's made," whispered the cashier to the teller, "if he only knows how to take the ball at the hop." Apparently he did not, for he answered:

"I would say, sir, that your dealings with Cascales must have been large and satisfactory in no common degree, since even a resemblance to him is a passport to your good opinion."

"There is sterling stuff in this fellow," thought the banker, who had as warm a heart within that shrivelled kernel as ever beat within the breast of any eccentric old bachelor in Christendom. "Another of these hungry hounds would have jumped at my offer and held me to my words. You are mistaken, sir," he said aloud. "My first transaction with Cascales was a draft for nineteen thousand dollars, payable to his wife, and cashed about three weeks ago. When I knew him here, he was miserably poor; he said he was going back to claim a large property in England, out of which he had been kept, through some legal technicalities, for more than twenty years. Some friends raised a subscription for his return, to which I contributed my mite. That is absolutely all I know concerning him."

"And his wife?" said Casement, determined to press on while the man of wealth continued so communicative.

"As for her," said Mr. Treadwell, shrugging his shoulders and puckering a more complex wrinkle between his brows, "I know nothing, and care still less. She seemed haughty and exacting, and their life was not a happy one. He has got cheaply clear of her, if the payment made through me was a full acquittance of her claims. She has gone West, I suppose, as she took some credits on the bank of Cincinnati."

"A full acquittance of her claims!" thought Casement. "Persons do not usually speak in these terms of the rights which belong to wives." He would have given much to ask the question suggested by these thoughts, but prudence bid him hold his peace and trust to time for a development.

"To come to the point at once," said the banker, who imagined that our hero would have jumped at his offer, had he not been restrained by an overwhelming modesty, "I judge from your appearance that you can read and write, and know at least the rudiments of arithmetic?"

Casement bowed.

"Then take off your hat, step up to that desk there, and take your seat. You are a stranger in search of employment, I see; and your salary shall commence at seven hundred dollars. Are you content?"

"I am grateful beyond measure," sighed the young man, "and shall think better of my face from henceforth, for the substantial compliment you have paid it. Nevertheless, I must decline; I am going westward to clear a farm and settle. You look astonished; but the life of a pioneer is not without its charms for one of hardihood and a vigorous will. In another dozen years I may have built a town!"

"Cash the order of Mr. Charles Jones for one hundred and fifty pounds sterling," cried Mr. Treadwell to the chief cashier. "Young gentleman," continued he, turning round so as to take a better view of O'Reilly from head to foot, "I admire your spirit, and earnestly hope you may never have cause to regret this decision. I am busy now—so leave me; but if ever you come this way again drop in to see me, and remember that for you there will always be a vacancy in our establishment."

CHAPTER V.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF NED MORGAN—THE POLICE CALLED IN—A PORTRAIT DRAWN FROM LIFE.

"Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll call
And ask them for my friend. Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night—
On, good Roderigo;—I'll deserve your pains."

Shakespeare.

"There is much mystery in a tangled skein,
And yet—once given the clue—how quickly all
The knots and intricate coils can be unwound!
Go seek a lawyer—mark me well, an honest one—
(If such there be?) and let him hear thy tale."—Ford.

Not a little elated by the success of his first effort in diplomacy, Casement returned to his hotel, and sat down to give a full account of all his discoveries to Father Casement and the attorney. The letter addressed to the former was a long one—it contained a full account of the voyage, but merely alluded to the sisters as "two interesting peasant girls," an outrage upon whom had led to the maritime revolution of which Ned Morgan was the active chief.

The interview with Mr. Treadwell was reported almost with stenographic accuracy; and infinite were the surmises and conjectures to which each detail gave rise.

In a postscript, it was added that the priest might make himself easy as to the writer's present feelings with regard to Lady Alice. "I have seen but little of the world since seeing you," it said; "but that little has been enough to show me the error of my own judgment, and the superior depth of yours. I confess that I mistook for true and ardent passion, what was really no more than the mere fancy of a boy. Lady Alice had many dazzling qualities; but she lacked those finer sensibilities, that airy mirthfulness and artless grace, which beautify even the humblest forms of womanhood, and give assurance of unending fidelity and esteem."

The sentence looked awkward after he had written it. Could the priest by any possibility associate the allusions towards its close with the hurried mention of "two interesting peasant girls," made in the earlier part of the voluminous dispatch? Should he strike it out altogether? Alas! the paper was thin, and a partial erasure would only call more attention to the incriminating paragraph.

"Let it go," he muttered, as he folded up the rustling sheets and crammed them with some difficulty into a capacious envelope. "Why should I be ashamed to own that Ellen Plunkett has given me new views of life? She is modest, beautiful and pure; and we stand in a country whose maxim is equality. As a friend, I shall always have a deep regard for her; to think of her in any other light would of course be extremely absurd."

After sealing the letter he looked up at the clock, and was surprised to find that it was already after midnight. For the first time, it occurred to him that he had neither seen nor heard of his faithful follower since leaving the hotel that morning, to call on Messrs. Treadwell and Brown, and close upon the heels of this reflection—quick as the riflering follows the flash—came the memory of Brand's threatened vengeance.

"I must see to this at once," he cried, throwing on his cloak and hat, and making down to the great reception-hall, where Ned was commonly to be found.

None of the waiters had seen him; they had been dull all night, they said, for the want of his queer stories and merry laugh. Maybe it was only a bit of a spree, after all, and he'd come home by morning.

Satisfied in his own mind that this conjecture was not correct—for Ned, though as fond of a glass as the next man, was never known to exceed—Casement called one of the waiters to guide him, and made his way at once to the bureau of the Chief of Police.

The Clerk, who heard him very patiently to the end, admitted that the case looked suspicious, and that the enmity of Brand was in itself a sufficient cause for just alarm. "The best I can do for you," he said, in conclusion, "is to place a watch on Brand, and find out what he has been doing this evening. Perhaps, after all, this may be a false alarm; your friend may have been seduced into some tippling-shop, where they hocussed him for the mere purpose of robbery. I have great hopes that you will see him, either alive or dead, before tomorrow noon. If not, you can then come back here, and we will see about a search."

This was cold comfort indeed, but our hero was obliged to put up with it. All night he paced the streets, but nothing came to him from Ned. Next morning he ascertained that Brand had not been visible in any of his usual haunts—"and that," said the clerk, "bodes no good, I'm afraid, to the man whose life you say he threatened."

Can you not arrest him on suspicion?" inquired Casement, impatiently. "I can swear to the very words he used, and there are fifty others who heard him."

"Arrest him!" cried the Clerk, with a sardonic grin. "And have half the biggest officials overhead coming down to go bail for him—contending which should have the honor—before he was rightly bolted in his cell! Besides, the threat was uttered out of the jurisdiction of the court, and of any criminal act there is not the remotest evidence. I tell you, too, that if you wished the fellow to account for his time, he could get dozens of legally respectable witnesses to swear that he was foremost and devoutest in their company at a grand prayer meeting held yesterday in the Broadway Tabernacle. You are a stranger, I see, and, therefore, it is the more necessary to caution you. If you had Brand arrested now, he would be free in half an hour, and you would occupy his cell on a charge of perjury and false imprisonment. Be careful where you go, and how you go; never venture into unfrequented streets after nightfall, and look as religiously to the loading of your Colt as if on it depended your temporal and eternal salvation."

With this advice, which sounded oddly from such a quarter, Casement took leave of the really good-natured officer, and bent his steps towards the chambers of a celebrated legal gentleman, whose advice he had been recommended to take.

The lawyer received him courteously and seemed to take an active interest, almost amounting to personal sympathy, in the fate of the missing man. He was a young man himself—indeed, a very young one, to have attained such eminence in a profession where all the brightest intellects of the country were engaged in a gigantic competition. As a politician, too, he might have risen to the very pinnacle of power—for his eloquence was confessed, and his sincerity had never been called in question: but place had no charms for him to compensate the loss of independence; and, though appealed to by his own party in all great emergencies, and responding with an enthusiasm which never failed to triumph, he left the field the moment victory was won, and abandoned to other and more greedy hands the collection and disbursement of the spoils.

Young, handsome and accomplished, never were the garments of political and legal fame worn with a more graceful ease. Not a hair of his heavy moustache was out of place—not a wrinkle appeared on his high and massive brow to speak of studious days and nights of sleepless vigil and acquirement; no affectation of peculiarity proclaimed him conscious of superior genius, and, therefore, anxious to attract attention. On the contrary, so elegant his toilet—so perfect and unencumbered his style of manner and address, that it would seem as if he wished to meet the carpet-knights and mere butterflies of fashion on their own ground, and show them that it was possible for a man to attain a far higher grace than that they aimed at, and yet be none the less an active student and sublime expounder of that oldest law which tells us, that in the sweat of man's brow he shall henceforth earn his bread.

Born of Irish parentage, he inherited with his blood a hatred of every despotism—with his birth an unfaltering devotion to those principles which are embodied in the Constitution. A working-man himself, in the noblest usage of the term, he was an unflinching advocate of the workman's rights, and the bitterest foe of those monopolies, which form the worst and meanest tyranny of wealth. His private character corresponded with his public worth, and his friendship was as generous as the sun.

After listening attentively to the whole story, from its commencement in the Vulture to the last interview with the clerk of the police-office, Mr. O'Grady—as we shall call him, in lieu of a better name—pronounced that the case was one requiring the promptest and most energetic action. "In my professional character," he said, "there is nothing as yet to be done. Even if an angel from heaven came down to tell you that the man was murdered, you would have to trouble him a second time to show you the corpus delicti before any steps could be taken. Such is the law, and there are solid reasons for its being so. Nevertheless, in my private capacity, I believe my influence may assist you. Come over to the Chief's office, and between us we will see what can be done towards putting some vigor into the search. At present, the disappearance of 'a mere Irishman' is not regarded with any particular regret—nor do the officers think it would pay them well to be active in pursuit of Brand. But, heavens! if it were near election time, and the Irish vote stood in doubt, such an incident as this would furnish steam enough to set all the police machinery from here to New-Orleans in motion."

Casement listened attentively, but failed to find any legitimate connection between politics and a simple matter of police: he was unsophisticated, as yet, in the practical philosophy of "political excitement," and could not imagine any circumstances under which the murder of a countryman could be used as the means of influencing a party vote. One thing he clearly saw, however; to wit—that Mr. O'Grady's appearance in the matter greatly altered and enlivened the perceptions of the officers of justice; they had been dozing over the matter before, but were now as wide awake and alert as if poor Ned had owned a corner lot in the fifth avenue, and employed two liveried negroes to drive him down to Wall-street every morning.

"Then you do not think, Bullock," said Mr. O'Grady, addressing one of the police officers as he turned to leave—"you do not think that any advertisements would be advisable?"

"As things stand," promptly responded that officer—a red-faced squab-looking little Englishman, with eyes as piercing as a brace of gimlets, and hands and feet that would have been in keeping with a body twice his size—"As things stand, I should say not, sir. Hif we keep quiet, they'll think 'es a mere himmigrant for 'oom nobody cares;—this may put them hoff their guard a bit, though them runner coves his huncommon wary!"

The emphasis layed on the penultimate word, was not without a thrill of admiration. The man-hunter could appreciate the cunning and strategic skill of the hunted; it is this feeling which gives the perilous life of the detective a charm almost chivalrous in the eyes of those who are fitted by nature for such business. It is the ambition of conquest under one of its least promising forms—to meet cunning with superior guile—to fight treachery with treachery, and turn against the criminal those very resources upon which he relies for immunity or escape.

"You are a stranger?" said Mr. O'Grady, as Casement paused to thank him and say farewell, at the door of the lawyer's chambers. "Have you any relations here, and where do you put up?"

"To your first question, none," answered the other; "to your second, at the Astor."

"At the Astor—and yet he must be poor!" muttered the lawyer, musingly. "Pardon me, my dear fellow," he quickly added, seeing that Casement had still enough of old-country pride to color crimson at the imputation of poverty—"pardon me a thousand times! It is sometimes my misfortune to think aloud when I am out of court. The command of nerve required there, in some cases, is so intense, that a little relaxation of caution afterwards, is absolutely requisite. I was thinking, however, that a gentleman of your appearance and evident position, seldom thinks of emigration until after fortune has played him some awkward trick. As to poverty, in this country, thank God, it is no reproach; to use an expressive Irishism, many of our greatest millionaires were born 'without a shoe to their foot.' If you are not engaged this evening, I should feel honored by your company."

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

GLIMPSES OF THE SOUTH.

(From the back pages of a Reporter's Note-Book.)

Of all the rambles and scrambles through the country which professional duty has obliged me to undertake since the commencement of the Presidential campaign, none has been accompanied by so many pleasant incidents, or is associated with so many agreeable recollections, as a recent visit I paid to the good old State of South Carolina. I left New-York at four o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, the 28th of September, in that good ship, the James Adger, and arrived at the city of Charleston on the following Tuesday, at about half-past eight in the morning. Charleston, as everybody knows who knows anything, is the commercial capital of South Carolina, and what is more, one of the finest cities in the Union. Its situation is rather low, and the country behind it, is too flat to warrant us in claiming for it much of the picturesque. The approach from the harbor, however, is beautiful. On the right lies Sullivan's Island, with its low, tropical-looking houses, its magnificent hotel, and Fort Moultrie, great in revolutionary annals, on its further extremity. On the left, a pretty undulating fringe of shore, green as emerald, stretches away as far as the eye can reach, until lost in the blue haze of the horizon. In front rise the tall spires and white towers of the city, bathed in a flood of golden light, and springing, as it were, from the very bosom of the bay.

> "I saw from out the wave her structures rise,
> As from the stroke of an enchanter's wand,"

The city, viewed internally, is clean; the streets, spacious; the buildings, generally handsome; the stores elegant; and its business aspect indicates wealth, prosperity, and progress. The greatest drawback is its unhealthiness during the warm months. This sometimes becomes so serious, that people not acclimatized, rarely venture on visiting it during the summer. During my brief stay in it, I ascertained that yellow fever was quite prevalent, and observed as one of the consequences, that the hotel where I took up my quarters—(which has the reputation of being the best in the city)—had not probably more than twenty passing guests on its register. Incautious or prolonged exposure to the night air, or the hot sun, frequently proves fatal to strangers. Everybody whom business brings to Charleston during the sickly season, should keep as much within doors as possible at all times, and, if obliged to remain overnight, go to Sullivan's Island, which is but a short distance out in the harbor, and is unequalled for salubrity, by any sea-side resort on the continent.

I can hardly describe the pleasure I experienced in meeting some old friends in Charleston, whom I had not seen for several years before, and who, with a hospitality that used only to be Irish, and with a warmth of friendship and nobility of kindness that are seldom found anywhere out of the South, did their best try to make my stay agreeable. I am bound to say they succeeded to perfection. To one fresh from the North, and habituated to Northern feelings and character, the quick sensibilities, overflowing good nature, chivalric tone and convivial temper that form the prominent traits of our Southern brethren, cannot fail at first sight to appear somewhat extravagant. This impression soon wears away, however; and even if it did not, it is an extravagance with which nobody can be displeased. Certainly I, for one, regretted my inability to enjoy more of it.

That amiable tar-and-watery old fogy, Bishop Berkeley, once took the liberty of remarking that, "The Southern wits are like cucumbers, which are commonly all good in their kind—but at least are an insipid fruit,—while the Northern geniuses are like melons,—(query, water-melons?) of which not one in fifty is good; but when it is so, it is an exquisite relish." I am inclined to the belief, that if the good Bishop had known anything of pickled cucumbers, he would have changed his simile, and I am certain that if he had known as much about the South as I do, he would have changed his opinion. The allusion to the melon is, I must admit, rather striking. There is something very suggestive in it of the strongminded Women, Transcendental Philosophy, and Black Republicanism. He was very much mistaken as to what he deemed to be the insipidity of the South. There is nothing insipid about it. Why, the very first thing I heard mentioned, after setting foot on the wharf at Charleston, was the fatal duel that had been fought on the previous evening between Edward McGrath and young Taber, of the Mercury. It monopolized the conversation at the hotel breakfast table, and was the theme of general comment everywhere. But withal, nobody seemed to regard it as an unexpected or unusual occurrence. Its sad termination, and the position of the parties to it, alone seemed to secure for it so much public attention, and to elicit so much public feeling.

Mr. Taber was a young man, influentially connected, though personally, I believe, rather unpopular. His abilities were of the first order, and his prospects of attaining future distinction as a public man, brilliant in the extreme. He was fearless, almost to audacity, and enjoyed considerable reputation as a duellist. McGrath, though a young man of a family remarkable for talent, was regarded as one of those quiet, easy, harmless, good-natured fellows who never trouble themselves about anything, and glide so smoothly down the stream of life, that not a ripple is left to mark their track. And yet see the Celtic recklessness of the man when his feelings were aroused. Stepping forward as the voluntary champion of the good name of his brother, he indited a sort of wholesale challenge, peremptorily demanding of both editors of the Mercury an immediate retraction, or immediate satisfaction. Taber replied as haughtily, and accepted the challenge. They met at the race course on Monday afternoon. A large number of people, having heard of the projected duel, assembled on the ground. The principals were arranged by their seconds, at the stakes which had been sunk by the friends of Hatch and Cunningham, when those gentlemen fought their bloodless battle at the same place a few months before.

On that very occasion, Taber acted as Cunningham's second. A singular incident occurred at the close of that affair which it may not be out of place here to relate. When all was settled and the parties were about leaving the field, some one suggested the advisability of pulling up the stakes. "Oh, no," said Taber with a laugh, "never mind; let them remain for the next comers." He little thought that he, himself, would be one of the next comers, doomed never to return alive.

> "But life is sweet, and mortality's blind,
> And youth is hopeful and Fate is kind
> In concealing the day of sorrow;
> And enough is the present sense of toil—
> For this world is to all a stiffish soil—
> And the mind flies back with a glad recoil
> From the debts not due 'till to-morrow."

Magrath knew little or nothing of the management of a pistol, and nothing whatever of duelling. Both he and his opponent exhibited the utmost sang-froid. The distance between them was but ten paces. It was arranged that they should fire "on the rise," that is, when in the act of raising, instead of whilst lowering, their weapons. Just imagine the scene. The seconds take their places. The trembling spectators retire still farther from the neighborhood of the duellists. "Gentlemen," say the seconds, "are you ready?"

"Yes," is the reply.

"Prepare to fire!"

"Fire!—One—two—three!!"

The reports are heard almost simultaneously, a slight smoke envelopes the combatants, and their friends run up to them. Neither is found to be hurt. An effort is made at reconciliation, but without effect. The pistols are again loaded, the principals again take their places, and again the words, "Fire!—One—two three!!" are heard This time McGrath's bullet raises the dust—near Taber's foot, possibly striking his boot, but no further injury is done. A second and more prolonged effort at an amicable adjustment follows.

"What do you require?" is asked of Magrath.

"I shall be satisfied," says he, "with a withdrawal of the objectionable articles and the expression, on the part of the editors of the Mercury, of regret at their appearance."

"No, no," Taber replies in his quick, nervous manner—"no regret—never, sir!—I shall disclaim them, but never express regret for their publication!"

All peaceful interference is now seen to be futile.

Again, the pistols are loaded, and the principals walk up to the posts. The crowd recedes—the seconds take their stand—the pistols are presented—the order—"Fire!—One—two—three!" is given—the quick rat-tat is heard before the last word is uttered, and Taber is seen to stagger backwards, reel and fall. The people rush up and see the blood oozing out of his forehead. "Back, gentlemen," shouts the Surgeon—"clear off, that we may have room to aid the wounded man!"

Alas, poor fellow! he is now beyond aid from human agency. A spasm or two, and all is over with him—here.

This duello code is a marked feature of Southern Society, and has always been in vogue among races characterised by strong sensibilities and excitability of temper. It is not my business here to enter into a disquisition on the ethics of it, but I cannot refrain from expressing the opinion that it is a very absurd manner of settling quarrels. Something, it is true, may be said in its favor. But what of that? I do not doubt that something might be said in favor of the devil, and I am thoroughly convinced there never was a bad thing in existence in regard to which something good, or tending to good, might not be advanced. I can readily conceive of circumstances in which one man would be not only justified, but bound to kill another, but no strength of fancy could devise circumstances under which the obligation to kill would be mutual—unless it be in war, and I question even that. Let me make a quotation from the Tatler, and with it, wind up the subject.

"Mr. Sage.—I have never read of a duel among the Romans, and yet their Nobility used more liberty with their tongues than one may do now without being challenged."

"Sir Mark.—Perhaps the Romans were of opinion that ill language and brutal manners reflected only on those who were guilty of them; and that a man's reputation was not at all cleared by cutting the person's throat who had reflected on it; but the custom of those times had fixed the scandal in the action; whereas now it lies in the reproach."

I left Charleston at ten o'clock on Thuesday night, and travelled without interruption until four o'clock in the afternoon of the next day. My route lay between Charleston and Columbia, and thence on the Greenville road to a little village named Greenwood, some 215 miles from Charleston, and about 30 north of the Savannah River. The road from Charleston to Columbia passes through the most dreary country the eye of traveller ever rested on. Tangled brakes of stunted pine, alternating with dismal marshes or blighted corn-fields, and not a hill to relieve the wretched monotony, constitute the never-changing prospect. Well-cultivated fields stretch down to the road. Pleasant farm-houses, embedded in oak and magnolia, with the smoke of the negroes' huts rising up out of the dense groves, here and there meet the view, and gladden both eye and heart. The whole face of nature is changed. Even the very steam-engine—(to my surprise I found it named after that venerable warrior, Brian Borhoime)—seems to derive new vigor from the altered circumstances, and rattles away with accelerated speed. Greenwood, the point at which I made a two days' halt, is one of the most lovely little spots imaginable. Traversed by interminable winding lanes, bordered with spreading oaks and evergreens, a stranger might begin at one end of it, and travel round and round without ever being able, without inquiry, to gain the place from which he started. I went to take a stroll one evening before tea, and foolishly neglecting to observe the bearings as I passed along, made a false turn in coming back, and wandered hither and thither until half-past nine o'clock, when, despairing of being able to fine the way home myself, I was obliged to make inquiries of a person I was fortunate enough to meet, and ascertained that I was then proceeding in a direction actually opposite to that in which my entertainer's house was situated. The houses of the farmers and planters are small whitewashed cottages, with parterres of flowers in front. Each, being considerably removed from its neighbors, is buried in a grove, so that the traveller is unaware of its presence until some sudden turn in the lane, or clearing in the wood, brings him right face to face with it. The air of the place is so thoroughly rural, and quiet and secluded, that it recalled to my mind a passage in the preface to Cowley's Poems, which may have been penned by him when, finding himself no longer with that royal vagabond, Charles II., and excited by the glowing accounts of the new country across the ocean which the English adventurers who had settled Charleston brought back, he may be led to form a scheme of happiness for himself which he seems to have indulged until he had totally forgotten its absurdity. "My desire," says he, "has been, for some years past, though the execution has been accidentally diverted, and does still vehemently continue, to retire myself to some of our American plantations; not to seek for gold, or enrich myself with the traffic of those parts, which is the end of most men who travel, but to forsake this world for ever with all the vanities and vexations of it, and to bury myself there in some obscure retreat, but not without the consolation of letters and philosophy."

Greenwood would have been the very spot for him, though it may be questioned whether it would have fulfilled all its expectations. Like Dr. Johnson, I have not yet been able to discover that content is the inhabitant of any particular region, or that a man may set sail with a fair wind, and leave behind him all his cares, incumbrances, and calamities.

By the way, I wonder to which of the political parties Mr. Cowley would have attached himself were he here now. Being rather fond of peace, he would, perhaps, have voted for Buchanan; or, mayhap, seized with the laudable ambition of sharing in the spoils of politics, he would have imitated the example of our northern literati, and, like Howadji Curtis and the virgin Willis, taken to spouting freesoilism, or writing letters in favor of Fremont. It is no great matter now, however. With Mr. Toots, we consider it "of no consequence." Mr. Cowley was thoroughly sick of politics, we have no doubt, when Charles turned the cold shoulder on him, and may have taken the wise resolution of having nothing to do with them in future.

The general impression of the South, in the minds of Northern people, is a sort of mingling up of bowie-knives, revolvers, slave-drivers with broad-brimmed hats and long whips, shrieking negroes, blood and murder, and all that. I was very agreeably disappointed when I came to mix with the people. I could see none of the horrors that I had been taught to believe existed among them. I found the range of intelligence considerably more extensive than one is apt to meet with in the country districts of the North. I could discern none of those social corruptions that are said among us to disfigure Southern society.

I found a people sober, intelligent, high-minded, patriotic, and kind-hearted. One thing I missed, to-wit—the squalid misery of the laboring classes of the North. I saw no poverty. And you may depend on it, the absence of poverty is a very superior feature in any community.

Another very interesting trait, or class of traits, in Northern society, never shows its face among our Southern friends. The people have no penchant for isms; and, let me tell you, they manage to get on wonderfully well without them. There are no cadaverous, sapless, man-forsaken females, turning politics into into a burlesque, philosophy into farce, and religion into a reproach. There are no long-haired fanatics preaching a millenium of free-love. There are no Hiss committees, no convent-burners, no addle-pated ranters, no Know-Nothings. There are no "ministers of the Gospel"—save the mark!—sermonizing from the text—"Go ye into the world and shoot at every creature," turning the church into the play-house, and making rowdyism of religion. But, it may be urged, "slavery is there." Well, sir, what of it? You are not responsible for it. You have no business with it. Look around you, and you will see slavery every where—aye, under your very nose! Slavery ten thousand times worse than any involuntary physical servitude.

"Still, slavery is bad."

Granted. But how are you going to remedy it? Are you an American, and would you ask your fellow countrymen to do the work of the slave? Are you a foreigner, and would you ask a European to do it? No, sir; you know better. Just mind your own affairs, then, and let slavery alone. Slavery, like every other social institution, has its dark side; and it would be well, perhaps, if we could get rid of it. But we can't, in our time, and should therefore confine our efforts to alleviating the evils that accompany it.

"It is a strange fact," observed a Southern gentleman to me, one day, "that the harshest, most exacting, and most abusive slave-owers among us, are Northern men. They have no sympathy with the slave; no consideration for his inferior capacity, and no confidence in his integrity. Even the Northern women, who sometimes come down here to teach our schools, exhibit a repugnance to the slave that is strangely at variance with their professions of love for them at the North, and with what we would expect from the tender hearts of the sex. We, on the contrary, look on our slaves as part of our family. They grow up among us, their children mix with our's from their earliest childhood, and affections are formed in that way which the growth of years only serves to strengthen."

The truth of these observations my own experience, brief though it was, fully served to confirm. I saw the slaves in South Carolina treated with an indulgence which completely took me by surprise, and which, I thought, our Northern Pecksniffs might imitate with advantage.

It was not my intention, in commencing this letter, to say anything whatever of Slavery; but I was irresistibly led into it when I began to think of the villainous cant in relation to it, to which my ears had been accustomed in the North.

Again, it is urged against the South—South Carolina particularly—that the public sentiment of the people strongly savors of disunion. Well, friends, having to stop sometime, I shall here, in the elegant phraseology of the Empire Club, "dry up." As to disunion, don't agitate yourselves. Keep cool and vote for Buchanan. That's all. Sometime again, when I have fresher materials and more leisure, I may take another dive into the Note Book.

LIFE AND TIMES OF ROBERT EMMET.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF ROBERT EMMET. By R. R. MADDEN, M. D., M. R. I. A. With numerous Notes and additions, and a Portrait on steel. Also a MEMOIR OF THOMAS ADDIS EMMET. With a Portrait on steel. P. M. Haverty.

[SECOND ARTICLE.]

Robert Emmet, deep in the study of military tactics, spent the early autumn of 1802 in Paris. He had interviews with Bonaparte and Talleyrand, from which he augured success, inasmuch as the patched-up peace between France and England could not, from the ambition of the former and the intrigues of the latter, be of long duration. He had not much faith in the actual sympathy of either of those personages; but felt that under the inspiration which guided both, the disruption of Ireland would be a grand point towards furthering the projects of France against England. Of Bonaparte's temporary sincerity to aid Ireland under the exigencies of his mission, he had no doubt. "He thought, however, that Talleyrand rather desired the establishment of an independent republic in Ireland, and that Bonaparte did not. His only object was to aggrandize France, and to damage England; and so far as that object went, to wish well to any effort in Ireland that might be ancillary to his purpose." The political movements—the "dreadful notes of preparation" for war—in France and England, under favor of the temporary treaty of Amiens, dated March 27th, 1802—the diplomatic dodging going on between the statesmen of the two powers—the virulent abuse of Bonaparte by the leading English journals, and the unsatisfied demands of M. Otto, the French Minister at London, touching the Bourbon princes and the French emigrants in England, as well as those "obnoxious, seditious and unbecoming publications" alluded to, fully convinced the hopeful and brooding Irish exiles that war was inevitable.

The fire of '98 was still smouldering on many a bleak and disquieted hearth-stone in Ireland. There were horrible memories in mens' minds—memories all the more desperate that they were pent up, and to such memories, and for the men who held them, war was as the giving speech to the dumb and light to the captive.

The design on Ireland, was not that of Robert Emmet solely. All the Irish exiles in Paris and Belgium, with the exception of Arthur O'Connor, appear to have been engaged in it, or at least cognizant of the fact.* Emmet, from his connection, enthusiasm and ability, became the leading agent of the movement. Of the party in Paris, Thomas Russel had the most influence. This we are given to understand by O'Connor, to whom the French Government communicated the project.

Robert Emmet arrived in Dublin in October, 1802, and though secretly in communication with the revolutionary leaders, went into society, and did not seriously, or apparently so, apply himself to the fulfilment of its plans, until the declaration of war in March, 1803, when that cheering intelligence aroused the energy and foresight with which his name is so grandly linked. The funds at his disposal were less than ten thousand dollars of his own fortune, and some seven thousand furnished for the purpose by Philip Long, a patriotic and wealthy tradesman, of Dublin, who entered fully into the project.

Lawless accompanied Emmet to Ireland. Thomas Russell, regarding whom Tone said, "I think the better of myself for being the object of esteem of such a man," and who had but quitted his prison at Fort George, came to Ireland to lead the men of the North, over which district he was appointed General-in-Chief. Putnam McCabe's presence in the country is made memorable by his felicitous escape from the soldiery at Belfast. O'Dwyer was at the head of a brave band of mountaineers in Wicklow. Nicholas Gray, Bagenal Harvey's aide-de-camp in Wexford during '98, was in the movement. The indefatigable weaver of Templepatrick, James Hope, who had been the secret agent of the leading men of '98, and who, with McCracken, led the insurgents at the gallant fight of Antrim, was still unceasing in his allegiance to the cause, and deeply trusted by Emmet. Many brave and good men, men of substance and sinew, in Dublin and the counties, gave their courage—and in many instances their lives to the daring project of the young and brilliant Emmet.

That he was capable of banding so many good and desperate men together, and of swaying their councils, overcomes any objection which self-protective "wise-men" may bring against his youth. Men with "liberal" notions are apt to call Emmet a "sad enthusiast;" and Dr. Madden, who writes his life, does it with a too cautious spirit. Their is too much sentimental shake-headativeness in it.—Too much of the "Patience and Perseverance" school of politics. His biography is more an apology for, than a defence of the life of Robert Emmet.

To follow the details of Emmet's rising, in all its preparatory energy, caution, and desperation, we wish not. It must be carefully read and examined to be fully appreciated. Suffice it, that he was untiring and managed so adroitly that the appearance of quiet was undisturbed in Dublin, and although, as stated in Plowden and others, the authorities had some intimation of what was going forward, it was not until July 14—when the people gathered round bonfires to celebrate the Anniversary of the French Revolution—that they could be made to believe the fact, which the accidental blowing up of one of the insurgent powder depots in Patrick street, on the 16th, more fully confirmed.

With that explosion United Irishism virtually was blown into barren fragments.

The rising took place on the 23d July. The scaffolds of Emmet and Russell, and some twenty others, alone remain to make it memorable.

If the period was not fruitful in results, it is deeply impressive in its history for Irishmen, and all other men, who, either having or seeking freedom, can appreciate the struggles and sacrifices made to obtain it. Every historical student must have the history of such a period and of such men. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Haverty for this publication, which, in addition to the matter originally published in the Dublin Edition of 1847, contains a life of Thomas Addis Emmet, made from the combined labors of Dr. Madden and Charles Glidden Haines. General Haines had the particulars of his brocure* from the illustrious exile, himself.

The publication of Addis Emmet's life at this particular juncture, has an interest apart from, and in addition to its revolutionary character, in the celebrated letters addressed by him to Rufus King, a noted federalist, who sided with the British Government against the Irish revolutionists, and was instrumental in preventing their coming to America previous to their imprisonment in Fort George. These letters are exceedingly powerful, and were addressed to Mr. King when he was candidate for that office, for which his son is at present put forward by the Fremont party—that of Governor of the State of New-York.

In addition to these matters of interest we can safely recommend this edition of the life of Robert Emmet as the best extant. Madden's life has been somewhat amended in the text; and the character of the men and the times more fully illustrated by copious notes and extracts from numerous recent authorities. In fact everything touching the subject, which could elucidate or throw light on a great variety of topics connected therewith has been diligently sought, and judiciously used by the publisher. Two admirable engravings of the brothers, executed by a young and able Irish artist, Mr. O'Neil, are well worth the price paid for the volume. Mr. O'Neil's burin, of which we shall have more to say, is destined for a career of profit as well as reputation. In conclusion we may add that Mr. John Savage contributes to the work an original biographical sketch of the venerable patriot and orator Robert Holmes.

We learn that Mr. Haverty intends to publish in uniform style those splendid series of historical tales, illustrating the period of Silken Thomas, by Samuel Ferguson, entitled "Hibernian Nights Entertainment."

COMIC MISERIES.

THE HUMOROUS POETRY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, from Chaucer to Saxe, &c., &c., with notes, explanatory and biographical. By J. PARTON. Mason Brothers.

At the first glance, one is apt to think this book a good one, he finds so many pleasant things in it. At a second glance, he is sure to find something dull; and at a third glance, if the reader be one who knows where to put his finger on the really humorous poetry of the English language, he is very much dissatisfied with Mr. Parton's acquaintance with the humorous writers, or rather writers of humor, from Chaucer to Saxe.

It is no easy matter to be, so to speak, the Boswell of a hundred Johnson's in the comic way. It takes a man as much wanting in actual literary power as Jamie Boswell was, to give a clear and thorough reproduction of a loquacious and polysyllabic old Tory-Titan like Sam Johnson. In such a case, much depends on the absolute narrow-mindedness of the note-taker, who has no eyes, ears, or comprehension for the words of any creature save the one whose ponderous and unceasing twattle he sets out, in complete abnegation of all else, to record. In getting up a volume like the present, the work is of a much different nature, in as much as the hero-worship with which Boswell started out is wholly wanting, and would be much out of place. A want of discrimination is Boswellian, and we find no fault on that score, but a very acute and despotic discrimination is a necessity for the compilation of a work like Mr. Parton's; or, to speak more correctly, a work like what Mr. Parton's should be; but what it is not. It is heavy in matter as it is in shape, and is no more a collection of the humorous poetry in the English language than a laughing hyena could be substituted for an organ-grinder's monkey. The grins become so broad that they grow frightful. If one half the book provokes laughter, certainly the lamentation induced by the residue more than overbalances and wipes out the pleasant memories. In this respect, it somewhat, and in a literal sense only, resembles Oliver Goldsmith, who—according to Johnson's epitaph—

> "Whether to move laughter
> Or draw tears,
> Was a powerful master."

In his preface the editor says, he "expected to be embarrassed with a profusion of material for his purpose;" and if his book be taken as a fair representative of its title, the reader will agree with him. But there was no necessity to make a book half the size of the present to carry out the idea faithfully: at the same time, it is our humble opinion, a book twice the dimensions, if necessary, could have been compiled, and be a better exponent of the title. Such a book, to be sure, would be rather dangerous, as the amount of fun would kill more people with laughing than might have beeen carried off by a more virulent, if less contagious, epidemic.

From Barham (Ingoldsby), Wolcott (Peter Pindar), Thackeray, and Punch we have by far too much. Of the sawdust and orange peel snobbery of the latter we have over eighty specimens, while of the New-York Lantern, which, during its existence, compared most favorably with its London prototype, we have but one specimen—the author of which (unmentioned) was the late William North. From Miss Phœbe Carey's comic muse we have not even one. The Irish humorists of our day are completely overlooked. Lover, Lever, Freke Slingsby of the Dublin University Magazine, McCarthy, Richard D'Alton Williams, M. J. Barry, Keneally, Brougham, and many others are entirely omitted. Among the numerous omissions we may mention as most flagrant the complete overlooking of such well known writers of the "humorous" as Oliver Goldsmith, George Colman, John Taylor, author of Monsieur Tonson, and Lockhart, whose Captain Paton alone, published in the Noctes Ambrosianæ, is a fund of fun.

An editor of such a book should not rashly dash at Barham, Thackeray, Hudibras, and Punch—as rashly tear out dozens of pages at random, print them off, and label them "the Humorous Poetry of the English language."

A tragic French fool, one Beauvallet, lately took observations on Broadway, went home, that is to Paris, and wrote a book on America. Think of a book on America, without a spark of the life (that turns the whole machine) lying anywhere between the Mississippi and the Hudson, Dubuque and New-Orleans, not to mention the Bowery, being in it. Of course the book was harmless, just as harmless as Broadway, which is no more than the latest fashioned moustache on the face of the Republic. On something of the same principle, Mr. Parton compiled his book of humor. He went over the old, beaten, fashionable path, without visiting the rivers of fun, the towns of drollery, the prairies of wit that lie far removed from the parched and gaudy Broadway, sacred to blasé Joe Millers, and pleasant pundits of the nondescript character, whose chief wit consists in completely misspelling the words Dr. Johnson underwent the praiseworthy drudgery to arrange.

Let the editor, however, not be disheartened. Much greater men could not understand a joke; unless, indeed, it was a very, very old one. He has been fortunate in the choice of a subject, as any work with such a title must necessarily have a fair sale. We learn that this one is in the third edition, which fact is a strange enough indication to its being what we think it—a great sell!

BOOKS RECEIVED.

United States Magazine, October.....J. M. Emerson & Co.
Ailey Moore, a Tale of the Times, &c. By Father Baptist. (J. B. Kirker.).....Dunigan & Brother.
Brownson's Quarterly Review, Oct..... " "
Oration delivered before the Democracy of Principles of Chemistry—embracing the most Recent Discoveries in Science, &c. By John A. Porter, M. A., M. D. Professor in Yale College.....A. S. Barnes.
Sander's High School Reader—embracing a comprehensive course of instruction, &c. By Charles W. Sanders, A. M. Author of "A Series of School Readers.....Ivison & Phinney.
The American Debater. Being a plain exposition of the principles and practice of Public Debate, &c. By Jas. N. McElligott, L. L. D., author of "The Analytical Manual," &c. Third Edition.....Ivison & Phinney.

Letter to Captain Isaiah Rynders, President of the Empire Club of New-York, from T. F. Meagher.

OFFICE OF THE IRISH NEWS, Saturday, Oct. 11, 1856.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been honored with an invitation from you, as President of the Empire Club, which invitation I sincerely regret it will not be in my power to accept. At the close of the week the business of the office presses so urgently upon me, that I am compelled, at that time, invariably, to decline many agreeable engagements. No engagement I know of would gratify me more than the one you have so flatteringly proposed.

A Democrat in heart—from nature as well as by conviction—I rejoice in a thorough identification with those who constitute the bone and sinew of Democracy, and from whom this majestic Republic derives its robust life, adventurous activity and wealth.

Not on the bankers, with their vaults of gold—not on the proud proprietors of ships and acres—not on the dainty patrons of the Opera, and the silver-tongued oracles of fashion—does America, in her unity of sovereign States and nobility of freedom, depend. These are but the superficial ornaments which grow out of and contribute, here and there, picturesque details to the staunch solidity of the Republican fabric.

Without question, it is well to have the great moneyed interest pronounce from its stately portico, as it did the other day in Wall street, in favor of those principles which the gallant men you command have been organized to conserve and propagate. A sanction formally expressed by this interest—expressed, too on the very spot from which it has multiplied into a prodigious power—a power which successfully competes with the commercial aristocracies of Europe, the most affluent even, such a sanction serves to indicate, clearly and emphatically, that the Democratic party is a conservative confederacy, the principles of which are, at the one and the same time, the foundation-stones of the Commonwealth, and the stars which, night and day, reflect in heaven its magnificent altitude on earth.

But the pillars of the Exchange may fall, and the street in which they rear themselves may become as silent as a street in Tripoli—and the sheriff's writ may humble the flaunting splendor of the palaces in which the lords of cotton bales and pig iron seek expensively to obliterate their origin—and yet the Democratic party will continue to be in political action what it now is, an invincible supremacy.

For shooting its roots deep and wide into the heart of the country—being bone of its bone, and flesh of its flesh—being, in fact, the whole country concentrated into disciplined action—no reverse of fortune, striking down the loftiest heads that lift themselves above the multitude, can chill its spirit or impair its strength.

So long as the Declaration of Independence can be read—so long as the wisdom of Thomas Jefferson inspires the masses, and the intrepid patriotism of Andrew Jackson evokes from them a cheer—so long as the Capitol collects within its walls the repre-

* Lawless was thoroughly acquainted with his intentions, and thought favorable of them. * * * Dr. MacNeven, Hugh Wilson, Thomas Russell, William and Thomas Corbet, Hamilton and Sweeny, were intimate and confidential friends of Robert Emmet, as well as of his brother; several of them, there is positive proof, concurred in the attempt. All of them it may be supposed were cognizant of it. All these surviving friends are agreed on one point, that the project did not originate with Robert Emmet. Madden, p 37. Haverty's Ed.—The statement regarding O'Connor, is made in his own words. He says the plans "were not communicated to him. They were divulged to him by the French Government."

O'Connor also alludes to the fact that in 1802-3, some of the United Irishmen in Paris "were opposed to him;" which probably may be explained by a knowledge of certain difficulties between himself and Putnam McCabe. The latter had lent O'Connor $28,700, on an assignment of some property in Ireland, which was the cause of much litigation and many serious misadventures to the latter, who died in Paris, 1821, poor.

* Memoir of Thomas Addis Emmet. By Charles Glidden Haines; with a Biographical Notice of Mr. Haines. New-York, 1829. Mr. Haines died in 1824.

sentatives of the American people, from the Penobscot to the Rio Bravo—and the one dome and crowning flag typifies the unity of the States, whose chosen citizens deliberate for the common weal beneath them—so long shall the Democratic party be the party of the Constitution, its strict interpreter, and triumphant champion.

I beg you to be so good as to assure the members of the Empire Club of my cordial confidence and regard, and believe me, my dear Sir,

Most respectfully, yours,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER.

To Captain Isaiah Rynders, President of the Empire Club.

THE IRISH NEWS GUARD.

This company, owing to the zealous exertions of a few young men—who can justly boast of the result—is now fully organized.

To announce that they consist, for the most part, of the Edward Fitzgerald Guard, while under the efficient command of M. F. Nagle—now correspondent for the Irish News in Nicaragua and Lieutenant in the army of that Republic—is to give assurance to all who take an interest in the Irish contingent of the militia in this city, that, if properly officered and uniformed, they will be a creditable addition to the ranks of that admirable organization.

At present, the Guard, numbering fifty-two members, drill each Tuesday evening, at the Eagle Rooms, under the direct command of their Captain, Edward K. Butler. At Mr. Meagher's recent address before the Catholic Library Association, they made their first appearance in public, bearing aloft the insignias of their native and adopted lands—the "Starry Flag of Liberation" and the Irish Tricolor. On their entrance, they were most cordially greeted by the entire audience.

In a few weeks, we understand, they contemplate a target excursion on a grander scale than usual, and with more than the ordinary accompanying festivities. Meantime, they are as cordial supporters of Buchanan and Breckinridge as the News itself.

The John Scott Musketeers, G. W. Flynn, commandant, will make their annual target excursion to Ward's Hotel, Mott Haven, on Monday, October 20th, leaving their quarters, No. 7 Frankfort-street, at 7 A. M. They are composed of persons that have charge of the various steam-presses in this city.

American News.

The ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of the Troy University took place on the 1st instant, in presence of a large number of visiters and citizens. His Honor Mayor Slocum called the assembly to order, and prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Smalley. Dr. Baldwin commenced an address on the ground, and (the weather being foul) finished in the North Baptist Church. Dr. McClintock and Mayor Slocum also spoke. A Bible, History of the University, by Prof. L. Barber; place of organization and place of study for the University, by Dr. McClintock; Map of Troy; Troy City Directory; Corporation Laws of Troy; Troy Almanacs; the leading New-York city papers; daily and weekly papers of Troy; Report of the Board of Education of Troy, and other publications, were deposited in the corner-stone.

The N. O. Picayune of the 30th ult., says Dr. Branch T. Archer, the father of the Texas Revolution, died at the residence of Mrs. Wm. H. Wheaton, in Brazoria county, on the 22d ult. Dr. Archer came from Virginia to Texas in 1831, and from his fine intelligence and social qualities, very soon became a popular man. He had served in the Virginia Legislature. He was elected to the consultation of 1835, and by that body made its President. On its adjournment, he was sent, with Wm. H. Wharton and Austin, as Commissioner to the United States, was elected to the first Congress in 1836, and from 1839 to 1841, was Secretary of War. Since that time, he has been in retirement, enjoying the society and friendship of his old friends, who entertained great respect for him. Dr. Archer was a polished gentleman, a ripe scholar, and an eloquent speaker.

Bishop Polk, of Louisiana, has addressed a letter to the New-Orleans Delta, covering a circular addressed by him to the Bishops of Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, Florida, and the Carolinas, on the necessity of organizing a system of Southern education, and building up Southern religious institutions as a part of a general system of defence.

Hudson Carlisle, junior, who served, with great honor to himself and credit to his country, throughout the Mexican war, died in Philadelphia on the 1st inst. He was brother to the Hon. R. M. Carlisle, a member of the State Legislature.

The Legislature of Texas have appropriated $60,000 for the purpose of equipping and fitting out emigrants for Kansas. Companies to consist of not less than sixty each, and the amount of each company not to exceed $12,000, to defray their expenses and subsistence in Kansas for three months.

It is said that Brace, who was recently executed by the Vigilance Committee, in San Francisco, amused himself during his confinement by composing rhymes. While under sentence of death, and awaiting execution, he perpetrated the following:

"The Vigilants they say,
Sent Cora and Casey away,
And they erected a scaffold accordin'—
They pulled away the prop,
And down went the drop,
And they landed on the other side of Jordan."

A St. Louis paper says that the grasshoppers have eaten up the entire tobacco crop of Franklin county, and the last that was heard from them, they were seated on the corners, begging every man that paseed for a chew.

The Woodstock (Va.) Tenth Legion publishes the death of Christian Dellinger, at the advanced age of 92 years. He served in the revolutionary war at the age of 17 years, and was present at the siege of Yorktown.

There are in the city of New Albany, Indiana, three thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven children between the ages of five and twenty-one.

City News.

The Sunday Times thus chronicles the latest great excitement. The opening of Phelan's new billiard rooms, on Broadway, immediately adjoining Grace church, was one of the grand events of the week. From six to seven thousand persons have already visited these rooms, and a large proportion of which were ladies. What a glorious arrangement, to be sure, to be able to take one's wife, or sweetheart, along to see one "carrom on the red," and make scientific touches in obedience to the fixed laws of mathematics. The ladies are extremely anxious see these rooms, and Mr. Phelan, we understand, intends to set apart an afternoon for their accommodation, and will issue tickets of admission for the occasion. Why should not ladies play at billiards? What say you, Mr. Phelan, to the suggestion of giving them a day in a week to handle the cue without interruption? They would have to take off their hoops, though, in order to achieve shots requiring them to "make a long arm" across the table. Mr. Phelan's rooms are truly magnificent. Thousands of dollars have been expended in fitting them up, and they have not been expended in vain. A more comfortable and beautiful resort cannot well be imagined. Mr. Phelan may take the credit of having inaugurated an entirely new era in the history of the game of billiards. His saloon is certainly as much of a feature among the elegant and notable sights of the city as the Crystal Palace. We do not think that anybody will visit New-York without dropping in to see Phelan. The opening days and evenings were rendered doubly attractive by the "crack" playing displayed on the unequalled tables. Five of the best players in the world were there. Messrs. White and Bird, from Philadelphia, played some unsurpassable games, and Mr. Myam (familiarly known as "The Pony,") made many exhibitions of his wonderful skill and science. By the way, another famous player, Mr. Lake, has been engaged by Mr. Phelan, to give instructions in the game to gentlemen, and a room for his pupils has been handsomely and luxuriously fitted up in a convenient corner. On dit—that Appleton & Co. will shortly issue Phelan's long expected book on billiards. We are persuaded that this work will have a large sale, a good practical elucidation of the game being something never before embodied in a volume.

California News.

By the George Law (Aspinwall, 4th inst.,) we have news from San Francisco to the 20th Sept.

After the storm has come the inevitable calm. San Francisco is as quiet and harmonious as a country village.

Since the sailing of the last steamer, there has been rains in various portions of the State. On the 5th, a destructive fire broke out in Marysville, in which some forty buildings, mostly occupied by Mexicans and Chinese, were destroyed. The town of Colusi was entirely destroyed by fire about the same time.

The settlers of Sacramento held a meeting on the 7th, to consider the recent decision of the Supreme Court of this State, declaring the right of claimants of inchoate grants to eject settlers previous to a final confirmation by the United States Congress. They passed resolutions to maintain their possessions at all hazards, until the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

From all portions of the mining region we hear the most favorable accounts. Extensive preparations are being made in anticipation of the rainy season, to work the dry gulches and ravines where there is no water. We continually hear of "rich strikes," and it is probable that there never were more favorable prospects in the mining region than there are at present. The Indians prediet that there will be a great deal of rain this winter.

The Young Men's Democratic Club will not admit any one to membership who belongs to or endorses the Vigilance Committee. During the Committee's reign, a letter, from the second in command, under the Governor, of the State Army of Suppression, dated at Sacramento, and sent to this city, came into the hands of the Committee before it reached the one to whom it was directed. There was a great deal of talk about it, and the matter went before the United States Grand Jury, who, after examining many witnesses, dismissed the case, exonerating the Post Office from blame. The letter contained items in regard to the Vigilance Committee.

Herbert arrived by the last steamer. The heavy petitions requesting him to resign, and abandon affection for this state, had been presented to him.

OBITUARY.

Died, in Boston, on October 2nd, of Consumption, Mrs. Anne Manning, daughter of Mr. John Crowe, Printer, of the city of Cork, Ireland, aged 31 years.

Cork papers please copy.

MONEY SAVED

IN BUYING BOOKS ON THE GIFT PRINCIPLE.

Great Sale of Books at $1 each, which includes Works sold at $1 25.

A GIFT WITH EVERY BOOK!

Orders from the country will be sent by Mail or Express, with dispatch.

☞ Catalogues of the Books and Gifts sent to any address.

oct18 6t J. S. Andrews, 140 Nassau street, New-York.

ERIN GUARD OF BROOKLYN.

At a meeting of the Erin Guard, held at People's Hall, corner of York and Pearl streets, on Friday Evening, October 3, 1856, it was unanimously—

Resolved, That a vote of thanks be tendered to the ladies who presented the Guard with a number of most beautiful wreaths on Wednesday, October 1, 1856, the occasion of their third annual target excursion. Also, that the same be tendered to Madame Graen, of 201 Atlantic street, for the excellent manner in which she embroidered a sett of colors for the Company.

It was also—

Resolved, That the thanks of the Company be tendered to the invited Guests for the liberal and handsome manner in which they responded to their several invitations.

PRIZES.	PRESENTED BY	WON BY
1—Gold Watch	James McMahon	Owen Murphy.
2—$10 gold piece	Robert Bradley	Neil Doherty.
3—	Daniel McGonigle	Thomas Ackley.
4—Silver watch	Patrick O'Hara	John McDonald.
5—$10 gold piece	Martin Kalbfleish	Patrick Grenney.
6—$5 gold piece	Nicholas Waldron	B. McDonough,
7—	James Conroy	George Mullin.
8—	Hugh McLaughlin	John Taggart.
9—Gold locket	James Lowrey	Charles Curren.
10—$5 gold piece	Patrick McGonigle	James Moodey.
11—Gold pen and pencil	Henry Breslin	Bernard Doherty.
12—Silver goblet	John McCready	Lawrence Bonner.
13—$5 gold piece	William Hasket	James Seary.
14—	David C. Aitkin	Patrick Murray.
15—	Arthur Moyniham	Henry Corr.
16—	—— ——	Redmond McKenna.
17—Silver goblet	George Doherty	Daniel Breslin.
18—$5 gold piece	Ald. Cashaw	James Curry.
19—	Ald. Pell	Patrick Malone.
20—$3 gold piece	James McKenna	B. O'Donnell.
21—Silver goblet	Dr. Ferrier	Patrick Farron.
22—Gold pencil	James Tiner	Neil Ruddy.
23—$3 gold piece	Patrick Haines	James Rorke.
24—Silver goblet	Patrick McCaffrey	James Catchecise.
25—Gold breast pin	John Corr	John Lynch.
26—Silver cup	Mr. Van Camp	Michael Doherty.
27—$3 gold piece	Patrick Cassidy	William Quigly—No. 2.
28—	Hugh Bell	James Tamony.
29—Order $6 boots	Edward Ruddy	Patrick Crossen.
30—$2 50 gold piece	James Mullin	William Quigly—No. 1.
31—Order $6 boots	Michael Higgins	John Boswell.
32—Gold breast pin	Peter Harison	And. McDivitt.
33—	T. Fitzgerald	William Lucas.
34—Order $6 boots	George Sweeny	John Lafferty.
35—Gold breast pin	John McGeehan	Joseph Baily.
36—Order $5 boots	Michael Kelly	Thomas Mullin.
37—$2 50 gold piece	J. Riley	Patrick McLoughlin.
38—Order $5 hat	A. Gettins	John McKeege.
39—	M. McNamara	Patrick Gillen.
40—Ladies Brooch	F. Darbey	James McLoughlin.
41—Order $5 vest	A. Cole	William McGinness.
42—$4 hat	Samuel Dewall	Michael Bonner.
43—$3 hat	Henry Briody	John Mullin.
44—$4 hat	Francis Mackey	Daniel Fitzpatrick.
45—$3 hat	W. E. White	James Donnelly.
46—$5 hat	Patrick Brawley	Daniel McGeehan.

It was moved and carried that the above Resolutions and List of Prizes be published in the Irish News, Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and Irish American.

JAS. DOHERTY, Chairman.

John Lafferty, Sec'y.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellec ual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

Mr. Wallack will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previous'y to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," Miss Agnes Robertson, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,
WITH A POWERFUL
Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....50 cents. | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,
Opposite Niblo's Garden,

Every night this week, the grand original new Moon-alogue, entitled

ALL MOONSHINE!

Or, High Times in the Moon!

In which George and Bishop Buckley will perform the great miracle of ANNEXING THE EARTH TO THE MOON.

Preceding which—

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 3-4 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

In rehearsal—

DRED; OR, THE DISMAL SWAMP.

LECTURE, BY JAMES ROCHE,

At the Stuyvesant Institute.

Subject:—Galway—Its two Sieges—Its Position for an European American Packet Station,

On October 20th, at 8 o'clock, P. M. Tickets 25 cents. For sale at this Office; Col. Butler's, 417 Pearl street; Captain Corcoran's, 42 Prince street; Haverty's Book-store, and Dunnigan's Book-store.

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL
OF THE
EMMET LIFE GUARD.
ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,

At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.

Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the Guard and at this office.

☞ The Life Guard pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by by them to produce the best Ball of the season.

Capt. P. T. Lynch, Chairman.

A. O'Toole, Sec'y.
James Watson, Treasurer. oct11

CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Lectures for 1856.

Dr. McElheran will lecture on the Phisiognomy of the white races of men in America, illustrated with Portraits and Cranial Forms, at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Thursday evening October 23, at 8 o'clock.

Tickets 25 cents; can be had of Dunigan & Brother, Sadlier & Co., P. O'Shea, 789 Broadway; and at the door on the evening of the Lecture. oct18 2t

Attention!—"Irish News Guard."—The Company meet for drill and admission of members for their first annual Target Excursion, on Tuesday evening of each week at the "Eagle Drill Rooms," corner of Chrystie and Delancey streets. The Guard cordially invite additions to its ranks.

P. J. Wall, Sec'y. E. K. Butler, Captain.

Extraordinary Revelations of Sadleirism.

From the Dublin Correspondence of the London Times.

The Tablet puts prominently forward the following information of a singular fact which has come to light within the last few days, the accuracy of which, in the main, is guaranteed by the informant. The story, however seemingly romantic, comes, nevertheless, within the range of probabilities. Amiable and accomplished as the late Earl of Shrewsbury was admitted to be, his Lordship, it is said by those who knew him intimately, had not the ordinary share of vulgar common sense which is often alloted to the less gifted and exalted :

"A will has been discovered among the papers of the late Earl of Shrewsbury bequeathing his estates to the late John Sadleir, absolutely and unconditionally. The existence of this will was unknown to Mr. Sergeant Bellasis and Mr. Hope Scott until within the last few days. It is of a date anterior to the will in favor of the infant son of the Duke of Norfolk, and is understood to have been made previous to the short stay of the Earl in London when he took his seat in the House of Lords. The subsequent will was not, however, made in consequence of the public exposure which followed the suicide of John Sadleir ; but before returning abroad the Earl was advised by a dignified ecclesiastic to place his affairs in the hands, and seek the counsel of Catholics of known probity and honor, and we believe that the executors of the existing will were recommended to him. The Earl, however, never made these gentlemen acquainted with the disposition he had previously made of his property, and it is understood that he overruled the advice they tendered to him in many respects, and especially in not leaving anything to his nearest relatives. The intention of the Earl was that his property should be applied by John Sadleir to charitable and ecclesiastical uses, and no plausible reason can be alleged for his choice of the person to whom he confided the distribution of his property, except that his own solicitor and the solicitor of John Sadleir were one and the same person. It is, of course, not to be supposed that this gentleman was acquainted with the Sadleir frauds, or even with the fact of the speculations in which John Sadleir was involved. It is probable that so astute a man as Sadleir would, so far as possible, keep from the knowledge of his Catholic solicitor everything which would tend to lower his opinion of him, and seek other and less scrupulous advisers to carry out the details of his frauds and speculations."

ABDUCTION OF SLAVES FROM LOUISIANA.

From the Bayou Sara Chronicle.

Quite a commotion took place in our quiet village on Saturday morning last. Early in the month a negro man and his wife were stolen from the plantation of J. A. McHatton, of east Baton Rouge. They were taken up the river by a young man named Wise. As the owner of the negroes was in Kentucky, a telegraphic dispatch was sent him, giving information that the negroes had left for the west. He overhauled them in the possession of Wise, at Cairo. Wise and the negroes were brought back on Saturday last, and committed to jail in Baton Rouge. Information was obtained from the negroes that a woman named Mason, who had been living about here for some time was implicated in the abduction of the slaves. An officer was sent from Baton Rouge to arrest her. It appeared that the negroes had stolen from their owners a large amount of silver ware, which the woman acknowledged to be in her possession. The articles were found in a house in Jackson, that had been rented to Mrs. Mason and her husband. Both Mason and his wife were sent to Baton Rouge to answer the charge of receiving stolen goods, and aiding and abetting the escape of negroes.

We have been informed that the man and the woman have been living in our town during the last two or three months. The woman has been engaged in telling fortunes. She has been quite liberally patronized in this line of business by quite a number of ignorant and superstitious white persons, and any number of negroes. It appears that her house has been a perfect den for the latter.

The man, when arrested, had in his possession a number of blank certificates, with the signatures of Governor Walker and Charles Gayarre, Secretary of State. Those papers must have been purloined from the Governor's office.

BUCHANAN AND THE PRESS.

At a meeting, says the N. Y. Sun, of the T. F. Meagher Club, held on the 6th inst., in their rooms, 125 Grand-street, the President, John Duffy, in the chair, it was unanimously resolved, on motion of Edward Hughes, seconded by Mr. McShane, that the members should exert all their influence in support of James Buchanan as the Democratic candidate for President of the United States.

Senator S. A. Douglas has commenced the campaign in Illinois. He addressed the Democracy of Chicago on the 8th inst., and intends to canvass the whole State. The "little Giant" promises that Illinois will roll up a majority of 25,000 for the Democratic candidate.

It is astonishing, says the Waterford (Ireland) News, how apt some papers in this country are to take their tone from the English papers. If the Liberal journals in Ireland knew anything about parties in America they would not be writing up the Know Nothing Col. Fremont, to the prejudice of the democratic Buchanan. Such work should be left to journals of the Evening Mail class, which are not unmindful on that topic we see.

We perceive the old soldiers are for Buchanan. Sixty-two U. S. pensioners were paid off last week, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, by Captain Joel Green, the Pension Agent at this place. As an indication of the true spirit that animates the veterans, it may be stated that they were for Buchanan to a man.

The Pittsburgh Daily Union of the 6th inst., prints the following from the Boston Daily Bee of the 22d April last: "Col. J. C. Fremont was born in France, January, 1813. His father was an emigrant from France, and his mother a native of Virginia." The Constitution of the United States requires that the office of President shall be filled by a native-born citizen of the Union.

IN MEMORIAM.

From the Mobile Daily Register, Oct. 2.

"A dispatch to one of our cotemporaries, brought us yesterday the melancholy intelligence of the death of Wm. R. Taber, Jr., the editor of the Charleston Mercury.

Mr. Taber was a young man, scarcely twenty-eight, but possessed of fine abilities, which had been carefully cultivated. He had already made his mark in the community in which he lived and won for himself a reputation but rarely attained at so early an age. A singularly graceful and impressive speaker, wielding a pen as terse and pungent, as it was undeniably polished and brilliant, and above all a high-souled gentleman, he was eminently fitted to wear with dignity the honors which crown success in the political arena. But alas! these brilliant endowments, which threw around his early manhood the promise of a bright future, serve but to gild the grave, in which, with the genial, social virtues that endeared him to his friends, they lie entombed.

To a community which knew him not, the announcement of his death comes but as a ripple on the ceaseless current of passing events ; but to us, it was a painful shock, and we trust we may be pardoned, if we step aside a moment from the great whirl of politics, to lay a solitary flower on the grave of our departed friend.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

On the 18th instant, at Newbawn, Patrick Meyler, of Gentstown, to Kate Mary, daughter of the late Tobias Rossiter, of Newbawn.

At Dalkey, Robert McDermott, son of William C. McDermott, Barrister-at-law, to Anna Mary, daughter of the late Francis Cruise, of Dublin.

At St. Paul's, Edinburgh, Lieutenant Colonel A. Lorn Campbell, Bengal Light Cavalry, to Jemima Janet, daughter of James Paterson, M. D., late of the 42d Highlanders.

September 18, at Stanway, Essex, Robert Otho Travers, late Captain in the King's Dragoon Guards, son of the late Thomas Otho Travers, of Leemount, county Cork, to Louisa Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Joseph Turner, of Little Olivers, Essex.

September 19, at Norton Stockton-on-Tees, Thomas Robinson Grey, Major of the 1st Durham Militia, son of the late Lieut. Colonel Grey, of Norton, to Lucy, daughter of Major General Mills, of Willington House, Durham.

September 18, at Norwich, Francis Laurie, of Hollymount, county Mayo, to Mary Emily, only surviving daughter of John Underwood, of Carlisle.

At Tullow, county Carlow, P. Muldowney, of New Abbey Mills, Kilcullen, to Marianne, daughter of James Lawlor, of Tullow.

In the Parish Chapel of Shrule, Robert J. Morgan, M. D., of Moycullen, to Mary Anne, daughter of the late Mathias Commins, of Shrule, county Mayo.

At Amiens, Charlotte, youngest daughter of P. M. Murphy, Q. C., to Ernest Charles de Witasse de Fontaine, of Chateau Fontaine, in the department of the Somme, France.

In Dublin, Henry. son of the late William Chance, of Birmingham, to Mary Letitia, daughter of George L. Bennett, of Glenefy, county Limerick.

September 22, in Rathkeale, John Hayes, of Ballingarry, Schoolmaster, to Miss Susan Bennett, parochial Schoolmistress of Rathkeale.

In Rathfarnham church, Robert Henry Peare, son of H. Peare, of Peare Mount, county Dublin, to Amelia Elinor, daughter of Thomas S. Eyre, J. P., of Eyreville, county Galway.

In St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Samuel, son of the late W. H. Talbot, of Ennis, and grandson of the late Samnel Talbot, of Ballytarsna, Roscrea, to Kate Ellen, daughter of the late Thomas Hunt, of Upper Baggot street, Dublin.

September 21, at St. Mary's Church, Kilkenny, John Monk, of John street, to Joanna, daughter of Garret Kelly, of High street.

In Monkstown church, William Jones, of Chester, to Nannie Lizzie, daughter of Thomas Anthony, of Kingstown.

Captain Peto, son of the Rev. James Peto, to Emily Caroline, relict of Colonel Macpherson, and youngest daughter of the late Robert Jessop, Mount Jessop, county Longford.

May 24, at Melbourne, Victoria, Rowland Farrer, 21st Regiment, Madras N. I., eldest son of the late Henry Farrer, of Scaleby Hall, Cumberland, to Sarah, daughter of P. Niall, of Clare, and sister of the Rev. P. W. Niall, of Melbourne.

September 23, at St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Henry Bastable, of Baggot street, Solicitor, to Selina Elizabeth, daughter of John Jackson, late of Leinster Vale, county Dublin.

At the Friends' Meeting House, Baltimore, Alfred Clarke, son of Joseph Clarke, of Southampton, to Isabella Blessing Mason, daughter of Joshua Mason, formerly of Staplestown Mills, county Carlow.

IRISH DEATHS.

In the North Presentation Convent, Cork, in her 76th year, Sister Mary Paul, one of the oldest members of that much-valued community. The deceased was sister-in-law to the late John Maguire, of Cork.

September 22, John Aubrey Jephson Norreyes, member of the Middle Temple, and son of Sir Denham Jephson Norreyes, of Mallow Castle.

September 21, at Passage West, William Kirtland.

September 20, at Adare, county Limerick, William Benson.

At Mitchelstown, on the 11th inst., Edward Ffennell, formerly a Lieutenant in the 20th Regiment of Foot, aged 64 years, an old Peninsular officer.

September 18, at Sallymount, Ranelagh, Louisa Margaret, wife of Thomas P. Carr, of Mallow, and daughter of the late Hon. Colonel Richard St. Leger.

September 19, at Liliput, Donnybrook, Jasper John Barry, Inspector of Revenue Police, son of the late Garret Barry, of Rose-hill, county Cork.

At the North Strand, Limerick, the wife of John Doherty.

At Morelands, county Clare, Mary Madden.

At George's-quay, Limerick, aged 88 years, Richard Jackson.

On the 24th of August, in Demerara, of yellow fever, aged 25 years, Thomas Trousdell, mate of the barque Minstrel, son of the late John Trousdell.

At Canning-place, Passage West, Thomas Haines, late of Mallow, aged 81 years.

In London, Ernest Robert James, son of Joseph Myles, late of Limerick.

September 22, at Killenaule, Catherine, wife of B. M'Craith.

September 18, at Cappamore, Thomas, son of Head Constable Thomas Maher.

September 22, at Rathmines, Emily Constance Elizabeth, daughter of John Massy.

At Cowes, Lieutenant Colonel White, late Adjutant in Limerick.

Joseph Wrightson, Editor of the Weekly Despatch, London.

At the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, Emily, wife of Colonel Prosser, Lieutenant Governor of that establishment.

September 19, at Coolnastud, Sarah, relict of John Higginbotham.

At Thirlstane Castle, the Right Hon. Eleanor, Countess of Lauderdale, aged 94 years.

At Enniscorthy, Joseph Carroll, aged 71 years.

Political.

7TH WARD.—TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATS AND CITIZENS GENERALLY OF THE SEVENTH WARD.—Awake to your rights and put down the frauds and violence of primary elections.

The committee appointed by the Democratic Electors of the Seventh Ward, opposed to the present corrupt and demoralizing scenes perpetrated at our primary elections, present the following ticket for the suffrages of the Democratic Electors of the Ward, at the election to be held on the 4th of November, 1856 ; and in thus doing, we call upon you to sustain this ticket composed of gentlemen respected alike for ther integrity as citizens, and well qualified to discharge with honor and ability the duties of the offices for which they have been respectively nominated, and who condemn the present mode of conducting our primary elections, which but express the voice of ballot-box stuffers and not the wishes of the people.

SEVENTH WARD NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

FOR ASSEMBLY,
THOMAS H. FARRAN.
FOR ALDERMAN,
SAMUEL HURLEY.
FOR ASSESSOR,
RICHARD O. GRADY.
FOURTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT,
PETER ZEGLIO.
FIFTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
JAMES L. JOHNSON.
SIXTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
ABRAHAM BROWER.
SCHOOL COMMISSIONER,
GEORGE W. FARLEY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN MURPHY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN WNGONER.
INSPECTOR,
OWEN McCABE.
CONSTABLES,
CHRISTOPHER F. KLENCK, MICHAEL SHANDLEY.

M. T. Runyan, Secretary. M. Dougherty, Chairman.
October 18. 3t.

FIRST WARD

Democratic Republican Regular Nomination.

FOR ALDERMAN,

oct18 WILLIAM WILSON. 2t

Special Notices.

Information Wanted of Andrew Arthur, Gunmaker, lately of Petaluma, California, supposed to be in Nicaragua ; was formerly in Walker's expedition to Sonora. Information addressed to M. Arthur, 95 Cranberry street, Brooklyn, or this Office, will be thankfully received.
California papers will please copy. oct11

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, Broche and Woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, Woollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c.

ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street,
oct4 3mos and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—What are their CREDENTIALS?—They are approved by the most enlightened governments, sanctioned by the highest medical authority, and declared infallible by recovered thousands, in all diseases of the skin, glands, and secretive organs. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London ; and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and $1 per pot or box. oct18

DENTISTRY.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for only One Dollar and Fifty Cents? Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 31 Park Row, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.
N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2.
sept6 3mos Conklin Smith.

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing ; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.
May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

Drs. Gilbert & Kennedy, Treat Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, &c., without Surgical Operations. Office 746 Broadway, corner of Astor Place, New-York.
Certificates from Ex Gov. T. M. Tucker, Judge F. W. Huling, Capt. Isaiah Sellers, A. S. Baldwin, M. D. ; Hon. T. Butler King, Gen. Narcisso Lopez, Capt. Wm. Leathers, W. P. Allison, M. D. ; Judge Alex. Walker, Col. Maunsel White, Thos. E. Bond, M. D. ; J. S. Peacocke, M. D.
Permission to refer to Ex Gov. James C. Jones, Hon. Frederick P. Stanton, B. F. Palmer, Inventor of Palmer's Artificial Leg ; Francis Grice, Naval Constructor, Navy Yard, Philadelphia ; Proprietors of the Girard House, Philadelphia.
☞ Send for a Pamphlet ! oct18 4t

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the CHEAPEST Hair Preparation in existence ; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the VERY BEST Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.
Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
sept13 3mos 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

Furniture.—F. FITZSIMMONS respectfully calls the attention of his customers and the public to his stock of elegant and substantial FURNITURE, (not made for the auction room) consisting of rich Parlor Suites in rosewood ; oak Dining and Chamber Sets of every description ; Upholstery in all its branches executed in the best mechanical manner. Prices unexceptionable. Warerooms No. 8 Astor place, near Broadway. oct11 tf

The Hacking Cough and Soreness of the Chest of the season are immediately relieved by one of DR. ALLCOCK'S India Rubber Porous Plasters. Those who have used them affirm them to be the excelsior of plasters. For local pains of the back, chest or side, caused by a bruise or sprain, they are unrivalled. Sold at 25 cents, at 43 Canal street, Dr. Allcock's wholesale and retail office. oct18 3t

Daguerreotypes.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY'S establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY'S colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated ; they speak for themselves. GURNEY'S plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY'S Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

FACTS
THAT NEED NO MARKING.
Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. FREDRICKS, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of several of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. GURNEY, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After succeesfully following his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

FACTS WHICH ARE KNOWN.—PHOTOGRAPHS, DAGUERREOTYPES, AMBROTYPES, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of business, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhibited. Those desiring Photograps, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M.
CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, oct11 3mos Late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, No. 585 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y. JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. W. H. LYONS, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey. WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport. y2ljune

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.

JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.

JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.

M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Bosten remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

☞ For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

Improved Billiard Tables and Cushions.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 89 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 13, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug28 10t

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, August 12 1856.—To the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York:—Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the general election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to-wit:—

A Governor, in the place of Myron H. Clark.
A Lieutenant-Governor, in the place of Henry J. Raymond.
A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Cornelius Gardiner.
An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Thomas Kirkpatrick.
A Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Benjamin F. Harwood, deceased.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Thirty-five Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.
A Representative in the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States for the Third Congressional district, composed of the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Eighth wards in the city and county of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fourth Congressional district, composed of the Fourth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourteenth wards of the said city and county.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fifth Congressional district, composed of the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of the said city and county, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth wards in the city of Brooklyn, in the county of King's.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Sixth Congressional district, composed of the Eleventh, Fifteenth and Seventeeth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, composed of the Ninth, Sixteenth and Twentieth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Eighth Congressional district, composed of the Twelfth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second wards of the city of New-York.
City and county officers are also to be elected:—
A Mayor, in the place of Fernando Wood.
A City Judge, in the place of Elisha S. Capron.
Two Governors of the Almshouse, in the places of Isaac Bell, jr., and Simeon Draper.
Also, sixteen members of Assembly for said city and county.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.

Your's respectfully, N. P. STANTON, Jr.,
Deputy Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, New-York, August 20, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET, Sheriff of the City and County of New-York.

All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, chap 6, title 3, article 3, part 1, page 140. aug30

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eageriy asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicines.

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

Special Notices.

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.

JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept13

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application, personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until enquiry has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

"Musical." A young Lady lately connected with the profession in Europe where she studied under the first and best masters is desirous of giving to a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who will kindly favor her with a trial may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trenor, 90 South 8th street, Brooklyn, E. D. 3mos

Ladies returning from the Country wishing their supply of Shoes for the fall season, can obtain Ladies' Gaiter Boots from 12s. to 20s., Slippers, Ties and Buskins, from 6s. to 10s., India Rubber Boots and Shoes of all kinds, with Boy's, Misses and Childrep's Boots and Shoes of all kinds and prices, at

sept27 4t J. B. Miller & Co's., 134 Canal street, (West.)

Doctor M. E. Foy, Surgeon, has removed his office to 170 West Nineteenth street, between 7th and 8th Avenues. OFFICE HOURS from 7 to 9 A. M., 1 to 3, and 7 to 9 P. M.

☞ To accommodate his patients in the Eastern part of the city, Dr. F. will attend daily from 2 to 3 P. M., at Ryerson's drug store, 185 Avenue B, between 11th and 12th streets. MIDWIFERY ENGAGEMENTS promptly attended to. Medicine and advice to the poor, gratis. sept13 3mos

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856. FALL IMPORTATION. 1856.

Arthur Donnelly,

98 BOWERY, (West side,) BETWEEN GRAND AND HESTER STREETS Is now prepared to exhibit his New Spring Styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

Comprising every grade and every description, from the Cheapest Fabric to the Richest.

Importing his goods direct and thus saving the commission and interest which most dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other Carpetings adopted to all varieties of taste, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s	per yard.
Velvet,	" 10s to 16s	"
Tapestry,	" 6s to 12s	"
Brussels,	" 7s to 12s	"
Three-ply,	" 7s to 10s	"
Ingrain,	" 3s to 7s	"
Common Ingrain,	" 18d to 3s	"

English and American Floor Oil Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everything else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)
ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has opened the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to is customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city.

Gentlemen's Furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

☞ Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

CARPETINGS FROM AUCTION.

TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK AND VICINITY.

Stephen Leahy,

93 Sixth Avenue, between Waverly and Clinton Place,

BEGS to call the attention of the ladies to his large and varied stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloth. The collection comprises goods of every grade and style, from the richest and most beautiful of foreign manufacture to the lowest price domestic.

All who are acquainted with the Carpet trade and have visited our New Store, acknowledge our stock the most varied assortment and best selected on exhibition in the city. The facilities we enjoy for purchasing cheap, and an experience of many years in connection with the largest houses in the country enables us to present to our lady friends and the public the cheapest and most select stock of goods in the city.

sept27 1m STEPHEN LEAHY, 93 Sixth Avenue.

Men's Furnishing Goods.

84 William Street, corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

GEORGE M. TRACY,

HAS now on hand a choice stock of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, nearly all of which are made under his own inspection, of the choicest fabrics and newest styles. Merchants will find this a desirable place to make their selections. Annexed is a catalogue of some of the articles:

Hosiery and Gloves.	Improved Napoleon Ties.
Silk Beaufort Ties.	Stocks, in great variety.
Linen Collars.	Silk and Linen Handkerchiefs.
Silk Albert Ties.	Dressing Robes.
Fine Shirts.	Travelling Shawls.
Cravats and Stocks.	Silk Under-shirts and Drawers.
Suspenders.	Silk and Gingham Umbrellas.

His Shirts are of superior make and quality and warranted to fit. Persons wishing Goods for their own use will be served at retail as well as wholesale, at the lowest prices. oct4 2mos

ATTENTION!

To Military Companies.

BEAUTIFUL EMBLEMATIC WREATHS AND BOUQUETS,

For Target Excursions, constantly on sale, or made to order at the shortest notice, and at any price.

Ladies about making a presentation to their military friends are most respectfully invited to make a visit to the old established Book Store 366 Bowery one door above 4th Street.

Robert Coddington, Proprietor.

N. B.—Always on sale a fine assortment of Invitation Note Paper and Envelopes, Books on Military Tactics, Works on Ireland.

The IRISH NEWS for sale as soon as published every week. oct11 4t

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and Single counting-room DESKS, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office Desks from 3 to 6 ft., of Mahogany, blackwalnut and oak; cases for Books and pigeon-holes. Office chairs, cushions, lounges and Office Tables of every description. my17 tf

McLOUGHLIN & McSHANE,

(Successors to THOS. ANDREWS,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

CHOICE TEAS, COFFEES, WINES, BRANDIES, AND GROCERIES,

61 FULTON STREET, near Cliff street,
NEW-YORK. 3m

SHIP STORES SUPPLIED.

CALL ON

THOMAS LYNCH,

OF the "FULTON SHADES," Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, for the best XX and XXX ales, brandies, and segars.

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

☞ Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. y jly26

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of HAVANA SEGARS, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 121 PEARL STREET, New-York.

N. B.—Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26 1y

Business Directory.

MEAGHER & CAMPBELL,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

THOS. H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known, and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office at 267 BROADWAY, third door below Chambers street.

☞ All business either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19ly

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and Liens carefully filed, &c.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jeweled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a jul2 6m workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to.

JOHN KENNEDY'S

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

325 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK. 6mJune7

WILLIAM M. SMITH,

The Public Favorite, and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR,

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED IN THE BUSINESS.

Work done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than any other poster in the city. Work done either in New-York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts, or any kind of work.

OFFICE, 28½ SPRUCE STREET, NEW-YORK,
ap26tf (Between William and Gold streets.)

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

MATTHEW WALLACE,

25 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS, &c.

☞ "The Irish News," on hand, by the earliest moment, each week. tf

HAMILTON & JOHNSON,

NEWS AGENTS,

30 ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

DAILY, weekly and Sunday papers, Magazines, and Cheap Publications. The trade supplied. Orders from the country solicited and promptly filled. JOHN HAMILTON, S. W. JOHNSON.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Vanbrunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of WISE'S CORK MALT WHISKEY, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm who import the same in New-York. ap26 1y

Hotels.

NEW HOTEL.

LAFARGE HOUSE,

Broadway, New-York.

This new and beautiful First-class Hotel, is now open for the reception of guests. The location is the most pleasant part of Broadway, opposite Bond street, and in the immediate vicinity of the most fashionable places of amusement. The rooms are large and airy, and so arranged that they may be connected in suites for families, or used separately for single seasons. The patronage of the public is respectfully solicited.

8m19jly STONE & BURROUGHS, Proprietors.

Business Directory.

DR. SHANAHAN,

SURGEON AND ACCOUCHEUR,

Can be consulted at his Office, No. 169 West 38th street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, New-York. oct11 4t

WM. IRWIN,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN BOOTS AND SHOES,

No. 174 BOWERY, opposite Delancey street, New-York.

oct11 Quick Sales and Small Profits. 3mos

THOMAS RUSSELL.

209 FULTON STREET, BETWEEN CHURCH AND GREENWICH STS. and across town, at 111 Attorney-st., corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform the public that he has opened the above establishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &C.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call attention of buyers to his Stock, consisting, in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated Brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, Vintage 1823 and 1842.

Otard, Dupuy & Co., Vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

(Imported by the subscriber to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.)

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a seleet supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Connor, Wall Street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care, being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 36th street, and 6th Avenue: T. Russell & Co., corner 4th Street and 6th Avenue, and at the corners of 13th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those in need of nourishment; and it is, undoubtedly, the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three hundred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old-fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the ELIZABETHAN ALE most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oct4 3mos

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on liberal terms. jly5 y

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English pickles, sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 3m16au

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, LIQUORS, SEGARS,
LONDON, DUBLIN, PHILADELPHIA,
PORTER and ALE,
SCOTCH, BURTON, and EAST INDIA ALES,
CHAMPAGNE CIDER, in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf corner of Anthony street, New-York.

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

(HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.
my31y

NICHOLAS WALSH.

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER.

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, Editor and Proprietor.
JOHN SAVAGE, Literary Editor.

Three Dollars per Annum. Single Copies Six Cents.
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1856. NO. 29.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXIX.

Editorial.

God Save the Union!

Pennsylvania Election—The Key Stone True.

Re-Opening of the Academy of Music.

Dr. McElheran—The Green above the Red.

Steam to Galway.

Democracy in the Twelfth Ward.

Bishop England on American Slavery.

Nicaragua.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part IV.—By Garland O'Halloran.—Illustrious Irishmen abroad, by "Omega"—Lit. and Art Items.

Correspondence.

Letter of Bishop England on Slavery—Letter from Nicaragua, by M. F. Nagle Letter on Proseletysm by Archbishop MacHale.

Poetry.

My Gentle Boy, by Shine Bradstone—Our Arbor, by Belshazzar—Ma Colleen Dhas Cruthin Na Mbo, by Garryowen.

Miscellaneous.

News from all parts of the world—CounsellorMcCunn in Ireland, and his Speech at a public dinner given to him—The Irish Census of the Slain—Geo. Law enacting a Farce!—Buchanan's Election conceded by all.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a private nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

Knoxville, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, John Mitchel.

Now Ready!

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET,

By Dr. R. R. Madden,

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil.

AND A MEMOIR OF

Thomas Addis Emmet.

with a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo., cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:

Personal Recollections of Cloncurry.
Madden's United Irishmen.
Savage's '98 and '48.
Gilbert's Streets of Dublin.
Fitzpatrick's Life of Cloncurry.
Irish Quarterly Review.
Life of O'Dwyer the Outlaw.
Moore's Letters to Mackenzie.
Life of Robert Holmes. By Savage.
Life of Corbett.
B. P. Binns' Letters.
Grattan's Life. By his Son.
Phillips' Recollections of Curran.
John Binn's Life.
Moore's Life of Lord Edward Fitzgerald.
Macnevin's Pieces of Irish History.
Magoon's American Orators.
Curran's Life. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other Reviews; and Blackwood' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious Spectator, the sparkling Examiner, the judicious Athenæum, the busy and industrious Literary Gazette, the sensible and comprehensive Britannia, the sober and respectable Christian Observer; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the United Service, and with the best articles of the Dublin University, New Monthly, Fraser's, Tait's, Ainsworth's, Hood's and Sporting Magazines, and of Chambers' admirable Journal. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from Punch; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of The Times. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the First Series, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bouud, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

Cambridge, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

New-York, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

Washington, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For Three Dollars a Year, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

Two Copies, Five Dollars a year; Five Copies, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable quarterly in advance.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.
oct18 tf

MONEY SAVED

IN BUYING BOOKS ON THE GIFT PRINCIPLE.

Great Sale of Books at $1 each, Which includes Wolks sold at $1 25.

A GIFT WITH EVERY BLO.

Orders from the country will be sent by Mail or Express, with dispatch.

☞ Catalogues of the Books and Gifts send to any address.

oct18 6t J. S. Andrews, 140 Nassau street, N. Y.

Special Notices.

PRICES REDUCED.

Fine Black Cloth Frock Coats.....$ 8
Fine Black Dress Coats.....$ 8
Fine Brown Frock Coats.....$ 8
Fall Raglans.....$ 8
Cassimere Business Coats.....$3 50 to $ 8
Black Cassimere Pants.....$2 50 to $ 5
Fancy Cassimere Pants.....$1 50 to $ 5
Rich Moire-Antique Silk Vests.....$ 8
Zephyr Cassimere suits.....$ 8
Complete genteel Black Cloth suits.....$12

Evans' Extensive Clothing Warehouse,
oct25 2mos Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton street.

AGENCY OF NICARAGUA, NO. 347 BROADWAY.—The undersigned having been appointed by the Government of Nicaragua General Emigrant Agent in the United States, has established a permanent Agency at 347 Broadway, Room No. 2, up stairs. All persons desirous of obtaining information of any kind concerning Nicaragua, will receive prompt attention by addressing the undersigned, personally or by letter, at the office of the Agent.

The price of passage to Emigrants has been fixed at a very low figure; and for those without means, arrangements have been made with the Nicaragua Emigration Company to advance the price of passage, upon the transfer of a part of the land granted to each emigrant by the government of Nicaragua. This secures to Emigrants a large grant of land and a free passage to Nicaragua.

The splendid steamship TEXAS, will sail from Pier No. 35, foot of Barclay street, North River, for San Juan del Norte, on Friday, the 24th of October, at 3 o'clock, P. M., and all persons desirous of emigrating to that beautiful country, are advised to make early application at the agency.

Alexander C. Lawrence, Gen'l. Emigration Agent of Nicaragua for the United States.
oct25 tf

Special Notices.

Attention!—"Irish News Guard."—The Company meet for drill and admission of members for their first annual Target Excursion, on Tuesday evening of each week at the "Eagle Drill Rooms," corner of Chrystie and Delancey streets. The Guard cordially invite additions to its ranks.

P. J. Wall, Sec'y. E. K. Butler, Captain.

A Card.—Orphan Asylum.—Archbishop Hughes acknowledges the receipt of a note from a distinguished merchant of this city enclosing his check for $200 "towards meeting" (to use his own words) "the more pressing necessity of the Orphan Asylum." It is not to be wondered if the necessity of the orphans, now numbering nearly a thousand, under the care of the Sisters of Charity, should indeed be pressing, having no reliable resources except what the providence of God provides through the charity and kindness of a generous public. In acknowledging the receipt of this liberal donation, the Archbishop almost regrets that he is not at liberty to give the name of the donor.

New-York, Oct. 14, 1856. oct25 1t

The Young Man's Hat.—New Styles of the Cashmerette.—In announcing another importation of this useful, becoming and popular soft Hat, Genin would premise that he has secured the monopoly of the fabric in this market, and that no genuine Cashmerette can be obtained, either by dealers or the public, except from his establishment.

The first consignment of the article—and it was a large one—was sold with a rapidity unexampled in this branch of the Hat trade, and a craving demand for the fabrics have ever since existed, which until now, he has been unable to supply.

The present importation is of superior quality, and embraces a greater diversity of shapes and colors than the last. Such is the immense popularity of this style of Hat in France and England, that the Paris manufacturers are kept almost constantly employed in meeting the home demand, and find it difficult to provide for a Transatlantic market. All the surplus they can at present produce, has been contracted for by the undersigned, and will be forwarded as fast as it accumulates. The first grand furore for the Kossuth Hat was not equal to the rage for this elegant, convenient and durable business sporting and Travelling Hat for young men.

The Cashmerette is a fixed fact in the undress equipment for Young America.

Genin, 214 Broadway,
Opposite St. Paul's church.

N. B.—Country merchants supplied from an assorted stock of one hundred dozen. oct25 1t

A Lady. M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of Irish News Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

☞ PostOffice.—Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer Ericsson, will close at this office on Saturday, the 25th day of October, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office.—Notice.—Change of Hour.—The Eastern Mail, by Steamboat, will, on and after Monday, October 20, close at Three o'clock, P. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says: "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say, that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
sept13 3mos 68 Liberty street, N. Y.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for only One Dollar and Fifty Cents? Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 31 Park Row, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.

N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2.

sept6 3mos Conklin Smith.

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, Sept. 22d, 1856.

To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York:

Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the General Election to be held in this State on the TUESDAY succeeding the FIRST MONDAY OF NOVEMBER NEXT, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Police Justice for the Third Judicial District of the City of New York, composed of the Eighth and Ninth Wards of said city, in the place of Abraham Bogert, Jr., removed.

Also, a Counsel to the Corporation, in the place of Lorenzo B. Shepard, deceased.

Yours respectfully.
N. P. STANTON, Jr., Dep. Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 20th, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET,
o25 Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

Holloway's Pills.—Wherever Civilization has penetrated, these Pills are in demand. The stomach, the lungs, and the intestines, are the organs most assailable by disease in all climates, and upon these, the remedial action of this medicine is rapid, thorough and invariable. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New-York, and No. 244 Strand, London, and by all Druggists, at 25 cents, 62½ cents, and $1 per box.

The Hacking Cough and Soreness of the Chest of the season are immediately relieved by one of DR. ALLCOCK'S India Rubber Porous Plasters. Those who have used them affirm them to be the excelsior of plasters. For local pains of the back, chest or side, caused by a bruise or sprain, they are unrivalled. Sold at 25 cents, at 48 Canal street, Dr. Allcock's wholesale and retail office. oct18 3t

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $825. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,
OLD LINE PACKETS,
Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,

Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my3 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS
ON
BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON, } Vice-Presidents.
HUGH KELLY,

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19 1y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19 1y Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19 1t

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

European News.

The British Mail steamer Persia from Liverpool on the 4th, arrived on the 14th inst.

DISTURBED STATE OF EUROPE.

The subjects of interest in Europe continue to be three,—the pressure upon Naples, the Belgrade boundary, and the question of the Isle of Serpents. To these may be added the question of the Turkish Principalities.

The London Star, of Oct. 3d, has the following paragraph :

Private letters received from Paris confirm the rumor as to the great anxiety felt in all quarters respecting the condition of France, and more particularly in reference to the Emperor whose state of health gives serious cause for alarm. On the Bourse there appear to be successive and heavy falls in the value of the funds, more than sufficient to create alarm and provoke predictions about the future.

Respecting the proposed demonstration against Naples the only reliable information is given by the Nord, of Brussells, in the shape of a letter from Vienna, of date September 26, stating that the Austrian representatives at Paris and London had recieved urgent instructions from their governments to induce the Western Powers to adjourn the execution of their maritime demonstration, and to await the result of the Austrian envoy's, Gen. Martini's, mission to Naples. The letter adds that there is every reason to believe that the Western Powers will show sufficient consideration for Austria, and accede to her request. Rumors were circulated in Paris that the expeditions had been definitely countermanded, but these rumors are premature, if not unfounded.

A Frankfort journal states that Britain has addressed to Russia a second note on the subject of the Isle of Serpents, and that the tone is more peremptory than that of the first note. The journal adds that mutual irritation has been much augmented thereby.

The British Government has recently brought forward a plan, which finds favor with Austria, and, it is said, with France, for the settlement of the Turkish difficulties with Montenegro.

Marshal RANDON has left Algiers to assume the command of the expedition against the Kabyles. Generals YUSEF and RENAUD are acting against the insurgent districts, which are expected speedily to make submission.

Madrid letters are to the 27th ult. A royal decree removes the sequestration from the property of Queen MARIA CHRISTINA. The creation of a Colonial Department is again talked of. All ex-military officers who did not present themselves to the authorities on the 14th July last, as well as those who did present themselves, but who have no property in Madrid, are ordered to quit the capital, and not to approach it nearer than 20 leagues.

All information to hand confirms the supposition that the Austrians will not evacuate the Danubian Principalities until the question of the Bessarabian frontier be definitely settled. At the present moment Austria has some 14,000 men in Wallachia and Moldavia, and is making commissariat contracts for their prolonged stay.

It is reported that a considerable increase of Austrian force in the Roman legations is to take place immediately, in consequence of recent additions to the French force in Rome.

From Greece we learn that Albania is overrun by banditti, and the frontier provinces are in an equally troubled condition, but intelligence from the city of Athens, to the 20th ult., describes the state of things there as calm. The difficulties existing between the French admiral and the Greek Government are adjourned, but not settled.

A telegraphic dispatch from Trieste, anticipatory of the overland Indian mail, brings dates from Calcutta to the 22d, Bombay 29th, Hong Kong 9th, and Shanghae 1st of August.

Preparations were being made at Bombay for a military demonstration in the Persian Gulf. Cholera prevailed in the Punjaub, and at Bombay.

The publication of the Russian Manifesto seems to have created quite an excitement in England, and the relations between the two powers again look squally. The London Times says :—"The doctrines of interference in the affairs of a neighboring State remains just where it was before the passage of the Pruth by the Russian forces and the Congress of Paris. A man may, even violently, enter his neighbor's house which is in flames, although he damages some of his neighbor's property in so doing, to guard his own habitation from harm. That is what France and England might do ; but as we have shown, it is not what they are about to do to Naples. A man may also enter his neighbor's house for the express purpose of stealing his valuables and cutting his throat because he is 'a sick man.' That is what Russia did with respect to Turkey. She interfered, and her interference was checked.

FOUR WEEKS LATER FROM NICARAGUA.

The steamer Texas arrived on Saturday evening from San Juan del Norte, bringing 742 passengers, $155,563 on freight, and California dates to September 20.

The Texas got aground while under the pilot's charge, in the harbor of San Juan, on the 5th instant, and was detained about thirty hours. She was got off by assistance from H. B. M. steam sloop-of-war Victor, Capt. D'Arcy, having been obliged to discharge her passengers and part of her coal. From Cape Florida she met with a succession of heavy N. E. gales, and put into Norfolk for supplies.

In Nicaragua everything was quiet. There had been no trouble upon the Transit route, the San Juan river being high and the route in most excellent condition. The wharf at Virgin Bay is nearly rebuilt, so that the steamers now land their passengers upon it. At San Juan del Sur, the wharf will be completed before the next arrival of passengers from the United States. General Walker was concentrating his forces at Granada, to await an attack from the combined armies of the Central American States. Walker's army now numbers 1,500 Americans, having been joined by Colonels Kewen and Saunders, and 150 recruits by the last San Francisco steamer. The enemy number about 3,000, mostly natives. It was expected that a decisive battle would be fought about the 10th instant. Capt. Peter Shepherd, aged 77 years, died at San Juan del Norte, October 4. He was the oldest white resident of that place, and the original grantee of the famous "Shepherd Grant."

But a few weeks ago the enemy succeeded in placing several hundred men on the ranch of San Jacinto, by carrying them along the unoccupied north side of the Managua lake during the night. They were joined by several men from Chontales, and when the news arrived at Granada the citizens were seized with fear lest they should at once attack the city, San Jacinto being only about thirty miles distant ; but as they remained quiet and a sufficient force being stationed at Tipitapa and Cocos, the only points where they could cross the Estero Panaloya (which connects the Managua Lake and that of Nicaragua), the fears soon subsided. In order to reconnoitre the enemy's position two companies went to San Jacinto, but finding the position very strong, did not attack them. They had a small skirmish, in which they killed some forty or fifty of the enemy, and had one killed and a couple wounded. The General being satisfied that they could do no mischief whatever there, gave orders not to attack, but to keep an eye upon them, and thus San Jacinto would have been left quiet but for the zeal of a few citizens, who, contrary to the advice of General Walker, attacked it. As might be expected, they were repulsed, and suffered some loss. Everyone says that they fought well on both sides, and had it not been for the houses, the enemy, although he outnumbered the volunteers ten times, they would have driven him ingloriously from the field ; in proof of which I may state that they took the walls and one outhouse.

About forty-eight hours afterwards news came, that the enemy had arrived from Leon at last. With what joy did our hearts beat, for now, surely, they were in our hands. But contrary to all expectations we learned—mark what comes,—that Major Waters had evacuated Managua, which was well fortified ; that the troops from Tipitapa had been ordered to fall back upon Massay. First, surprise and fear, then admiration, then general rejoicing. The enemy had left Managua and were going up to Massaya, joined by the troops from San Jacinto. All went according to the President's wishes, and he had stationed 700 men ready to attack them all, in two places, only ten miles from each other—when the New-York steamer brought us some 200 new ones. The news spread like wildfire—900 men to oppose 1,500 Spaniards! There was a spontaneous illumination of the city—the enemy who were near Massaya retreated.

It was a fine evening, that of the 24th of September, when both lake steamers were signalized from the beach. But little commotion took place, as nothing was expected except the arrival of a few horsemen. Not ten minutes after, Geo. Gist, one of the aides-de-camp came up, his horse in a foam and galloping as if striving to outrun the wind itself. He cried aloud to the Americans and natives assembled before headquarters—"203 new ones, boys!" Did you ever see a spark entering powder ? "Hurrah," cried thirty or forty men, and for five minutes there was noise enough to frighten any amount of the enemy, for in five minutes there were some 400 or 500 together there, and the cry was "Still they come."

It was in the night that the "new ones" came up—the "New York Volunteers," as they were called ; and I assure you that they presented a good, healthy and gallant appearance. Everybody was satisfied.

Well, the enemy retreated, and we did not have a fight, as many hoped and had wished. But let the next steamer come, and we shall have one soon.

The following is a list of the killed and wounded in the affair at San Jacinto :

KILLED.

Col. Byron Cole, H. Soule, Wiley Marshall, Isadore Peilson, (killed going up) Wm. H. Drinker, J. H. Jackson, George Cook, Robert Mlligan, Lieut. Reeder, Sherman, Lieut. Hutchins, Corporal Cullum.

MISSING.

Chas. Callahan, R. Wheaton, E. H. Lewis.

WOUNDED.

Lieut. Julius Keel, Dan Flowery, ——Crane, Lieut. Crowell, Capt. W. Lewis, Lieut. Musgrave, J. Rogers, Erasmus Norton, Capt. Will Morris, Chars, Fisher.

By decree, the flag of the republic is changed very materially. It now consists of two blue stripes with a white stripe between them, the latter twice as wide as the former. In the middle of the white stripe is to be a red star with five points.

Major HEISS has been dispatched from Nicaragua as Envoy from that Republic, empowered to ratify the treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation entered into with the United States in June last.

El Nicaraguense, of Sept. 20th, says : At 5 o'clock, P. M., on the evening of Friday, the 19th inst., Second Lieut. JENNINGS ESTELLE suffered the extreme penalty of the law, by being shot on the Plaza, for the murder of second Lieut. CHARLES GORDON, in the guard house, in the city of Granada, while acting as officer of the guard.

RUSSIAN SOLDIERS ON PARADE.

From the Correspondent of the Times.

It was near 1 o'clock when the Emperor made his appearance on the right of the line. He was followed by a very large staff of General officers, by a numerous Etat-Major, and by a suite of foreign officers and strangers who were invited to be present, and who were mounted on horses from the Imperial stables. The Emperor wore the uniform of a General-officer—a helmet with plumes of cocks' feathers, white, yellow, and black ; a dark-green frock-coat, with gold lace collar and cuffs, shoulder-straps, and red riband, and a star and cross on his breast, and scarlet pantaloons, with gold stripe. He rode a horse of great symmetry and grace, which moved with paces as regular as those of a veteran soldier. As his Majesty approached the line she quickened his pace into a gallop, and rode from the proper left to right at full speed, followed by a wavy cloud of plumes, flashing steel, gold and silver, and hazy dust, all down the line, the troops presenting arms, the standards and eagles being lowered, and each regiment cheering as the Emperor passed. Turning up to the left again, the brilliant Staff, rode at an equally rapid pace along the second line, and in like manner passed the front of all the divisions. The cheers were measured, and the sound of so many voices crying out "Long live the Czar," mingled with the strains of the national anthem, had a very fine effect. The Emperor then rode to the front of the marquee, and dropping his sword, saluted the Empress ; his Staff, Aides-de-Camp General, Aides-de-Camp, and the foreign officers placed themselves on the left of the marquee, and the march past began from the right of the line. First there came a squadron of Gendarmerie à Cheval in blue, with white facings, and helmets, mounted on very fine horses. Then came the Circassian escort of the Emperor — the same showy handsome cavaliers, with surcoats of fine chain armour, of whom I spoke in a former letter. The art of manufacturing this very flexible armour is said to be extinct, and most of the head of the breast pieces worn by these wild horsemen are of great antiquity ; there are, indeed, reasons for believing that some of them belong to the time of the Crusades.

The corps of cadets, three battalions strong, next passed, and it was interesting to observe how these young soldiers, consisting for the most part of the sons of the noblest families in Russia, seemed emulous of the bearing and sternness of hardened warriors. Every one is armed and clad and carries his pack like a common soldier ; and in their ranks marched two of the Imperial Princes. On arriving before the Emperor and the marquee in which the Empress was placed, each company of Infantry cheered loudly, and the Circassians, with wild hurrahs, suddenly put their horses into a gallop and dashed past at full speed, checking them as quickly at the other side. The eagles and standards were carried on the right flank of each battalion by non-commissioned officers and a guard, and as they passed every officer and soldier in the crowd saluted them. The Emperor also dropped his sword and raised his hand to his helmet when they came before him. With pointed toes, depressed at a sharp angle to the ground, and measured tread the Guard began to march past and the admiring attention of the vast assembly of spectators. The Preobrajenski Regiment is the senior regiment of the Russian army, and owes its origin to a band of the youthful companions of Peter the Great, while he was as yet a little boy at the village of Preobrajenski, in the neighborhood of Moscow.

The men are on an average six feet and half-an-inch in height, but the effect of their stature is increased by a high casque of black patent leather, with brass plaque-plate and spike, from which waves a flowing crest of black horsehair ; they wear a tunic of dark green with red facings and double breast, white side belts, and white trousers, and they carry a cowhair knapsack, patent leather cartouch-box and brass mountings, and tin canteen. Each man is armed with a short thick sword in addition to his bayonet. The band is richly and fantastically dressed, and in the front of it there marches a giant of a drum-major, upwards of seven feet high. Many of the soldiers are six feet three inches, and they are nearly all stout, well proportioned, and athletic men.

The Pawlovsky, or the Regiment of Paul, presents an appearance which would be grotesque if it were not imposing. All the men — pray do not laugh — have cocked noses. Every soldier with a nez retrousée, who is of the proper height, is sent to this regiment, which was formed by Paul in one of his eccentric freaks, and a very determined pug is eligible if it be accompanied by sunken eyes and high cheek bones. But more than this —the men, clean shaven, like all Russian soldiers, except on the lip, wear their moustaches brushed upwards towards the ears, which gives them a strange and savage aspect. This bizarre and ferocious appearance is increased by the shape of their headdress, which is like a sugar-loaf with one side cut away—an angular section of a cone, with the round side to the front. On this side the shako, or whatever it is, consists of a brass plate ; at the back it is of bright red cloth. From the top there is a curious tuft, or pompon, sticking out horizontally, so as to be parallel with the lower part of the wearer's nose. The brass front is religiously preserved should it have been pierced by a ball, and is worn only by deserving soldiers. Some of them have been perforated in two, three, or four places in the days of Catherine II. and in Suwaroff's campaign, where the regiment greatly distinguished itself, and on the under part of each plate is engraved the name of the soldier who wore it when the ball of the enemy came in such unpleasant proximity to him. Should one of these plates be worn out with age its forms are scrupulously imitated and the hole renewed with the greatest care. The regiment when at the march past always carries bayonets at the charge. Altogether the look of these four thousand and odd men, all of whom are over six feet, is very novel and striking, and if they are half as ugly in the fight as they are on parade they must prove most formidable antagonists. They are dressed like the other regiments of the Guard, with the exception of the helmet. The Marines of the Guard were much admired, but the greatest amount of interest was excited by the battalions of the Militia of the Imperial family, which are raised entirely from the serfs of the Romanoff estates. They are all sharpshooters, and are armed with excellent rifles. Their dress consists of a dark green frock, cut in the old Russian fashion, loose trousers, and boots coming up to the knees, into which the trousers are tucked.

After the Guard came the splendid regiments of the corps of Grenadiers. It should be mentioned that among the finest battalions of the former are the newly organized Chasseurs, armed with a new rifle, and the Sapeurs, who are a well equipped, useful-looking body. The march past of the Guard lasted one hour and seven minutes—that of the regiment of the Grenadier Corps occupied nearly half an hour. Each corps was followed by its field batteries, all brass guns, mounted on the well-known green carriages. Each battery consists of eight guns of the same calibre—namely, one of 12 lb. or 14 lb., as far as one could guess. It is intended to use only one kind of gun for cavalry and infantry, for the Russians are of opinion that the light field guns have been rendered useless by the use of the long-range rifles, and they are adopting the system of artillery introduced by the Emperor Napoleon into the French army. Would that our authorities would open their eyes to this question, and institute some experiments in continuation of those begun in the Crimea ! The horses were splendid, and surprised those Englishmen present who thought that no good quadrupeds of the kind could be seen out of England. The heavy roll of 12 batteries, with all their pomp of spare horses, caissons, &c., and the march of the artillerymen, did not cease till 30 minutes had elapsed, and then, blazing with gold and silver, the Chevalier Guard of the Emperor came up at the head of the 12 regiments of cavalry of the Imperial Guard and of the line.

It is impossible to exaggerate the beauty and condition of some of those regiments, and more particularly was one struck with the appearance of the horses and men of the Hussar regiment of Grodno. The Gardes Cheval, the Grenadiers of the Guard, the mounted Sappers and Pontonniers, the Cuirassiers, the Hussars, and the Lancers, the Cossacks came in for their share of praise, and puzzled one to decide which was the most imposing and effective looking. All the horses were turned out in marching order, with a bag of oats at the saddle, and every third man carried behind him a small copper stable bucket, which fitted to the end of the roll of his great coat or blanket. The Cavalry went past in a front of 65 file. After they had saluted, each squadron wheeled round to the left, and drew up in line, extending more than a mile on the ground on the proper right of the plain ; and now the very finest spectacle one ever saw was presented in a manner as grand as it was startling. When the squadrons had dressed into a splendid line, a certain number of the officers slowly rode out in front, and came towards the line of spectators, till they were within about fifty paces, when they halted, and took up points in a line parallel to that of the cavalry, who were distant from them about 650 yards. Then at a given signal the whole of this tremendous body of Cavalry, uttering loud cheers, and flourishing sabres or couching lances, burst into a gallop, and charged full speed towards the people and the Emperor's cortége.

The effect was overwhelming : the earth seemed to shake under the tramp of 15,000 war horses, — their force seemed sufficient to annihilate whole armies, — they swept over the ground like some prodigious wave or a roller of the great Atlantic—in a second they were close at hand, and it seemed as if nothing mortal could check that glittering flood. The women shrieked and fled, and some of the ruder sex turned tail and sought refuge in the rear of the lines. The alarm was groundless. The horses were well in hand, notwithstanding the great speed at which they advanced, and on arriving at the line of officers the billow of Centaurs was arrested as if by magic, and the front suddenly halted in wonderful order amid the tremendous cheering of the people.

Irish News.

Previous to the sailing of the Persia from Liverpool, a severe storm commenced in the Channel, and continued until Monday. The Wanderer, of Liverpool, was wrecked off Skerries, and the bodies of two men, a woman and a child were picked up. The brig Irene, of Maryport, Thompson master, got on shore a short distance north of the Nannywater, on the Laytown strand. The Irene was laden with timber, consigned to William Boylan, Esq., from New Barracks. All hands were got safely off at Laytown. The Mercury, of Stornaway, William Roberts, master, went ashore nearly opposite the Maiden Tower, inside the Drogheda bar. She was after discharging a cargo of herrings in Drogheda, brought from Wick. To prevent impending destruction, it was thought well to scuttle her. A ship-rigged vessel apparently, went ashore on the bar of Drogheda harbor. A heavy sea was breaking over her on Monday. Two colliers ran foul of each other off Bray head; both vessels went down almost immediately; the crews had barely time to take to their boats, by which means they reached the shore in safety. In the very height of the storm, the Pride of Erin steamer, Capt. Kelly, left Dundalk, on Saturday evening, at ten, and reached Liverpool at two o'clock on Sunday afternoon, when she landed a live cargo of cattle, sheep and pigs, for the markets of Monday. The screw-steamer Shamrock, from Plymouth for Dublin, has put into Penzance, with loss of bowsprit, long-boat, bows badly stove, fore compartment full of water, and other damage, having been in collision on Thursday night off the Longships with a large steamer. Two of the Shamrock's crew are missing, but are supposed to be on board the other steamer. The Faugh a Ballagh, Drogheda steamer, Captain Philip Heaney, which left Liverpool on Friday night, gallantly encountered the fury of the storm, with a large number of passengers on board. Many on board at the time despaired of ever reaching the land; but Captain Heaney, with his well-known intrepidity, brought the steamer safe into the harbor. He states that he has seldom, if ever, witnessed so fierce a sea. He passed the Irishman steamer, which left the quays of Drogheda with a cargo of cattle. The latter, when Captain Heaney saw her, made very little progress, although some eight hours at sea at the time. Apprehensions were felt as to the safety of the Irishman and two other Drogheda boats at sea. A Prussian ship, laden with timber from Quebec, ran aground on the Whitehouse Bank, in Belfast Lough. The Captain and crew escaped to the shore. The schooner Greyhound, 21 days from Lisbon, laden with corkwood, and bound for the Isle of Man, has put into Dublin harbor in distress. Her captain and crew, consisting of five men, secured the best moorings they could, but between two and three o'clock she broke loose, and, impelled by the gale, dashed with great violence against the wall of the New Coal Quay. A steam-boat took off the men and brought the vessel into the Coal Quay Harbor, where she sunk in a very short time. The yacht Erin, five tons, the property of Mr. Scott of Dalkey, broke from her moorings in the Coal Quay Harbor, and having dashed several times against the wall, became a total wreck, and sunk in less than fifteen minutes. The yacht Nautilus, owner, Mr. Walker, of Eccles street, also became a total wreck in the Coal Quay Harbor. A barque of upwards of 700 tons burden, having on board a cargo of timber from America, belonging to Mr. Edwards, of Wicklow, was stranded on the bar.

We regret, says the Limerick Reporter, to record the death of the Dowager Lady O'Brien, mother of the Earl of Inchiquin, which event took place yesterday, the 29th inst., at Dromoland, the seat of the Earl of Inchiquin, county Clare. The Dowager Lady O'Brien enjoyed until within the last three weeks or a month comparative good health; but an accident precipitated the sad event which has caused deep mourning in the distinguished family circle, and wide sympathy among many relatives and friends throughout the United Kingdom. The deceased Lady was daughter and co-heir of William Smith, Esq., and was born in 1774. She married the late Sir Edward O'Brien, of Dromoland, in 1799—and had several children, with the eldest of whom, Lord Inchiquin, she has for many years resided. The estates inherited in her own right as co-heir to William Smith O'Brien, Esq., in the county of Limerick, fall into the possession of William Smith O'Brien, Esq., to whom she was most affectionately attached, and at whose trial in Clonmel in 1848 she remained till its termination, and with whom she constantly remained in Clonmel, and afterwards in Dublin until his exile. Mr. Smith O'Brien only returned to Cahermoyle on Wednesday from a visit to his honored parent.

Woodstock. — Viator, writing to the Waterford News, thus describes a visit recently made by him to Woodstock: "My approach to that earthly paradise was made by a passage over the Welch mountains, where they intervene between Woodstock and Knocktopher. I commenced my ascent to the latter through Derrynahinch, and, having arrived at the summit of the range, I was lost in admiration of the various splendors that lay before me on every side. I must pass by for the present a detail of all that I beheld, and hurry on to the description of the object of my visit, Woodstock, the noble demesne of Colonel Tighe. This splendid residence is situated on an acclivity emerging from the banks of the river Nore, as it sweeps by the ancient town of Innistiogue. It is bounded on every side in such a manner as to render it an almost perfect seclusion from the busy world, and to make it at the same time a most happy garden of thought. The majestic avenue conducts the visitor upwards from Innistiogue to the mansion and pleasure grounds, beneath the shadow of a luxuriant foliage of the various trees that now change their hues and announce the approach of nature's rest for a season. Entering the pleasure grounds, one is stricken by the princely grandeur that reigns throughout and so enchanting are all its parts, that to the eye is introduced a realization of the Eastern beauties of poetic creation."

The Tipperary Free Press reports that on the night of the 27th ult., four persons crossed the Asylum wall at Clonmel, for the purpose of plunder. The watchdog gave the alarm and the watchman immediately challenged them; they set upon him, and after a gallant defence on his part, in which he desperately wounded one of the party, they succeeded in overpowering him —they beat him in such a frightful manner, fracturing his skull and wounding him in several places, that he subsequently died. The wounds inflicted on some of the scoundrels by the brave defence of Ryan, the watchman, led to the apprehension of the entire gang by Constable Goulden, of the Irishtown police.

It is reported in most of the Irish papers that Mr. Michael Joseph Barry, author of "Lays of the War," and for many years Editor of the Southern Reporter, has been appointed Secretary to the New Lunatic Commission, of which Sir Thomas Redington is chairman. The salary is £600 a-year.

A very curious point, says a correspondent of the Tablet, will be raised in respect of the claim of Lord Talbot to the title, which, if it be decided against him, will furnish another example of retributive justice. The proof of the pedigree on on which he founds his claim involves, it is said, the proof of a marriage solemnised in England by a Catholic Priest, which, by the law then in force, was illegal, and, perhaps, for this does not quite follow, void. If it should be pronounced void, it would be curious that a Protestant claimant should lose what would have been his legal rights but for the malice of the dogs of Hell who dared to enact that a marriage solemnized by Holy Church was void.

Parties connected with the Cork Charitable Loan Fund have embezzled a large portion of the funds. The Cork Examiner says, that a large number of the security papers for loans—that is the vouchers for monies advanced, have disappeared, while there is a defalcation in the cash to a very large amount. The books not having been regularly kept, the amount to which this deficiency has reached cannot for the present be ascertained.

The heavy floods which accumulated in the fields and the Boyne having overflowed its banks, led to the destruction of large quantities of corn, which were swept away in the flood, in the neighborhood of Lowth. Some sheep also were swept away in the same neighborhood. A great quantity of corn in sheaves floated down with the stream in the Boyne, and were actively picked up at the quays by poor persons.

On the 18th ult., an altercation arose between two men, named Francis Conolly and Patrick Conolly, in the town of Bundoran, when the latter struck Francis with a knife or dagger on the back of the neck. Death ensued in a few minutes. Conolly has been lodged in Lifford jail to await his trial. We understand, says the Tyrone Constitution, the wretch has been for some time in America, where he has probably accustomed himself to the use of the knife or dagger.

We are happy to see in Limerick, says the Chronicle, one of its distinguished heroes, the Hon. Eyre Massey, eldest son of Lord Clarina, who never was a day absent from the commencement to the termination of the war. He shared in all the dangers of the different battles, and passed many a gloomy night before the walls of Sebastopol. This young and estimable staff officer is crowned with medals, and his bravery was marked by the Emperor of the French, who presented him with the Legion of Honor.

The far-famed mountains of Wicklow are likely to rival in their auriferous products the Australian diggings and the California gold-fields. Another large nugget has been found there by the same parties who were fortunate enough to make a similar discovery a few weeks since. The present one is said to weigh 2lb "of pure, clean gold," and was found in the clay-state rock. The names of the lucky finders, according to a letter in the Freeman's Journal, are John Regan, Garret Kelly, and Michael Byrne.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul, in Carrick, is in a position to continue its labors, and through its agency, relief is afforded to those who otherwise would pine in sorrow and want. The Rev. P. Byrne, Administrator of the parish; the Rev. Dr. Power, and the other curates, along with Dr. O'Ryan, Mr. Daly, Mr. Feehan, and others, are persevering in their endeavors to sustain this excellent society.

The Irish College of Physicians have devised a plan to guard against accidental poisonings which had become numerous from mistakes in dispensing drugs. The precautions are:—1. That angular bottles or vessels, and none others, be employed in the dispensing of all medicines intended for external use. 2. That round bottles or vessels, and none others, be employed in the dispensing of all medicines intended for internal use.

Two convicts on Spike Island, named Edmund Power and Patrick Norris, have been committed to Cork jail for the murder of John Reddy, one of the turnkeys. Power had been reported to the Governor by Reddy for misconduct, and punished, which caused him to commit the offense. The murderous blow was inflicted with a piece of iron, while the turnkey was in the act of closing the cell.

Mr. McDonough, Q. C., has been addressing a public meeting in Carrickfergus with a view of explaining his political views to the electors of that borough whose suffrages he is about to seek. He was in his blandest mood and made a lengthy speech which is praised by the liberal journals of Belfast. It was mere sound, however, and did not touch the real evils which afflict the country.

The tremendous floods in the river Dodder have done much damage to the walls and land at each side of it. The water rose so high at the weir below Rathfarnam bridge as to overflow the mill-pond, and drive a massive wall in upon the river that completely flooded the opposite grounds.

Towards the latter end of last month the Jesuit Fathers, opened a mission in the church of Killaloe, under the direction of the Rev. Fathers Healy, Fortescue, and Roan. For a considerable time before the commencement of the ceremonies, the church was crowded with one of the largest assemblages ever congregated within its walls.

The finale of the Newmarket-on-Fergus elopement is, that Miss Kate Halpin, at the age of fourteen years and four months, was married with the consent of her enraged parent, Mr. John O'Donnell, the lucky swain, receiving £200 as her dowry.

The death of the Rev. Dr. Kirby, the benevolent founder of the Olivemount Institution, near Dublin, for the reclamation of unfortunate females, is reported. He fell a victim to the discharge of the arduous duties which his position imposed.

A committee of gentleman have been organized in the Co. Wexford to collect funds for the erection of a monument to "the fallen heroes" of the Crimea.

The Sisters of Charity, Clonmel, gratefully acknowledge a donation of £3 from Charles Bianconi, Esq., Longfield, for the benefit of the sick poor under their care.

J. A. Hewston, Esq., of Russellstown House, Tipperary, has been appointed agent to the extensive estates in Limerick and Tipperary, of Stafford O'Brien, Esq., Blatherwicke Park, Northamptonshire.

At a meeting held in the new Cathedral, Kilkenny, for the purpose of collecting funds for the completion of the building, the sum of £1,000 was raised upon the spot.

The Very Rev. Dean Dooley, President of Castlenock Seminary, has been on a visit with his relatives in Carrick-on-Suir for some days past.

The Mayo Telegraph informs its readers that a requisition is in progress, inviting George Henry Moore, Esq., M.P. for that county, to a public dinner at Castlebar, during the course of next month, as an humble acknowledgement for his undaunted valor, in defence of the people and their rights in the House of Commons. It is but just, adds the Telegraph, that while Limerick is hailing with cheerfulness the return from exile of her faithful son, William Smith O'Brien, Carlisle listening to the twaddle of her representative, Sir J. Graham, and Liverpool inviting the late Chancellor of the Exchequer, and her quondam representative, the Hon. W. E. Gladstone, that Mayo—independent, patriotic Mayo, though in the opinion of the Earl of Huntington "a den of savages"—should evince her gratitude to her truly patriotic and noble member—to one who had stood firm amid the desertion of friends, on the right and the left, to the cause of Ireland—to one who, like a watchful pilot, has warned the vessel which he is steering, of the fatal breakers ahead.

Professor Dickie, of the Queen's College, Belfast, has delivered, in the Corporation Hall, Derry, the first of his course of lectures on "Zoology," intended primarily for the members of the "Young Men's Literary Association." The spacious hall was absolutely crowded, both in the body of the house and in the gallery, while the utmost attention was manifested throughout the entire assembly. Dr. Dickie announced that the Dublin Association were prepared to give prizes to any of the young men who might choose, at the termination of the course, to undergo a voluntary examination on the subjects taught; while, on his own part, after the termination of each lecture, he himself would willingly devote an extra portion of time to the private instruction of candidates for the honors proposed, in order to prepare them for the required examinations.

An inquiry has been going on in Corporation Hall, Derry, the object being the adjustment of the claims of those whose property will be injured or destroyed by the new line of quays. Dominick M'Causland, Esq., barrister-at-law, presides as assessor, the arbitrators being in each case mutually chosen by the claimants and the Commissioners. A large number of the gentlemen of the long robe are employed, Mr. Joy, Q.C., being the leading counsel for the Commissions. Mr. Fitzgibbon, Q.C., has been brought down specially by one of the claimants; and Messrs. Major, Q.C., Leathem, Carson, Hamilton, and Mehan, of the North-West Bar, are, as we are informed, also engaged in the arbitration. The inquiry is likely to occupy several days.

Samuel M. Greer, Esq., has entertained his tenantry at dinner, at Springvale, his summer residence, Londonderry. After the removal of the cloth, Mr. Greer presented the tenants with the title deeds conferring fee-farm grants of their respective holdings on them. The tenantry, in return, presented Mr. Greer with an address, handsomely engrossed on parchment, expressing their feelings of gratitude to their landlord, for his kind behavior towards them. After spending a pleasant social evening, the tenants left by the late train for Londonderry, greatly pleased with their new and improved positions.

The Jesuit Fathers are holding a mission at Killaloe. They are assisted by about twenty priests from the immediate parish and the neighboring districts. The mission was opened by the Very Rev. Dr. Healy. The Lord Bishop of the Diocese, the Right Rev. Dr. Vaughan; the pastor, the Very Rev. Dr. Power; the Rev. Mr. Connellan, C.C.; the Rev. Mr. Hayes, C. C.; were in attendance. There were Grand High Mass, a most effective sermon, and benediction by the Bishop.

The result of the recent investigation at Tullamore has not yet been officially made known, but it is understood that Mr. Reade, the county inspector, has been permitted to retire on a pension. He will be replaced in the King's County by Mr. Nobart, from Donnegal. Mr. Anderson, sub-inspector, Parsonstown, will be appointed county inspector, vice Reade, and Mr. Anderson will be replaced at Parsonstown by sub-inspector Hill, from Ballickmoyer, Queen's county. Sub-inspector Coe is to be removed from Frankfort.

The inhabitants of Nenagh are greatly incensed at the conduct of the Hon. C. O'Callaghan, Colonel of the North Tipperary Light Infantry, in causing the staff of that regiment to be removed from Nenagh to the village of Clogheen, in the South Riding, and most remote part of the county. Major Dundas has received a reply from Mr. O'Callaghan to the memorial, signed by every party in the town. The reply is, that as far back as July, the Lord Lieutenant had decided that the staff should be quartered in Clogheen, and that he could not interfere with his Excellency's arrangements.

Mr. Richardson has just completed a beautifully elaborate tomb and recumbent statue to the late Lord Ormonde, to be placed over the family vault, in the south transept of the Cathedral Church at Kilkenny. At the head and feet of the effigy are portrait statues of his six children, and in the panellings of the tomb are shields of arms and the collar and order of St. Patrick, divided by beautifully carved foliated spandrels from natural leaves and flowers. At the four angles are angels holding scrolls.

An excursion train has recently left Omagh for Coleraine, from which place parties were sent on to the Giant's Causeway, returning in time for the evening train. The beautiful scenery of Derry, and of the Coleraine line to Magilligan, Downhill, and the adjoining districts, were thus added to the gigantic wonders of the Causeway.

Notices are posted through Clonmel that the household furniture belonging to Mr. James Sadleir, M.P., late of Clonacody House, is to be brought at once under the auctioneer's hammer, in pursuance of an order from the Court of Chancery in O'Flaherty vs. M'Dowall.

The Rev. Dr. Manning, of London, has caused a letter to be addressed to the Dublin Evening Mail, in which he condemns the use of bribes, in food or clothing, for the purpose of religious conversion.

Samuel Maxwell Alexander, Esq., of Newtownlimavady, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Londonderry, on the recommendation of Sir R. A. Ferguson, Bart.

There have been races near Jenkinstown, county Kilkenny, at which there was very fine running, and a large attendance of the people.

The Cork Examiner says that the equinoctial gales have broken with unusual violence this season, and have been accompanied with very heavy rains.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has appointed Colonel George Gore Ousley Higgins, M.P., to be a member of the Loan Fund Board of Ireland.

The following letter has been addressed by the Archbishop of Tuam to the Rev. P. O'Connor, R. C. C. Croghan, Boyle, in forwarding his subscription for the relief of the poor creatures who have been made the victims of landlord oppression, because they resisted the temptations of the proselytising schemers, and adhered with fidelity to their ancient faith :—

TUAM, Sept. 23, 1856.

REV. DEAR SIR :—Your zealous appeal in behalf of the poor and intrepid confessors of Croghan has duly reached me. I lose no time in forwarding my mite to help to alleviate their sufferings and encourage them to perseverance. Allow me to remark that such exhibitions of distempered bigotry in continual conflict with meek and patient religious fortitude, are not confined to your part of the country. Freaks equally cruel and fantastic have been played in other places too, with no other result than to show forth the utter discomfiture of their agents, the fidelity of the persecuted cottiers, and a still firmer attachment to the religion for which they are enduring such miserable persecutions. But whilst we deplore the blindness of those poor bigots who may not know what they are doing, we should not forget that a portion of the blame which is entirely cast upon them may be reasonably shared with different persons. Against those infirmities of which the indulgence becomes dangerous to order, good laws generally provide so as to guard them from the injurious consequence that might result from unrestrained licence. And if the zeal of a proprietor becomes so excited as only to tolerate apostates from their creed on those lands from which the conscientious tenants are evicted it then becomes the duty of the law-makers, and law repealers, and law reformers, to consider seriously the bearing of a law on the public weal which allows a licence so destructive to humanity and religion. As it is not the evil doers alone that sin, but likewise those who consent to their evil doings, it is a serious question whether some of our law-makers who are sent into the great Legislative Council by those very people who are thus aggrieved, may not in some measure, be parties to the inhumanity and religious persecution, of which so many of them are the victims.

And if it be an obvious conclusion that from apathy or some other cause no serious attention has been devoted to rectify the terrible evils that result from such irresponsible and cruel caprice as to send God's creatures adrift upon the world because they refuse to show dishonor to the Mother of God, then the question comes further home beyond those law makers, to those who send them to parliament, who should conscientiously inquire if they had done their duty in endeavoring to have those bad laws annulled, and the religion of the people protected. Should they arrive at the conclusion that those solemn duties were not performed by those to whom they were confided, would not they too be parties to those persecutions if ever again they were to send to the legislature those who could connive at such deep injustice. This is a question which ultimately comes home to us all. You are with a most laudable zeal exerting yourself to check this evil in your district, and applying for subscriptions in favor of those whose courage in defence of their faith is not less noble than that of their brave countrymen who return with barren trophies from the war. Another clergyman makes similar efforts on behalf of his flock equally persecuted. Yet those efforts to stay these great evils must be feeble and inefficient compared with the salutary influence of which a change in the law would be productive. If, then, the freeholders do their duty—if they make their representatives honest by being honest themselves, and by refusing to share in any sordid patronage which may be the price of the neglect of guarding the religion and the homes of the people—you and several other devoted and pious priests will witness the disappearance of this fell spirit from the land, and be spared the painful necessity of soliciting subscriptions to shield your flock from such dire persecutions.

I am, rev. dear sir,
Your faithful servant,
† JOHN, Archbishop of Tuam.

We learn from the Clonmel Chronicle that whilst some boatmen were landing a pleasure party near the Rabbit-Burrow, in Tramore, the tide being unusually far out, they espied some dark object above the water. The men immediately rowed towards it, and found it to be the fluke of a large anchor, which was firmly imbedded in the sand. Having procured the assistance of another boat's crew, they contrived to get around it some strong ropes, which they also secured to the boats, and after considerable exertion, managed to drag the huge anchor from its long resting place and to tow it towards the Lady's Cove, where it was landed. It measured twelve feet in length and nearly eight in breadth, and from the fact of its being greatly corroded and thickly incrusted with rust and sand, and also from its being discovered between the shore and that part of Tramore Bay where the Sea Horse (transport) was lost on the night of the 31st of January, 1816, having a wing of the 59th Regt. on board, and where no large vessel probably ever ventured before, it is firmly conjectured that this anchor belonged to that ill-fated vessel, and is, therefore, viewed as an object of considerable interest. It is a singular fact that on the 31st of January, 1847, during a heavy gale of wind, a sword, encased in a leather scabbard, was cast upon the shore about the place, and although 31 years had elapsed, the name of the maker was perfectly legible upon the blade, and from circumstances which afterwards transpired it was proved to have originally belonged to one of the four officers saved on the melancholy occasion.

The Derry Standard reports the expulsion of a poor woman and her four children, from Durham, England, by the poorlaw authorities, on account of her poverty. In vain the unfortunate creature pleaded that she had lived long enough in Durham to be entitled to remain—in vain she reminded them of the fact that three of the children were born in England—in vain she assured the authorities that she wanted nothing from them, as she was able and willing to support herself and her family, by the labor of her own hands—in vain did her husband's relatives join in the pledge that no parochial assistance would ever be demanded by her from the official charities of the city of Durham. Everything was of no use—the law must be obeyed in all its heartless rigidity. The poor woman was accordingly driven from her little home, and sent back to Derry. She states that she had some furniture, and that she had to leave it behind, not being able to sell it, and an acre of growing potatoes were similarly lost to their unfortunate owner.

The Newry Examiner states that at the general examinations held at the Pontifical College, Rome, on the 4th of September, Mr. George Conroy, son of Nicholas Conroy, Esq., Dromiski, Co. Louth, obtained four first premiums for proficiency in Theology and Sacred Scripture, and a gold medal, a distinction reserved for superior merit only.

At the annual meeting of the proprietors of the Ulster Bank a highly respectable report was furnished.

A number of the admirers of honest journalism, in Belfast, have resolved to mark their repudiation of the temporizing West British servility of many pseudo national journals, as well as their approval of consistency and patriotism, by presenting a testimonial to Mr. Holland, editor of the Ulsterman, a paper which has been a faithful guardian of popular rights in the Northern provinces. The testimonial consists of a beautiful gold watch, manufactured for the occasion by the eminent jeweller and goldsmith, John Donegan, of Dame street, Dublin, whose workings in the precious metals are unapproached by anything produced in Ireland. On the back of the watch is a circular wreath of shamrocks, in green enamel, with a harp in the centre. On the dial-plate is a beautifully engraven Irish landscape, with abbey and round tower in the distance, and in the foreground an Irish harper, with a wolf-dog by his side.

Anticipating the Gazette by a day or two—as on a similar occasion recently—we have, says the Dublin Nation, to announce the consummation of another place-beggar's hopes; another Government tool has got his reward—Michael Judas Barry, who has lately been touching his lyre in the most loyal strains at the Castle gate—having, in fact, "bided his time" as only the author of that sage and poetic advice could—has at length received what he schemed and sung for—he has been appointed Secretary to the Lunacy Commission, of which, we understand, Sir Renegade Redington is, most fittingly, to be Commissioner.

The Kilkenny Moderator states that the Lord Bishop of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, held an ordination in the Cathedral of St. Canice on Sunday last; when three clergymen received Priest's and five gentlemen Deacon's Orders, viz :—Samuel Charles Elgee, A.B.—son of the esteemed rector of Wexford—and John Alexander, A.B., Deacons, for the diocese of Ferns; and Thomas Cooper, A.B., for the diocese of Leighlin. Jonathan Hardinge A.B., under letters Dimissory from the Lord Bishop of Meath. Rev. Thomas Hudson, A.B., and Rev. Thomas Bushe Willis, A.B., for the diocese of Ossory. Rev. Eckersall Nixon, A.B., for the diocese of Leighlin.

Mr. Frederic Pemberton, the locomotive superintendent of the Dublin and Wicklow Railway, has accepted the situation of locomotive superintendent upon the St. Petersburg and Moscow Railway. Mr. Pemberton was formerly locomotive superintendent to the Cork and Bandon, and Waterford and Kilkenny Railways. The officers and servants of the Dublin and Wicklow company are making a handsome subscription, with the view of presenting him with a testimonial of their feelings toward him, and the townspeople of Bray purpose inviting him to a dinner, prior to his departure for Russia.

The Munster News states that the ardent admiration of the people for Smith O'Brien, increases every day, and whether his consent be given or withheld, no event is more probable than the election of William Smith O'Brien, by two, if not three, of the great constituencies of the province of Munster, when the next dissolution of Parliament occurs.

Mrs. Archibald, daughter of O. D. J. Grace, Esq., M.P. for Roscommon, and widow of the late Thomas Archibald, Esq., M.P. for Kildare, has taken the white veil at the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Thurles. The Right Rev. Dr. Brown received the vows of the postulant, and mass was offered up by the Coadjutor Bishop of the diocese, the Right Reverend Dr. Gillooly.

The Lord Lieutenant has approved of the following promotions in the Irish Convict service, upon the recommendation of the Directors: Michael Plunkett, Esq., to the clerkship of the Grangegorman Convict Prison, vice F. Lynch, resigned; Geo. Sproule, Esq., to be trades clerk at the government prisons' stores, vice Plunkett.

At a recent meeting of the Waterford and Tramore Railway Company, it appeared that during the half-year ended 30th June last, there was an increase of £144 in the receipts compared with the corresponding half-year of 1855; £87 of this increase belonged to passenger and £57 to goods traffic. The increase in the number of passengers was 1260.

The Southern Coursing Club were to have met on the 7th of October—the dogs to be drawn at Warner's house at 20 minutes before ten o'clock. The Committee of the Club were determined to continue the rule of not allowing gentlemen mounted to ride after the dogs when coursing, which is attended with considerable danger to pedestrians.

Sir. Robert A. Ferguson, Bart., M. P., Lieutenant of the county of Londonderry, has appointed Henry Rowley Miller, of Moneymore, Esq., an ensign in his county regiment of militia, in room of Robert M'Crea Holmes, Esq., promoted.

The Kilkenny Journal understands that the Celtic Union is preparing for a brilliant display, to atone for its long apparent inaction. The result will shortly appear in the publication of several works of great literary value and national interest.

The new Cathedral of Longford has been consecrated. Eighteen thousand persons assisted at the ceremonies. The sale of tickets produced £800. The Lord Primate, the Most Rev. Drs. Cullen and Macnally, and several other prelates, officiated on the occasion.

The stackyard of Mr. Rankin of Aird, near Stranraer, was recently consumed by fire. The yard contained 20 corn stacks, 7 wheat, and one large hay stack. Only one was saved out of the whole. The loss, it is said, will not amount to less than from £400 to £500.

The Rev. C. P. Meehan, the gifted author of "The Confederation of Kilkenny," who has already written so much and so well, is engaged upon another literary work, the nature of which will shortly be announced.

Professor Magauran, a gentleman well known in the scientific world, is about to deliver a series of Lectures in Kilkenny. He has lectured in Carlow and Clongowes Colleges with great success.

The hand-loom operative weavers of Drogheda have held a meeting, for the purpose of maintaining the just reward of labor, in consequence of the strike of the hands employed at the power-loom weaving in the Green Hills Mill.

Mr. J. H. Greene, late editor of the Sligo Independent, has delivered an interesting lecture on the "Landscape Peculiarities of Ireland," for the Catholic Young Men's Society of St. Joseph's, in one of the spacious school-rooms, Edgar street, Liverpool.

The death of Lord Hardinge, has created a vacancy in the representation of the borough of Downpatrick, by the elevation to the house of Lords of the present member, the Hon. Charles S. Hardinge, now Viscount Hardinge.

The Bishop of Bangor, has completed the triennial visitation of his diocese. He looked hale and hearty, although in the 84th year of his age.

A correspondent of the Carlow Sentinel inquires what became of the body alleged to be that of John Sadleir, which was shipped in the month of Feburary last, in one of the City of Dublin Company's steamers, at the Custom House? It was deposited in a shell, regularly booked and docketed; but since that period no one living can tell, except the parties concerned, what became of it, or where it was interred, as our correspondent affirms that it was never heard of in Thurles, Tipperary, or Clonmel, where inquiries took place subsequently upon the subject, with a view to ascertain the place of burial. That the body found at Hampstead Heath, and interred in a neighboring cemetery, was raised and sent to Ireland is a fact placed beyond doubt; but from the moment of its arrival at the Custom House-quay, all further knowledge of it terminates.

The Rev. Mr. Elder, formerly well and favorably known amongst the citizens of Derry, has delivered a lecture in the school-room of the First Presbyterian Church, for the purpose of explaining the state and prospects of Presbyterianism in New Brunswick, where he has been, during several years, a resident minister. Mr. Elder has been officially deputed to the Free Church of Scotland, and to the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, with the view above stated, and in order to solicit assistance on behalf of the Church in New-Brunswick.

The annual meeting of the proprietors of the Northern Banking Company has been held at the Bank, in Victoria-street Belfast, at which the usual business was transacted. William Coates, Esq., chairman; Charles Murland, Esq., John F. Ferguson, Esq., Robert Patterson, Esq., Michael Andrews, Esq., Henry H. M'Neile, Esq., James Alexander, Esq., were appointed the Managing Committee for the ensuing year.

At Derrynieve, near Kish, in the parish of Drumkeeran, co. Fermanagh, William Crawford, aged 108, recently died. The week before he died he was on the top of a rick of hay, making it up. He was never known to have been ill until an hour before he died. Another man named Jones lives in the same parish, aged 107; and a woman turned 105.

A respectable farmer, named Gunning, while returning from the fair of Drumkeeran, county Leitrim, stopped at a public-house, a short distance from Dunkeeran, where he had some whiskey. On remounting, his saddle slipped out on the animal's withers, turned, and threw him on his head, breaking his neck instantaneously.

THE IRISH CENSUS—THE CENSUS OF THE SLAIN.

From the Dublin Nation.

A few weeks ago, the world beheld one of those wondrous and startling coincidences which some men are satisfied to call chance, but which others more wisely call Providence. We allude to the extraordinary coincidence, by which at the very moment England was engaged in extolling her own superior system of government, her virtues and humanity, there was laid at her door the most awful indictment ever recorded—the slaughter of one million, three hundred and sixty-one thousand and fifty-one human beings, and the expatriation of two million, eighty-seven thousand, four hundred and ninety-four others—in all about three and a half million souls!

Within the land, where this tragedy was enacted, there is grown each year more food than its population could consume; from that country in its agony, in its agony of hunger-death, ships sailed away loaded with the fat of the land. In vain flocks and hand herds, and golden corn, covered the land; a human system chose to regard these things as sent by God for the special purpose to which custom had assigned them, and by no means for the people's use. And so, one million, three hundred and sixty-one thousand and fifty-one persons were condemned to death by hunger in a land full of food, rather than English laws should be altered!

To any one who witnessed the horrors of that dreadful time—who saw the loaded granaries, the ravenous stare of famine-madness in the eyes that glowered upon a bit of horseflesh—who saw every tie of humanity violated, that the rules of political economy might be preserved—who saw the trap coffin ply its trade in Ireland, that the corn merchant might flourish in England—who saw the corn grown and cut down in Ireland shipped to England, to be held there till famine made it worth its weight in gold, and then shipped back to Ireland at usurer's price—to one who witnessed all this, it is hard to deal with this census blue book in blue book style. Eight years have failed to blot these scenes from the memories of those who witnessed them. Here in this country there dwelt a race of poor, ill-used, hardy, contented peasantry. They were warm-hearted, chivalrous and hospitable; faultless they were not; they inherited the slave's vices, the marks which are invariably found on the Bondman, but which disappear in the Freeman. But their virtues were their own, and in no country in the world was greater moral purity, in no other country were the social ties—those foundations of society—more strong and enduring; in no other country on the globe was there a population more worthy of preservation, more capable of becoming a bulwark of civilization, religion and morality. Seeking to palliate the crime, the English journals have taken to slandering the dead—they assert that the slaughter of the peasantry was a blessing, in as much as it rid the earth of cumbering idleness, laziness and vice!

A foreigner reading the English papers would conclude that the Irish famine victims were a race lower than the Hottentots, as lazy as Turks, as immoral as Britons; hating education and improvement, detesting cleanliness, rejecting religion, opposing law; swarming like locusts on the land, their extirpation was deliverance for the country. All this is asserted by the English papers of a people who, in all that sheds lustre on humanity, had not their superiors in the human family.

We know that under any government not desiring the extirpation of our race, the food of Ireland would have fed the people of Ireland; we are not blind to the fact that in other countries, with less cause, man's decrees are altered to accord with the exigencies of a like kind. In our case, it was resolved that the law should take its course; the elemosynary kindness of good Englishmen joined that of the world at large, and charity was bestowed in vain where right was denied. We refuse to blaspheme God's Providence, because we know that many millions of pounds sterling worth of food left Ireland during the famine. We do not hold that the loss of three million souls is a blessing; we hold it to be a calamity, in a moral, social, religious and political point of view. Nor is it true that prosperity has resulted or could result from such a loss. The tranquillity and improvement of this unfortunate exhausted country is the improvement of convalescence—the quietude of one whose veins had been almost drained of life's purple tide, but who begins to feel returning life and strength. England in the day of trial had her choice, to save our people or preserve her "institutions," she made her choice and the Census of the Blue Book tells with what result. Political economy has been preserved intact, but one million, three hundred and sixty-one thousand and fifty-one victims fell; from their shroudless and coffinless graves, they call on the vengeance of civilized Europe to strike and smite the authors of that massacre.

ENGLAND, IRELAND, INDIA, AND ITALY.

From the Dublin Telegraph.

We subjoin the principal part of an article from the Univers, commenting on a reply in the Times, of the 2nd instant, to certain observations in the Verona Gazette on the relative condition of Ireland, India, and Naples. We consider the Univers' article, which we have given almost in its entirety, as the best retort courteous that has yet been given to the Thunderer's flippant and incoherent rejoinder to the temperate but overwhelming arguments of the Gazette. To M. Jules Gondon, the truly gifted writer of the article which we translate from the Univers, the Catholic people of Ireland owe a deep and lasting debt of gratitude, for his uniform advocacy of their cause. It is, perhaps, not so generally known to them as it ought to be, that on every occasion where their religion is assailed by the British press, or their rights denied by the British Government, this, their dauntless champion, wields his powerful pen in their defence. His line of argument is always clear and sound, his conclusions just, and his language, though convincingly forcible, simple in the extreme. We intended at first to give his replication in two parts; but on consideration, we preferred exceeding the ordinary length, rather than injure the force and sequence of the whole, by dividing it into separate portions. After quoting a portion of the Times article to which we have referred, Mr. Jules Gondon says:—

Consult the historians of every country, of every period, and every creed, and they are all unanimous when they narrate the conquest of Ireland, the means by which England there established and maintained her dominion. Are not the laws and statutes of the empire themselves accusing witnesses, whose evidences can never be rejected? Does not every page of the Parliamentary annals form some act of accusation? From the days of the conquest to a period very near our own times, is not the history of Ireland written in blood and tears? Do not her annals present the history of a tyranny the most barbarous that has ever weighed down a nation? Let any one even now run over the pages Augustine Thierry, Gustave de Beaumont, the historians of England, nay, even the records of Parliament, and it will be found that she appears ever in the same character. Can it be possible that a journal calculates so much on the ignorance of its readers as to maintain that England is a stranger to the miseries of Ireland? Has not English policy, during so many centuries, been conformable with a truly implacable fidelity to the views of one of Elizabeth's councillors, who said:—

"If we undertake to bring this country to order and civilization, it will soon acquire power and riches. The inhabitants might then conceive the idea of rendering themselves independent. Our principle should, therefore, be to encourage disorder; for whilst Ireland is rent by its internal dissensions, it will not attempt to separate from the Crown of England."

These counsels were soon acted upon, and Ireland was not long before it became a vast desert. This work of extermination was urged on with such success that the Governor of Ireland, Lord Grey, wrote to the Queen that—

"Her Majesty would soon reign over nothing but ashes and dead bodies."

* * * * * * *

Have the Neapolitan States ever known the misery, poverty and agony of Ireland? Without going back to past ages—without recalling the fearful condition of the people after the conquest, or the religious persecutions, has our generation not been a witness of periodical famines, which exhibited to Europe the horrible picture of the Irish population literally dying of famine? England, it is true, imposed on itself a few sacrifices to soften the rigors of the plague; but Ireland nevertheless saw its sons perish by hundreds of thousands. The unfortunate creatures who died of hunger, were found on the high roads, the byways, the towns and their suburbs.

CHARITY OF THE HOLY SEE TO IRELAND IN HER DISTRESS WHEN NEGLECTED BY ENGLAND.

And why should we not say that if hunger has not made the most frightful ravages, it is because Catholic charity has extended to Ireland its fraternal hand, at the instance of the Sovereign Pontiff. It is the Head of the Church, the Pope, whom it pleases the English to calumniate and to outrage, who by a solemn appeal to Christendom, furnished Ireland with the means of sustaining and saving a portion of her children. What part of Italy has ever been reduced to such misery. Has England at any period had to exercise its charity towards the Roman Neapolitan States?

DIMINUTION OF POPULATION BY FAMINE, DISEASE AND EMIGRATION.

Since the famine years the general condition of Ireland has been ameliorated, and it was with pleasure that we stated this a few days ago; but at what price has this amelioration been purchased? Is it not well known that famine and emigration have, during the last two years, diminished the population of Ireland by no less than TWO MILLIONS of its inhabitants?

The population thus reduced naturally finds it more easy to satisfy its wants. Wages have been raised because hands are wanting. Two millions of the inhabitants have been sacrificed to obtain this assuagement of misery and this commencement of prosperity.

Is there in Italy—is there in the kingdom of Naples—any portion of territory whose inhabitants have been seen thus to fly their mother country, to roam beyond the ocean in quest of a hospitable soil? The Irish emigrate to America to escape the oppression which still to this day, and at the very time we are writing, weighs heavily upon their countrymen. For a considerable portion of the Irish people the concessions made to the ideas of liberty have had no other result than that of letting them die on their native soil, or of constraining them to expatriate themselves. Yes, the Times is right in saying that the King of Naples has not followed towards his subjects the policy of which the sovereigns of England have furnished an example.

ENGLAND ACKNOWLEDGES HER PERSECUTION OF IRELAND.

The Times acknowledges that the Catholics of Ireland have been persecuted! Its readers ought to have been astonished at this avowal; and yet ought they not to feel still more surprised that this journal should cite the discontinuance of persecution as a proof of generosity? What concessions, forsooth, to the ideas of liberty! Who will dare to doubt the liberal sentiments of the British Government? For the last three centuries a religious persecution the most sanguinary and barbarous has raged in Ireland; and all that can be said is, that during the last twenty-five years England no longer acts the cut-throat towards Catholics, their priests are no longer banished, and their children are permitted to receive the education from which they were previously excluded. The cry is no longer heard in England that it is absolutely necessary to exterminate the Irish to man, rather than permit Catholicism to exist there; and yet in all this, no one will admire British generosity!

BRITISH TOLERATION.

The toleration of which the Times boasts is indeed worthy of the admiration which that journal seeks for its country, since Protestantism, essentially and naturally a persecutor, rarely resists its instincts as such when it can abandon itself to them with impunity; but is it, after all, really true that persecution for religion's sake has ceased in Ireland? Would it not, on the contrary, be persisted in, in spite of the progress which liberal ideas have made? Would not the Times be nearer the truth if it said that in proportion as the spirit of liberty has increased in the popular mind persecution has changed its form?

CONTINUANCE OF PERSECUTION IN A NEW FORM—THE PROTESTANT CHURCH.

England no longer sheds Catholic blood in Ireland, but persecution has not ceased. Is the baneful existence of a Protestant Church in a Catholic country not an act of permanent persecution? Does not the Anglican Establishment in Ireland retain possession of the property of the Catholic Church? Are not six millions of Irish Catholics obliged to provide by various taxes for the support of the Protestant clergy? After having thus borne the burden which the State Church has imposed on it, are not Catholics obliged to provide for the wants of their own Church? Have they not to support their bishops, their priests, their religious houses? Have they not to educate their children, and maintain their poor, whilst the State liberally supplies all these wants for a bare million of Protestants, scattered over the country? Active persecution may have been transmuted into legal oppression; but the Catholic finds himself exposed to that persecution face to face in the principal circumstances of life. Whilst a child, if he frequents a public school, he is hindered from making the sign of the cross, and continual attempts are made to substitute the reading of the Protestant Bible in lieu of his Church's prayers.

RESTRICTIONS ON EDUCATION AT THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

As the young grow up, they have to encounter impediments in receiving instruction at certain Establishments. If they are to be educated in the Catholic University, the government will not allow them to take the same degrees that they can obtain on leaving the Protestant Universities.

PARTIALITY IN THE DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICES AND APPOINTMENTS.

Later in life when they wish to take office under any administration, their religion as Catholics will then probably be an obstacle in their way, and if they succeed in surmounting it, they are pretty certain of never rising very high amongst the governmental hierarchy. The best appointments in the State are, even in Ireland, reserved for the English or the Scotch, or for Protestants of some kind or other.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN TRADE AND COMMERCE.

In commerce, the Irish have to contend with the restrictions intended to protect the trade of England, and their natural industry is placed in such circumstances, that it can never enter into competition with England. In the army and the marine, the Irish can hope for little promotion, and, whether on land or sea, they are most frequently denied either chaplain or religious service.

OPPRESSION OF THE TENANTS AND SMALL FARMERS.

What may be said of the position of the small farmer, left wholly under the omnipotent rule of a landlord, to whom the law grants a legitimate right to exercise every iniquity, and every injustice.

ENGLISH TYRANNY EXERCISED TO IRISHMEN AFTER THEIR DEATH.

Finally, it might be supposed at least that the Irishman would find at the moment of death that liberty of which he was deprived when living. No such thing. England has framed laws destined to shackle his will, if he wishes to dispose of his property for the advantage of the Church, which Protestantism has robbed and plundered.

FRUITS OF EMANCIPATION—IRISH VOTES IN PARLIAMENT.

It is true that Irish Catholics "have a place in the legislature"—but why did not the Times add that the Parliamentary representation is managed with such adroitness that the Irish members are always in so great a minority as to prevent their votes from carrying a single measure of utility to their country. O'Connell said in 1844 that after the passing of the Reform Bill Ireland ought to have had from 150 to 175 representatives, and yet it has never been allowed to have more than 105. And how long has Catholic Ireland had a place in this national assembly? And what struggles had it to go through before it obtained this favor? Impartial history will tell us whether Emancipation, limited as it is, was on the part of England owing to a desire to satisfy liberal ideas, or whether it was not wrested from her under the most serious apprehensions, with which O'Connell and his followers, and tatterdemalions, according to the expression of the Times, knew so well how to inspire the Ministry of that day.

THE PRIVILEGE OF IRISH REPRESENTATION IN PARLIAMENT CONTRASTED WITH ITS ADVANTAGES—WHAT THAT PRIVILEGE HAS COST.

Of a share in the national representation, it is true, the Neapolitan is deprived, and he appears contented that public affairs should be carried on without his having to take part in their cares. But what are in reality the great advantages which Ireland derives from the honor of sitting in Parliament, since she cannot contrive to shake off the oppression which overwhelms her? Is it then to be apprehended that if she had not a voice in the councils of the nation, she would, thanks to the liberal and generous spirit of England, be much worse treated than she is? In this point of view she really gained something in 1829. But does she not voluntarily give her seats in Parliament on the condition of seeing an end put to her religious oppressions, and of entering into the full enjoyment of all the liberties which England reserves for itself exclusively?

IRISH SUFFERINGS FAR MORE INTOLERABLE THAN EXCLUSION FROM REPRESENTATION IN NAPLES.

The Neapolitans would certainly not accept the satisfaction of having a national representation at the price of the sufferings and privations which we have just enumerated.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC SITUATIONS AND OFFICES IN NAPLES AND IRELAND—A CONTRAST.

As to the obtaining of public places and situations, every one is admissible to them at Naples who is able to fulfil the conditions regarding capacity, which in England constitutes the most feeble of titles to them. Let Ireland be asked if she is satisfied with the manner in which places are bestowed in the civil administration. The unequal distribution of public offices is, on the contrary, one of the grievances of which she complains most bitterly.

THE CONDITION OF IRELAND NOT TO BE ENVIED BY THE NEAPOLITANS.

Is there, then, in the condition of Ireland—taken altogether, such as we have described it—anything to excite the envy of the Neapolitans? Is it not rather Ireland that envies the condition of the latter? The arrogance of the Times has raised even in Ireland itself a general indignation, and the people would be delighted to consider as serious the ironical invitation addressed to the King of Naples, requesting him to convey, through his ambassador in London, counsels favorable to Ireland.

A ROLAND FOR AN OLIVER IN REPLY TO THE "TIMES."

The argument based on the condition of Ireland in answer to the counsels of amelioration given to the Italian Governments is, therefore, just and correct. England has felt all its force and application, and it is on this account the Times is so wrathful. It is because the contrast shown between the condition of the Italian States and that of Ireland has produced in Europe an echo which galls England, that her journals have sought to give a different turn to public opinion, by directing it to another point, by raising other questions, and by indulging in new recriminations. It is for the purpose of stifling that echo of opinion that the Times is all at once seized with so lively a sympathy for the State exiles of Cayenne, and that it is so deeply affected at their position, and the discipline to which they have been subjected. It is to make us forget Ireland that the Times entertains us with—

"The atrocities which are committed at Spielberg, in the dungeons of Monteau, Verona, Pesth, and the several other fortresses in which cruelties are daily practised at which human nature revolts."

It is to turn our eyes from the oppression of the Irish who, according to the Examiner, are the negroes of England, that the Times pretends to assert that—

"Lombardy is in chains, that Hungary is depopulated, and Bohemia tortured by the most revolting religious persecutions."

And, in fine, that England has not, according to the Times,

"In the middle age of its history, pages so dark as that their horror has not been surpassed by the Austrian Government for some years past."

The tactics of the Times will not, however, gain their object. In spite of its abusive declamation we bring it back to the point at which we set out. That journal would make a better use of its talents, if it seriously called the attention of the English Government to the anomalies and inquiries which shock the observer who studies with impartiality the condition of India and Ireland.

ENTERTAINMENT TO COUNSELLOR McCUNN, OF NEW-YORK.

John H. McCunn, Esq., of New-York, has been entertained at a public dinner at Newtownlimivady, county Derry. The entertainment was attended by a large number of the merchants and other inhabitants of the town, as well as by the leading resident farmers of that part of the country. John McCunn is a native of Myroe, and landed on the shores of America some sixteen years ago, friendless and penniless. Being one of those men who unite with first-class abilities the power of an iron determination, he succeeded in hewing out a path for himself among the citizens of the New World, and is now one of the most affluent barristers practising in the city of his adoption. He has also been elevated to the rank of Colonel in the N. Y. S. Militia. About two months ago he returned to Ireland, on a visit to his aged mother and other relatives, and, in order to place them in a comfortable position, and to provide a summer residence for his own family when visiting Ireland, purchased the beautiful country-seat of Farm-Hill, near Coleraine, formerly in the occupation of Major Title.

The dinner took place in Mercer's Hotel, Newtownlimivady. George Proctor, Esq., Solicitor, occupied the chair. The Vice-Chair was filled by Mr. W. Douglas, merchant, Newtownlimavady.

To the toast of—

"The People—the only legitimate source of power"—

Mr. Hemphill, jun., responded, in an able and eloquent speech, examining the political system of Ireland, and criticising those laws which, in their present state, are felt to operate injuriously on the country.

The Chairman then called on the company to fill bumpers, as he was about to propose the toast of the evening. Newtownlimavady, he said, had produced men, and many of them, who, no matter what might be their profession, were not afraid to stand among their fellows (cheers.) Newtownlimavady was the birthplace of one of the first English judges of the present day, Baron Martin—a man who was an ornament to the British bench (cheers.) Twenty years ago, when Dr. Cooke, the great Presbyterian divine, was addressing an audience, he thought it was an exceedingly good joke, speaking of the ubiquity of the Caledonians, to say that "if they were to travel over the whole globe, and go to the North Pole, they were sure to see a Scotchman sitting astride upon it" (laughter.) It was a curious fact that his language, a few years later, might have been used with almost perfect truth, in regard to the Newtownlimavady men, because, if the worthy divine had been present at the discovery of the North-west Passage, he would have discovered one of our townsmen—certainly not sitting astride of the pole—but walking on the deck of the very vessel in which Commodore McClure accomplished the other hazardous achievement (loud cheers.) Yes, there was scarcely a man in that room who did not recollect the gentleman in question—Dr. Armstrong—(loud cheers)—a Newtownlimavady man. The services of Dr. Armstrong during that celebrated voyage were so highly prized, that those on board, to mark their sense of his kindness and ability, presented him with a magnificent gold watch, valued at ninety guineas. And now they had the honor of another Newtownlimavady man, no less distinguished in his own sphere, in the person of their guest of that evening (loud cheers.) They were all proud to meet Mr. McCunn, to welcome him among his old friends, and to do him honor. Of course it was not in their power to confer on him any material honor in their humble entertainment; but for that their guest did not care, as money—of which he had plenty—(laughter)—could procure it for himself; but he was sure he did value the expression of kind feeling on the part of his old schoolfellows, when, after many a struggle in the race of life, and after having overcome difficulties, which few other men could surmount, he came back to his native land—to tread once more those fields where he had played when a child—to gaze again on the alpine scenery of their mountains—to wander by the river Roe, where, with those early friends whom he now saw around him, he had often "peddled through the burn" (loud applause.) They had met to show him honor—honor where it was due. And, when Mr. McCunn returned to the land of his adoption, the people of that country would know—for the news would be carried to them on the wings of the press, which he was glad to see represented there that evening—the feelings entertained towards him in Ireland (cheers.) His many friends across the Atlantic would thus see the estimation in which he was held by his old companions, as evidenced by the large number of men who had assembled at that banquet—a banquet which was to be taken as a slight endorsement of his moral worth (hear.) He would not detain them longer, but would give—

"The health of John H. McCunn, Esq., of the American Bar, and Colonel of the United States Militia." (The toast was drunk with all the honors, and with the utmost enthusiasm.)

Mr. McCunn, who appeared much moved, then spoke in reply. When nearing his native shores, after a long absence, he had thought he would have been permitted to spend a few days in quiet retirement—to see his old mother and his beloved brothers, and then to pass away again—but it seemed they had it otherwise ordained (hear.) The kind expressions respecting himself which had that night been employed in his presence, would for ever be treasured up in his dearest recollections. They would give him new energy, and would inspirit him to other and greater efforts in a foreign land—they would cheer him on in his path of labor in the far West—they would enable him to accomplish enterprises in his profession which he would never be able to achieve, were it not for the scene he had that night witnessed (cheers.) They would plant in him a new heart, give him new courage, inspire him with fresh energy, confer on him greater self-reliance, and teach him the value of those good wishes which emanated from the ardent depths of the Irish heart (cheers.) They would also teach him to remember his native land—not, indeed, but that he had always, and at all times, fondly recollected her (hear, hear.) Often, in the still hours of the night, when the labors of the day were over, he had sat down to meditate on the land he had left. In spirit he had again visited his birthplace—he had "peddled through the burn," as when a child, and in imagination trod those fields which had so often re-echoed the shouts of their youthful amusements. What, then, had been his feelings when he again beheld those shores which, a few years ago, he had left a poor boy, afterwards thrown in a strange land, naked and penniless, without friends and without money? (cheers.) Thus he had been, when he first landed in America; and what had he done? Why, he had made up his mind to struggle for a position—he had determined that, if his country required a helping hand, he would assist her—he resolved that, if his poor old mother was spared days, she should have a son able and willing to help her (loud cheers.) His mind he made up to accomplish thus much, and they all saw how he had done it (hear, hear, and loud cheers.) But he trusted his race would not end there—it would be too bad if it would (hear, hear.) He was yet a young man—only thirty-two or thirty-three years of age, he believed—and he felt as though he were only beginning the world; and this demonstration on his behalf—the warm feelings they had exhibited, and the kind welcome they had given him—never would be effaced from his memory. They would excite his ambition to greater deeds, and carry him through difficulties which he would have been unable to surmount were it not for their kind approbation that evening (loud cheers.) That night would be long remembered by him. He had many kind friends there, but equally kind hearts were waiting to welcome him on the other side of the water. Not only the dear partner of his life, but others—his friends in business, and those whom he had been unable to assist in a foreign country—would be waiting to receive him with open arms. Well, with what sort of feeling would they welcome him when he appeared before them with those sentiments of approbation by which they had that evening endorsed his conduct—when they were told of the warm hearts and warm hands that had received him in his native country? He surely had spoken truly when he said no moment of his life was to be compared with that (hear.) Rejoiced as he was to meet them there that evening in Newtownlimavady, he was not so vain as to imagine that the demonstration had been made so much in honor of himself as of the principle which he represented—that of firmly holding by whatever a man has undertaken, and going through with his honest determination (cheers.) It was the principle and not the man—and that was the principle which he had always professed. He thought he had almost said enough (no, no.) To know that he had been welcomed as he had been that evening—by his townsmen, by his old schoolfellows, by many gentlemen who were to him utter strangers—how must it cheer the heart of his aged mother in her humble cottage—how must it cheer the heart of his brothers—how would it cheer the hearts of his friends at the other side of the Atlantic? And, if these would feel so deeply, what must be his feelings on the present gratifying occasion? He would detain them no longer, but begged to return them his heartfelt thanks for the honor he had that evening received at their hands. Words could not express the feeling which filled his heart, nor could he adequately convey his sense of the compliment; but, so long as life was extant—so long as the pulse throbbed within his body—so long that hour, with their kind faces and their kind hearts, would he ever remember. (The speaker was loudly cheered on resuming his seat.)

The Chairman then proposed "The American Nation." (Loud cheers.) England boasted herself the asylum of the unfortunate refugees of all nations, and she might do so truthfully and with pride; but what country offered an asylum to the poor exiled Irishman? America—the United States of America. (Hear, hear, and loud cheers.) They owed a deep debt of gratitude to the American nation, for it had for many years been the asylum of the unfortunate Irish refugees, whom oppression and mismanagement had driven from their own shores. Some forty or fifty years ago, when Mr. Sampson, an ancestor of the present Mr. Sampson, agent to the Fishmongers' company—a man respected wherever he was known—was driven from this country, the American Bar, by a vote of their body, received him with open arms as a man and a brother. (Cheers.) Young Emmet was also received by them in the most fraternal manner, and their guest of that evening, who was a member of the same profession, found in the United States, not only an asylum but a position of eminence, and a lasting fortune. (Loud cheers.) They would, therefore, drink—"The American Nation." (Cheers.)

Mr. M'Cunn again rose, and observed that, as he was the only American citizen present, he presumed the task of responding to the toast devolved upon him. (Hear, hear.) Although he was an American citizen, he was also an Irishman. Never could he forget the old land—never could he forget his origin; nor, at the same time, would he forget the country that had taken him in when he was a stranger—that had taken him in her maternal embraces—that had nourished him and cherished him—that had clothed him when he was naked. Forget her!—rather that his arm should wither from the trunk than that he should forget that great, and good, and glorious republic. (Applause.) Again, to his Irish friends America was deeply and especially interesting, for there his countrymen could obtain any eminence in the State to which their talents and industry entitled them. They had their General Jackson. Who was he? The son of an Irishman, but born in the United States. Now, where was there a "fellow" for Jackson? Where was there a man in any land who had stood up for the liberties of his country like Jackson? Where could they find one who battled for the rights of man so nobly as General Jackson? (Cheers.) Then they had their Buchanan—Buchanan, who was now the Democratic candidate for the chief magistracy of the Union. Who was Buchanan? Why, the son of an Irishman, and at the present day his uncle resided in Omagh. (Tremendous cheering.) Yes, the father of Buchanan was a '98 man—he had to fly from his native country; and now his son was nominated for the highest post in the United States of America—that of President. And, what was more, he would get it. Yes, he was certain of it, for he belonged to the rolling Democratic ranks, who, when the struggle came to a crisis, carried everything before them, in their irresistible weight and majesty. (Cheers.) This much he would say—that the United States had their best and most lucrative positions open, ready to receive Irishmen. (Cheers.) Why, therefore, should he forget that land? (Hear, hear.) Why should he forget that land which had brought plenty to a mother's house—that land which, he hoped, would bring plenty to his own house—that land which brought relief to many a hungering heart in this country, when famine and pestilence were abroad in Ireland. Let them look at the progress made by America. Sixty-seven years ago, when the colonists had deemed it necessary to sever the link which bound them to the mother country, the population of the United States was 2,000,000; it was now 32,000,000. (Cheers.) What would be the numbers of her population if she continued to increase in the same ratio for the next fifty years? Where would the little island of Great Britain be by that time? (Laughter.) It was, no doubt, rather an unusual thing for the child to give advice to the parent—(laughter)—but still he would say, "Take good example from America, and remedy those defects which prejudice and class distinctions have imported into your laws." Of course, it was not for him to dictate to that company as to their political duties; yet, as an Irishman it was difficult to say why he should not express his opinion on that point. One of the defects which existed was the imperfection of their electoral system. (Hear, hear.) As independent men, he thought they should urge, with all their might, the adoption of vote by ballot. (Loud cheers.)

"The Clergy" was the next toast. It was well received, and was responded to by the Rev. N. M. Brown. He referred to the social influence of the pulpit, the benefit of clerical ministrations generally, and the flourishing condition of those countries where evangelical religion was taught and practised. It was to be regretted that he was the only member of the clerical body in attandance, but he presumed the absence of his brethren was unavoidable. For his own part, he felt proud to do honor to a man, the more he knew of whom, the more highly he respected. From public report he had known him to be "a man in earnest," but he now knew him as a man of cultivated intellect, indomitable perseverance, and great mental powers. (Cheers.)

The healths of Mr. Patton, Mr. Matthew Cherry, and of Mr. Robert Proctor, having been proposed and acknowledged, the proceedings terminated, several remarkably good songs having very much enhanced the evening's delightful entertainment.

BISHOP ENGLAND ON SOUTHERN SLAVERY.

To the Hon. John Forsyth.

Sir,—Though I have had the honor of an interview with you only once, and that several years since, at Milledgeville, when you were Governor of Georgia, I presume we are sufficiently acquainted, each with the character of the other, to warrant my addressing you not as a stranger. For you personally I have high regard; for your public conduct in many places of trust and honor, I have great respect; the administration in which you hold so prominent a place, has my full confidence; and did I take an active part in politics, it should have my feeble aid.

I have been opposed elsewhere, in the performance of the duties of my spiritual office, by the leading abolitionists of the United States, upon the ground of my being a bishop in the Southern slaveholding states, and for having reproved Mr. O'Connell's assaults upon our planters more than eleven years ago; and my judgment and feeling are now what they were then. Yet I do not consider Mr. O'Connell a brute, though I have often told him that his charges were unwarranted and harsh; nor do I think it would be proper to "stop his wind," though I greatly disapprove of his vituperation of our country; and as regards the anti-slavery folks in Great Britain, you may judge of my attachment to them, and my respect for their love of liberty, when I tell you, that for years, whilst I resided in Ireland under the operation of the persecuting code of Britain, I witnessed the yearly display by the anti-slavery society of the preparation and presentation to parliament of two petitions; one for abolishing the slavery of the negroes in the West Indies, the other for riveting the chains of the white slaves in Ireland, by continuing to enforce the penal laws against the Roman Catholics. Mr. O'Connell, at that period, had, as one of his humble associates in the effort to procure the repeal of those laws, the individual who has the honor to address you at present; and frequently has that individual listened with delight to the exciting eloquence in which Mr. O'Connell portrayed the sanctimonious hypocrisy of a heartless band, that, with words of pity on the lips, with wailing in the tone, with woe upon the visage, and bigotry where the heart should have been, persisted, year succeeding year, in this course, until the Catholic extorted his partial freedom against their will! Mr. O'Connell has not, I hope, more charity than I to forgive those whom God has commanded me to forgive, if I expect pardon for my own sins; but I shall not be found with Mr. O'Connell, banded with men whom I believe to be unchanged in their principles, though not placed in the same circumstances which formerly gave a better opportunity for showing them such as they are.

I have now, sir, reduced our ground of examination to a more narrow space. That space is the letter of the Pope and its circumstances.

I assume you to have insinuated that the letter was written under influences proceeding from the British isles. Upon what do you build this insinuation? It becomes a man in your position, in such a case, to speak out, and to have no reserve. Your position affords ample opportunities of learning the influence at foreign courts. Do you know of any influence which the anti-slavery folks of the British isles had in this case? If you do, you owe it to us of the South in particular to exhibit it, and to let us know its extent, as well as its object.

Now, sir, I am of opinion that British influence has had as little connexion with this letter as Georgian influence had; because, in the first place, this is by no means a novel procedure on the part of the Holy See. The Pope tells us, that he did it from a sense of duty. "We deem that it becomes our pastoral solicitude." And though statesmen, in general, pay very little regard to the declaration of motives in state-papers, you will allow me to say that I have had repeated opportunities of satisfying my own mind as to the personal character of the present supreme Pontiff; and with me, his declaration of a motive is conclusive evidence, and settles my opinion.

The very tenor of the document shows that he acted not in a novel or unusual course, but in perfect accordance with the principle which influenced the body over which he presides, from its very origin, during successive centuries. Why then seek, in British influence, a cause for his conduct on the present occasion?

He mentions similar acts of several of his predecessors; Pius II., in 1462, when Edward IV. was King of England, and the rival houses of York and Lancaster gave to the British people other occupation than that of interfering with the Portuguese and the negroes in Africa; Pope Paul III., who wrote in 1537, succeeded Clement VII., in whose pontificate the kingdom of England was separated from the Holy See; and it will scarcely be asserted that the apostolic letter issued by this Pope, on the 29th of May of that year, was the result of British influence. You will not say that the British, who, in 1639, were regarded as the most virulent opponents of the Holy See, had influence, and used it to procure that Pope Urban VIII. should issue a similar apostolic letter on the 23d of April, exactly the day after Charles I. had cast the lords Brook and Say into prison, and was so perplexed by the Scotch Covenanters. Nor will you venture to assert that it was British influence procured that a similar apostolic letter should be issued by Benedict XIV. in 1741, when, under George II., the execution of the penal laws against Catholics was in full vigor. And though the anti-slavery societies existed in Great Britain and Ireland during the pontificate of Pius VII., in the first portion of the present century, yet were the penal laws, to a considerable extent, also in full vigor; and you scarcely expect us to believe that this society, which presented its annual petition for the persecution of Catholics and the abolition of negro slavery, had great influence with his holiness. Thus, sir, I give you some of the reasons for my opinion that your insinuation against the Pope is wholly without foundation.

I now proceed, sir, to establish another distinction, which I am astonished you could have overlooked. The distinction between the "slave-trade," as prohibited by the United States, and the engagement in which would be a high crime, I believe a felony, in any one of their citizens, and the continuance of "domestic slavery" in any of the States by the authority of that State, and with the existence or regulation of which the government of the United States has no concern whatsoever.

The British Anti-slavery Society, Mr. O'Connell, and the American abolitionists, are equally opposed to both, in all places, and at all times; and they specially wage war upon us at the South for the continuance of this "domestic servitude." The Pope neither mentions nor alludes to this latter in his apostolic letter, which is directed, as were those of his predecessors, solely and exclusively against the former. Yet, sir, you confound his letter with the deeds of the societies; and you use the vague expression, "an apostolic letter on slavery," instead of the precise one, "against being engaged in the slave-trade," which we should expect from so able and experienced a diplomatist, holding for years the high office of Secretary of State of these confederated republics.

I should suppose, sir, that, to a deeply read and experienced statesman, who has been in Italy, Spain, and I believe other parts of Europe, not merely for idle tour-making, but engaged with courts on public business, the precise and fixed meaning of the expression, "traffic in negroes," would be as familiar as "household words," and that Mr. Forsyth would not stand in need of being reminded by me, that, in the language of continental Europe, it is precisely and exclusively what the United States knows as criminal trading in slaves; that it is not at all applicable to what is known amongst us as "domestic slavery." The Roman Catholic Church, which is that of those nations to which I more particularly allude, has always observed this distinction; and it is one as obvious as that which exists between the words "foreign" and "domestic."

The Pope's letter specially describes the traffic, in three places. In one it says "reduced (in remote lands) Indians, negroes and other unfortunate beings, into slavery. This is the first ingredient in the crime, viz: reducing those who were free into slavery, and this in remote lands, which belonged to those so reduced in slavery, and by foreign invaders. The citizens of Georgia have not reduced any such persons into slavery. The letter then designates another class as criminal by becoming accessories, "or the traffic in those who had been made captive, by others who did not hesitate to encourage or profit by such unworthy actions;"—now by the laws of the United States since the year 1808, it would be criminal in one of our citizens to go to Africa and there reduce a negro into slavery, from freedom, or to purchase and ship for a foreign port a negro so enslaved by another, or to introduce him into Georgia or any other place in the United States. This is what is commonly known as the "slave-trade" or "traffic in negroes," and this is precisely what these several Popes reprehended and declared to be unlawful.

In the next place, it is described by an extract from the letters of Pope Urban VIII., in precisely similar terms, who reduce into slavery, evidently contemplating persons previously free, and then respecting the same persons; that is, those who had been reduced into slavery; buy, sell, exchange, or give them away; separate them from their wives and children; the next expressions could not be, by any effort of ingenuity, used respecting "domestic slaves," such as are in our states, despoil them of their goods, or possessions, because in the canon law as well as in the civil law, the mancipium or "domestic slave," had no property of possession, except what was permitted to him as a peculium or allowance. Carry or send them to other regions, which is incompatible with "domestic slavery," but precisely the character of the "slave-trade," or in any manner deprive them of their liberty, which the domestic slave never had, and of which he could not be deprived; retain them, that is, in servitude, &c.

I now proceed to show from the enacting words, if I may use the expression, of the apostolical letter of his holiness Pope Gregory XVI. that only the "slave-trade" is condemned.

It admonishes and conjures earnestly in the Lord—1. Not to molest unjustly. 2. Not to despoil of their goods. 3. Not to reduce into slavery, negroes or any other race of men. 4. Not to render countenance or assistance to those guilty of such practices. 5. Not to be engaged in the sale or purchase, in the inhuman commerce by which negroes are sometimes devoted to intolerable labor. That this commerce is what our laws condemn as the "slave-trade," and not that sale and purchase which must frequently occur in domestic slavery, is manifest from the consequence which is described, following as a matter of course from the traffic, "through the love of gain held out to the first possessors of the negroes," that is the African chieftains; "dissensions and perpetual wars are fomented throughout the regions which they inhabit,"—and upon all these considerations he prohibits the teaching that "this traffic in negroes," that is, the "slave-trade" is lawful.

Thus, sir, it is manifest that you would be equally justified in placing our federal government, under the administration of Mr. Van Buren and yourself, in company with British and American abolitionists, as you were in placing his holiness Pope Gregory XVI. there. It is not a little strange, sir, that whilst you exhibit him, and by implication me and my flock, as allied with the abolitionists,—the abolitionists themselves, by a select division to whom it was entrusted in New York, drew up a petition which they forwarded to Hayti for signatures, and which was presented to President Boyer, by the general of division at Port au Prince, requesting that no communication should be held with me as envoy from this same Pope Gregory XVI., upon the ground that he was not averse to southern slavery, and that I was an enemy to Daniel O'Connell, and to negroes? Yes, sir, in a conversation which I held with President Boyer, he acknowledged to me the receipt of the petition, when, to spare him the trouble of an examination to discover my sentiments, I informed him that I was aware of the origin and history of the document, and had requested the interview for the purpose of giving the necessary explanation. He has more common sense than most of the abolitionists, and makes more just allowance for the position of the southern planters than do their fellow citizens; and he had the candor and honor to declare that though he must depracate slavery in every shape, yet from what I told him, he was happy to feel that there were great humanity and very creditable feelings of kindness to their slaves in the great bulk of the southern proprietors, and, he added, that he would be devoid of every principle of honor were he to deny the kindness and affection of many of the Spanish proprietors to their slaves in the eastern part of Hayti, previous to the revolution.

In my next, sir, I shall give additional reasons to show that our holy father, Pope Gregory XVI., is not the associate of the abolitionists, and that the Catholics of the South should not be rendered objects of suspicion to their fellow-citizens.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Respectfully.

† John, Bishop of Charleston.

Answers to Correspondents.

ACCIDENT.

Our readers will, we trust, kindly excuse the delay in the issue and some confusion in the advertisements of this week's News. It was caused by an accident, which, just as we were going to press, broke up all our printers's work for days before, and involves much expense and trouble. While lowering the second form from the composing-room, the machinery used for that purpose gave way, precipitating types, chase, leads, rules, &c., down four stories, and reducing all to a lugubrious mass of mince "pi."

We have been agreeably surprised and suddenly favored with a communication which accompanies a paragraph or two from a letter written by Benjamin Franklin, to a friend of his in Ireland, from which, for the first time, we learn that America would have assisted Ireland, as France assisted America, had there been (at the time the letter was written,) an attempt made to disenthral Ireland from Great Britain. The letter is dated from Versailles, Oct. 4th, 1778.

"We hope (writes Franklin,) that the political Quixottes of Great Britain will no longer be able to disturb the peace and happiness of mankind, and which Providence has permitted, perhaps to show the monstrous abuse of power; yet, lost to all public virtue as they are, we wish they may turn from their wickedness and live—and doubt not the noble and determined efforts of America will meet the full and unanimous approbation of every virtuous Briton, when they shall be able to distinguish between the mad pursuits of Government, and the true interest of the People. But as for you, our dear and good friends of Ireland, we most cordially recommend to you to continue peaceable and quiet in every situation of your affairs, and endeavor to supply by mutual good-will the defects of administration; but if the Government whom you at this time acknowledge, does not, in conformity with her own true interest, take off and remove every restraint on your trade, commerce and manufactures, I am charged to assure you that means will be found to establish your freedom in this respect, in the fullest and amplest manner; and as it is the ardent wish of America to promote—so far as her other engagements will permit—a reciprocal commercial interest with you, I am to assure you they will seek every means to establish and extend it; and it has given me the most sensible pleasure to have those instructions committed to my care, as I have ever retained the most perfect good-will and esteem for the people of Ireland."

John Knox.—You are perfectly correct. In 1774 Washington proposed "to settle his lands on the Ohio and Kenhawe with (as he said himself,) Palatines, or people from Ireland and Scotland." And for their encouragement, he writes—

"It may not be amiss further to observe, that I see no prospect of the people being restrained in the smallest degree, either in their civil or religious principles, which I take notice of, because these are privileges which mankind are solicitous to enjoy, and upon which emigrants must be anxious to be informed."

See Washington's Writings, p. 886. Afterwards, when President of the United States, he proposed to give up the culture of his own farms around Mount Vernon, and settle them with "good farmers, from Europe." This proposal is to be found in his letter to Arthur Young, dated Philadelphia, December 12th, 1793. From all of which, and from a great deal more which could be brought to bear upon the point, it is perfectly clear that Washington, so far from regarding "foreigners" with distrust, considered them worthy of the firmest confidence and most generous encouragement.

From a friend in Mount Lebanon, Bienville Parish, Louisiana, we have received a very complimentary and interesting letter, from which, with sincere pleasure, we give the following extract:—

"It is probably known to you that Joseph George Cormick was the compatriot and fellow-sufferer of the late Dr. McNevin. They had been confined together in Kilmainham, and subsequently at Fort George. When liberated, my uncle George came to Augusta, Georgia, where my father, John Cormick, (who had been equally implicated in the troubles of 1798, and fortunately escaped,) was there settled, in commercial business. Joseph died young, and his compatriots erected to him a neat and appropriate monument, for which his friend, Dr. McNevin, furnished the accompanying inscription. That monument now adorns the Cemetery, at Augusta, and by its chaste and modest beauty of design, contrasts favorably with more ambitious structures. It may interest many of your readers to see in the columns of the News these lines, alike honorable to the dead, and to the undecaying friendship of the survivor."

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF

JOSEPH GEORGE CORMICK.

Of firmest soul, opposed to guilty power,
Of gentlest manners in the social hour,
Was all his useful worth too weak to save
The valiant Cormick from an early grave?
In vain it proved, to guard that heart sincere,
By honor hallowed, and to freedom dear—
Else this cold marble might not now disclose
Virtue's short span, and friendship's lasting woes.

WILLIAM JAMES M'NEVIN.

Slow and Easy.—You have adopted the wrong motto. To be behind time is to be behind the age. No merit can compensate for slowness in these days. Young Rapids,—"keep moving,"—"Push on," is the spirit of the life about us. Every nerve is strained to be "up to time," in the head-to-head struggle to get foremost. The sharp ring of the merchant's nervous tread, startles the composure of the unaccustomed ear. At the 'go ahead' of the porter's energetic accent, one flies on one's way as if the houses were falling, while the tortuous interweaving of carriage and omnibus, leaves one scarce a nerve. The bank-clerk counting over a bundle of notes, with an electric knack that is like a feat of legerdemain. The cars on the city roads do not stop for men to get on and off, while at the ferry, every passenger manages to leave the boat before she is secured. We all lend ourselves to this haste and rush. If you cannot come into the spirit of the times, you can hardly hope for success, and may conclude that you came into the world a hundred years too late.

In regard to Smock Alley. The Wellington Testimonial in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, (O'Connell christened it "the over-grown mile-stone,") was erected by public subscription. It cost a $100,000. A Mr. R. Smirke designed the monstrosity.

The interesting letter with which we have been favored by B. O. R.—apropos to our remarks upon Robert Emmet, and the outrage offered him the other evening—will appear in our next issue. No delay—not a day's—would have occurred, had it come to hand time enough for publication.

The Personal Recollections are discontinued until the Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly have been brought to a close.

DECLINED.—"Leah Cim," your verses to Mary, are in the most antique order of exploded similes. For instance—

"My Mary's eyes are brighter
Than the moon's silvery ray;
My Mary's voice is sweeter
Than the seraph's heavenly lay."

JAMES LYNCH, Baltimore.—We have attentively read your communication. The nature of the subject has irritated you beyond the limits of publication.

Peter Sinnot. Perfectly right. There is a queer, gloomy, incomprehensible ruin, just at the junction of the Suir and Barrow, below Dunbrody, called Buttermilk Castle. Popular tradition informs us that it was built by the Monks of Dunbrody, not only as a toll-house, but as a curing establishment for the fish taken for the use of the Abbey.

☞ JOB PRINTING NEATLY AND EXPEDITIOUSLY executed at the News Office, 29 Ann street, N. Y.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1856.

GOD SAVE THE UNION!

"To the efficiency and permanency of your Union, a Government for the whole is indispensable."—Washington's letter to the Governors of the several States.

The Election for Presidential Electors, in November next, will determine, for good or evil, the political problems which for some time past have been discussed before the people. Considering the interests of the Union—its strength, consolidation, and future integrity—to be seriously involved in the result, we devote our columns to the examination of the prominent question to be decided.

The Preamble to the Constitution of the United States declares, that:—

"We, the People of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

The expression of popular opinion at the present time, as to what shall be the policy by which the affairs of the Government are hereafter to be conducted, is seriously to determine whether or not "justice shall be done, the public tranquility preserved, the general welfare promoted."

A faction, called an Abolition Party, located chiefly in Massachusetts, were long regarded as a band of fanatics, blind to the dictates of reason, but recklessly bent on creating excitements on the subject of Slavery. For many years they enjoyed but a feeble existence. They were derided and despised, looked on as numerically weak, and morally wicked.

They are now strong and stupendous in their might, seeking in the name of "Republicans," or "North Americans," to trample on the rights of nearly one half the States of the Union.

The present contest is between them and the Democratic party. Between James Buchanan and John C. Fremont. Between union and fraternity with the South, or a selfish isolation of political principles and power for the North.

The party upholding Millard Fillmore, the American or Know-Nothing candidate, is too restricted in its views—too narrow in its limits, to deserve any mention in the impending struggle for great national interests. It is entirely out of the struggle.

The question which now agitates this Republic, is one which exposes the Southern States to obloquy, unmerited and measureless. In the Territories owned by the United States no Southern man can be supposed to emigrate without the implements of field labor and the hands that are to use them. The Republican party of the North endeavors to prohibit the introduction of this labor into the Territories because it is Slave labor. Although the Territories are the common property of the Union, it seeks to exclude the Slave-labor of the South, for the purpose of preventing, as it alleges, the extension of Slavery, and preserving the soil for Free labor. It seeks to do this, declaring that "It is the right and duty of Congress to prohibit Slavery in the Territories."

On the occasion of the acquisition of territory from Mexico, the South proposed to the North to carry the line of the Missouri Compromise—the line of 36.30—westward to the Pacific ocean, although it gave them but three degrees and a-half on the Pacific coast, leaving to the North the whole available portion of it, to the extent of twelve and a-half degrees. This measure passed the Senate, but was voted down in the House by a Northern majority.

Here, where an opportunity was afforded to test the sincerity of the North on a question of such vital importance to the welfare of the country, it refused to be governed by the principle which had been established by the Missouri Compromise. It declared itself in favor of non-intervention—of permitting the inhabitants of a Territory to settle the question for themselves. This last measure was adopted by the Compromise and Adjustment Acts of 1850 and '51, by which Congress agreed not to interfere with Slavery in the Territories. It was also re-affirmed by the joint action of North and South, in 1854, constituting the fundamental principles of the Kansas and Nebraska bill.

In all these measures, the majority in Congress were with the North. It has adopted these measures, and rejected the proposition of the South, that the matter in controversy should be settled by the Supreme Court of the United States,—the only earthly tribunal competent to decide the question. If the Supreme Court had been organized for no other purpose as a distinct branch of the government than for this alone, it would seem to have amply fulfilled the object of its creation.

This proposal, embodied in a bill known as the Clayton Compromise, passed the Senate, but was voted down by a Northern majority in the House, in the same manner as had been the proposal of the South, to extend the line of the Missouri Compromise to the Pacific.

The refusal of the North to submit to this decision, was said to be owing to the objection that it was unsafe to commit such a question to the decision of Judges who by a majority of one, were natives of the South.

What could the Southern States have done, which they have not done, to settle this vexed question?

What would the North have? It would have the Territories, wholly and exclusively to itself. Can it enforce such a wish with propriety and justice?

It is a matter of no moment whether or not Congress has the right to prohibit slavery in the Territories—the question being would it be expedient and proper so to do.

The South would now regard any sectional line of demarkation as a stigma and a stain—while the principle of non-intervention by Congress, would seem best adapted to reconcile conflicting parties with the duties both owe to the Union.

Let not Congress use its power either way. If it be sovereign to prohibit, it is alike sovereign to plant Slavery in the Territories. It has already decided, after mature consideration of the subject, that the question of Free or Slave labor in a Territory, should be left to the settlers themselves.

The disturbances that have arisen in Kansas, were the natural result of jealous rivalries, brought into violent antagonism, where each party considered it a sacred duty to resist and overthrow the intolerance of the other. These disturbances have passed away—order has been restored—the peaceful settlement of the Territory continues without interruption. Its organization as a State, will be the result of its own legitimate choice.

To those who have any sympathy with the Republican, or Abolition party, we address ourselves, and implore them to consider well the consequences of casting a vote for John C. Fremont. If he be elected Chief Magistrate of this Union, as the exponent of the principles of his party, the Southern States of this confederacy have every reason to consider such Election a positive declaration of war against themselves.

The accusation of the North that the cry of disunion comes from the South, is a shallow and heartless pretence, to disguise the truth and hide the deformity of its own aggressive acts.

The South stands but on the defensive. It repels by every legitimate means the assaults of the North. But when the Constitution is disregarded—a "higher law" appealed to, justice subverted, and in the language of Washington, "the cement of the confederation annihilated,"—then the voice which says there is disunion, is not a false one, but a real outcry of alarm, which should bring dismay and terror to every true heart within the Union.

PENNSYLVANIA ELECTION—THE KEY STONE TRUE.

Buchanan is elected. Pennsylvania, from her multitudinous counties, rolls out a Democratic majority. The majority, at the very least, is five thousand. Small as it is, it decides the Presidential contest. Small as it is, it steadies the timid and confirms the bold in their most exulting hopes. Small as it is, it paralyzes the vicious propagandism of the Seditionists congregated under the banner of Fremont—repels them, as it were, from the very heart of this great Union, and sends them shivering back to the congenial coldness of Cape Cod and Vermont.

Proud thanks, the most generous gratitude, trumpet-tongued jubilee, and the glory of Triumphal Arches and Mural Crowns to the soldiers of the Key Stone State!

Most righteously have the Conscript Fathers—men matured in the service of the Republic—youths, noble in heart and genius—merchants who from their dusky Counting Houses send forth white-robed Missionaries to every corner of the world—the myriad laborers who with trowel and axe, with plough and crow-bar multiply the power and fruitfulness of this Commonwealth—sailors from the top-mast, swarthy-faced sea-captains who have seen the dull sepulchres or busy marts of every clime—subterranean toilers in the black caverns underlying the Alleghany and Monongahela, springing up with blazing torch and thrilling cheer—most righteously have these millions, of every craft and calling, made the earth and heavens tell the unconquerable vitality of the Democratic heart.

For a Life-Guard it has been. Not Cocles on the cloven bridge; not Scavola, with his arm plunged elbow-deep into the basin of the burning tripod; not Curtius upon the brink of that fatal chasm in the Forum; not the Spartans in Thermopylæ; not Tell, winging the arrow into the heart of Gessler, and so saving from the Demonism of Despotism the white sublimities of his native Switzerland; not Arnold Delwinkelredt, burying in his heart the collected spears of the Austrian chivalry, and with a last grand cry, which still echoes through the world, commending his children to the charity, and his name to the proud custody of mankind; not the Irish soldier, standing on the bridge of Athlone and three times beating back the Williamite battalions, and pouring his blood into the Shannon, to deepen the red fosse between the native Irish and the invaders of the Reformation; not any of these, or a thousand other soldiers or sentinels of Freedom with which we have been accustomed to familiarize ourselves from childhood, have done the service which Pennsylvania has within this week done, and which is the text of our sincere but insufficient praise.

All over the Union, with the Democratic party—the enormous Phalanx—the countless compact crowd—which supports Buchanan for the Presidential chair—supports him with dauntless nerve, proud brow, and a beckoning hand, which like a sword in the sunlight flashes prophetically on the sea where the enemies of the Union in a rushing hurricane of loyalty are destined to be swept down—all over the Union, with the Democracy there is joy, boundless and irrepressible, for the victory won by Pennsylvania.

On Tuesday last, headed by Dodworth's magnificent Band—a band which might lead any army over Zaharas or Alps to triumph,—the young men of this city—the bright, bold Democratic youths of this grand city—with fleets and warehouses in the shade of which Carthage dwindles into a speck of fiction,—these manly fellows, amid the benedictions and the exulting ecstasies of New-York, went forth to welcome, on the very spot from which the British enemy in a spasm of affright, set sail—the Key Stone Club—the Prætorian Cohort—the impregnable and impenetrable Life Guard of the American Democracy.

Over this election there bursts no exaggerative joy. Over this election there is no reckless superfluity of eulogistic adjectives. Over this victory in Pennsylvania there are triumphal arches—the flowers decorating which no political breeze blowing from the icy caves of Abolitionism in November shall blight. It is a victory which decides the destiny of this Union. Pennsylvania has gone the Democratic ticket. Buchanan is elected!

RE-OPENING OF THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Maretzek, descending from his Orchestral throne, having uttered his words of subdued scorn against the proprietors of the Temple in front of the gorgeous veil of which he had so long waved his magic wand, was a spectacle that in the days of the Lesbian lyre would have moved the gods of Greece. Even Pluto would have wept. As for the daughters of Mnesnosyne, covering their faces with their wings and palm-branches, they would have overflowed the fountains of Helicon and Pindus with bright tears of exquisite sorrow.

The Herald, has with a dramatic pencil—a pencil such as Martin or Danby only could have used—given us the violent contrasts which the roseate dawn and grim eclipse of the Opera instantaneously effected in the social sphere. With this rapid and vigorous master of the pencil, the sudden obscuration of the Opera is Paradise Lost without the hope of Paradise Regained.

From the drooping willows and melancholy dripple of the fish-pond in Washington Square, to the Egyptian stolidity of the reservoir on Murray Hill, and all through the shadowy seclusions of brown stone branching off from the main limb—Fifth Avenue—up and down which the richest blood of this city flows—there have been countless sighs from loosened corsets, and in the midst of crumpled wreaths, carnation-colored saucers, and other beautiful but mysterious ware, dejected Queens of Proscenium and Private boxes have sat in dishevelled toilette. Ever since the dark catastrophe, the Union Club and Phelan's palatial billiard-room, at the corner of Tenth street, and close under the chaste shadow of Grace Church, and other less luxurious resorts, have been crowded by the disconsolate moustached worshippers of the Muses. Ever since, creamy Cashmere cloaks, Andalusian fans of pearly lustre and rustling fibre, braided fillets and ivory lorgnettes, are at a discount. Bouquets have withered by the bushel, and the slim artist who in the saloons of the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan has heretofore made for himself a bed of clover by their sale, dwindles into the slenderest stem. Bouquet John is, indeed, a melancholy Jacques. Beck, Bulpin and Stewart stagnate in a dead sea of unmarketable novelties.

The lordliest bazaars which tempted the budding loveliness, the wealth, the wrinkled dowagerships, or the desperate aspirations of the successful vulgar, have turned off their gas, shelved their shawls, swept away their ribbons with the leaves that have fallen on the door-steps, and reconcile themselves apparently to sackcloth, ebony, and ashes. In a word, Broadway on both sides is one great Maison de deuil—one long sunless vista of sable bombazine and crape—one dismal swamp—one dreary prolongation, from Union Square to Bowling-Green, of the rival houses of Weed and Meyer.

Suddenly, right through and over all this gloom, there explodes a glory which renews the city. Apollo, in the guise of Caliban, descends upon the stage, to which Max Maretzek, crowned with bays—a Chorophean Coriolanus—disdainfully bid farewell. Silk skirts, velvet flounces, powder-puffs and rouge-pots—all the varied glories of the Fall revive. There is a breezy gaiety, a rustling joy, a wavy brilliancy of flowers and feathers, a triumphant glow playing on a thousand cheeks, a sprightly tripping of sandalled fairy feet, which gladdens our heart, eye, and ear, with the sounds and hues of a festive season, brighter than that which filled with beauty the pure depths of Mahopac, or fringed the cliffs of Newport.

George Law has taken the place of Amodio before the Academic footlights. He made his debut there last week, in peach-colored hose, bronzed breast-plate, bright yellow buskins, and a Continental hat. Shouldering a hod, he went through his difficult role like a thousand of bricks.

The particulars will be found in our City News, furnished by the expert pencilman of the Herald.

DR. McELEHERAN—THE GREEN ABOVE THE RED.

With very great pleasure we direct the attention of our readers to the announcement of this distinguished gentleman's lecture before the Catholic Library Association. The subject—the Physiognomy of the White Races in America—will be deeply interesting, and in this day, in the midst of so much hubbub about the Anglo-Saxonism of the American Republic, will, no doubt, serve to remove many vulgar impressions which prevail to the prejudice of the Celtic race. In scientific knowledge of the Human Family, Dr. McEleheran has no superior. In Ireland—indeed, we fearlessly say, in Europe—he stood high amongst the highest notables who there illustrate the scientific world, elevating it into an Aristocracy, the grand tone and title of which the most reckless leveller, from the Seine to the Vistula, will reverently recognize.

The Irish public cannot forget—impossible they could—the demolition the London Times suffered from the bold, unerring, skillful hand of John McEleheran. Until he faced up and grappled with the Thunderer, the Thunderer, in his abuse of the Irish race, their morals and their intellect, had full swing. But this young David—armed with a handful of facts—with a sure hand, a keen eye, and a fearless heart—going forth in the name and for the glory of his people—brought the Goliah of the European Press upon his back. McEleheran did what O'Connell, with all his ruthless rhetoric and merciless profusion of nicknames, was powerless to do. He silenced the cowardly but gigantic slanderer of the faith, the blood, and genius of old Ireland.

For which reason, as for many others, there should be an enthusiastic audience crowding the Tabernacle, on Thursday evening, the 23rd of October. We have no doubt but there will. Irrespective of the merits of the lecturer, the spirited and generous efforts made by the officers of the Catholic Library Association to ensure a course of intellectual entertainments to the citizens of New-York, will meet in overflowing houses their just reward.

STEAM FROM GALWAY.

We are delighted to find that the letters of our friends, O'Neill and Harvey, of Boston, regarding this project—letters which appeared in the News a month since—have been copied into most of the Irish papers, and have elicited from them the heartiest commendation and assurances of sympathy with the noble wishes those letters intelligently and with such forcible earnestness expressed. Direct steam communication with America appears to be the question which excites at this day the most ardent anxieties and most effective unanimity of opinion amongst the influential men of Ireland. Politics seem to have fallen there to the lowest tide-mark. Repeal is not two inches deep. Tenant-Right is but a straw upon a very thin and obscure rivulet. Dr. Cahill, in his elephantine letters, vainly labors to resucitate the ancient antipathies which the Protestant Church-Establishment provoked. These antipathies have lost their sting, and like a thistle in September, are more disposed to be soft and downy than otherwise. On the whole, the institutions and laws of England appear to have gained at last the largest measure of approval, confidence, and support. On the whole, Irish Patriotism, as Smith O'Brien with a delicate and gracious irony observed in his speech at Cahirmoyle, has become a different thing from what it professed to be at Tara—the Mount Sinai of the Irish Exodus to the Promised Land—and a very different thing from what it solemnly pledged itself to be in the Rotunda, the first anniversary of the imprisonment of O'Connell.

Neither in scorn nor with the least unfilial impiety do we write this of Ireland, our Mother-land. If she chooses to subside complacently into Provincialism—if at length she sweetly accepts the rule she has so long haughtily disowned and with heroic purity resisted—it is not for us, as Smith O'Brien with a tranquil yet mournful dignity observed—a dignity all the grander for the tender modesty by which it was inspired and sanctified, made beautiful and holy as the sacrifice of the martyr—it is not for us to question the decision of the nation. So be it, if it be the will of God!

But in the absence of such exciting topics as the portfolio of Irish political Agitation used heretofore to furnish, and in the depth of the chilling season which has succeeded the tropical intensity of heat that raged for the last forty years in Ireland—it is consolatory and gratifying to find, that the project of Steam-communication with America, on so slight an intimation, has been so promptly taken up, so earnestly considered, and so enthusiastically urged. If the wealthy, zealous, and educated men of Ireland devote themselves to this project—give themselves heartily and thoroughly to it—if with the powerful Parliamentary interest they can readily command, they insist on it as a measure of national consequence—twelve months, at the farthest, would see a magnificent chain of steamships flashing across the ocean between Ireland and America. And is it not a project on which all parties—the Rebel as well as the Imperialist—should unite? Is it not one, which without requiring the smallest sacrifice of principle from any man, is calculated to identify, compactly and permanently, all political hostilities, all religious confraternities, all sects and parties, in one colossal convocation, of which the commercial splendor of Ireland would be the vital thought, as it would be the consummation,—solid, fruitful, and not only to our race and island, but to all the world—most glorious.

DEMOCRACY IN THE TWELFTH WARD.

Close to the quiet shades of Trinity Cemetery, the Democracy of the Twelfth Ward, on the evening of the 15th inst., held the most numerous and enthusiastic meeting that has ever been seen in that vicinity. The night was fine, and the brilliancy of the moon looking down on the dense assemblage, rendered almost unnecessary the two large blazing tar-barrels placed at each end of the meeting. The chair was occupied by Richard F. Carman, Esq. Able and stirring addresses were made by Hon. Levi S. Chatfield, ex-Attorney-General; H. B. Perkins, Esq., of Fort Washington; Mr. Goepp, of Pennsylvania; Conrad Swackhammer, Esq., and others. Mr. Chas. M. Connolly, Jr., read a series of resolutions, strongly endorsing the Cincinnati platform, and the various nominees of the party for National, State, and County officers. The audience was orderly and tentive, but the legitimate enthusiasm manifested in favor of Democracy, heightened by the cheering news from Pennsylvania, was such as almost might have roused the tenants of the neighboring churchyard. From the appearance of the meeting, we anticipate that the 12th Ward will do efficient service to the National cause on the 4th of November next.

BISHOP ENGLAND ON AMERICAN SLAVERY.

The first letter of this most eminent Divine and Scholar, on this subject, appears in the columns of the present issue. Last week, an introductory notice, by the Editor of the Catholic Miscellany of Charleston, appeared. Accidentally, it was attributed by one of our editors to the pen of Bishop England. Irish Catholics—especially those who are in any way tempted by the propagandists of Abolitionism, to forego their loyalty to the American Constitution, the obligations it imposes, and the duties it exacts—will find in these letters a wise and noble spirit—calm, erudite, and pious—to guide them. After reading them—for we publish another letter next week, and another the week after, from the same pen—not an Irish vote—not a solitary Irish Catholic vote—will be found for Fremont, in the ballot-box, on the evening of the first Tuesday in November.

The Irish vote—the Irish Catholic vote which the Fremont orators and writers, pamphleteers and bill-stickers, have labored to evoke in favor of Sectionalism and Sedition—will be a unit—swift, sure, and telling—for Buchanan, the Sovereignty and Unity of the States.

NICARAGUA.

We have heartily shaken hands with Major Heiss. He has returned not only with official authentications from the Presidency of Nicaragua, but with the most gratifying accounts of the resources of the country and the ability it possesses to maintain itself a power amongst the recognized nationalities of the world.

No doubt, a desperate struggle—with the loss of many gallant fellows—has been and still continues to be the severe condition on which the triumph and permanent security of this young Republic depends. No country has achieved its freedom without loss of blood, and in most instances that triumph has been the ultimate result of generous lives, sacrificed under a cloud of obloquy, and without the prospect of a commemorative monument.

Thus, with only few friends in the world, to cheer, and back them, have General Walker and his chivalrous followers fought their way, and fighting their way from the Pacific to the entrances on the Atlantic side, established a Commonwealth—a solid and pure Republic—which shall one day assert itself, a decisive Majesty between the oceans which it overlooks.

The election of Buchanan confirms Central America, under General Walker, as an indissoluble link between the Eastern and Western frontiers, and establishes him the Armed Savior of nations that have sunk into abject inactivity, amid the luxuries of a wanton nature, and the ruins of a civilization which no scholar has yet had the hardihood to disinter.

John M. Harrington, L. L. B., delivered a very interesting lecture at Hope Chapel, on the 14th inst., to a large and respectable audience, on the duties of adopted citizens to this republic, and the tendency of their influence to extend and strengthen the inititutions of the country. The lecturer handled his subject in an able, logical manner, and was frequently applauded by the audience.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

There was something so cordial in his manner, as he handed a card with his address, that Casement, though out of tune for society, did not feel himself at liberty to refuse. If only for Ned Morgan's sake, the influence of such a friend should not be thrown away. He accepted; and has since confessed that, in spite of all the anxieties which oppressed him, he never passed an evening more memorably pleasant before or since. His host received him in the library; they were alone, and a few bottles of choice wine and some cigars of exquisite flavor, completed the material entertainment. But how infinite and varied was the intellectual feast! The rich and gilded walls were adorned with master-pieces of ancient and modern art. The furniture, though gorgeous as wealth could make it, did not seem extravagant. Good taste presided over all—every article had a use, and was in harmony with the picture of which it formed a part. They talked of art and philosophy—of the drama and ethics—of political economy, and the principles which underlie the construction of all genuine song.

The host evidently did not talk for the display of his own acquirements; he led the conversation adroitly from subject to subject, as if anxious to guage and measure the extent of his companion's capacities. As often did he seem struck by the brilliancy and quickness of our hero's remarks, as did Casement by the extent and completeness of the other's general information.

His manner did not invite confidence by any active demonstration; but it gave assurance that implicit trust might be reposed in his friendship, honor and discretion. Casement felt the irresistible attraction; and before the third cigar had burned its precious life away, (expiring phœnix-like amid ambrosial clouds,) Mr. O'Grady was in possession of all the important points of O'Reilly's history—the episodes of Lady Alice, and the peasant girl being alone reserved, as not properly belonging to a legal or criminal consultation.

With Casement's permission, Mr. O'Grady had taken rapid notes of all the chief points connected with Matthew's return and the question of his children's legitimacy.

"It is like a dream to me," he said, "that I have either seen some man whose features yours recall, or have known something of a transaction in which one Madame de Cascales was involved. I must think the matter over to-night,—for certain portions of your story seem unaccountably familiar. Of course, you will not be leaving New-York for some days—at all events, let me know always where a line will reach you? It is just possible that some news of this Madame may hereafter be thrown in my way; for, according to the theory I have formed of your case, the large remittance made by your uncle, is but the first instalment of a debt whose payments will be rigidly enforced."

"Then you have formed a theory!" cried Casement, eagerly. "To me it seems all chaos—there is neither beginning nor end to it. The most puzzling thing of all is, to imagine what could have kept a man of his temper and habits so many years away from the enjoyment of a splendid property. Does your theory account for this?"

"It takes the fact for its foundation," answered the lawyer, with a jocular assumption of the mysterious in his tone. "But, come; you must not press me too hard upon the point. It is time you were home and abed; for ten to one, old Bullock will require your company to-morrow on one of his portentous excursions Fat as the little fellow is, still it will require a fleet foot and long wind to keep up with him if he once gets warmed into a chase."

CHAPTER VI.

THE REV. RICHARD DERMODY—A SUSPICIOUS COACHMAN—TWO LAMBS IN THE LION'S DEN.

"He said—although I wot the outward show
Is not true witness of the secret thought,
For that some men so subtle are, I trow,
That what they purpose most appeareth nought;
Yet dare I say Godfredo's means, I know,
Such knowledge hath his looks and gestures wrought,
You shall first prisoner be, and then be tried,
As he shall deem it good—no judge himself beside."

Fairfax's Tasso.

After Anne and Ellen Plunkett had waved, as they thought, a last adieu to their late protectors, it was not without some qualms of misgiving that the elder sister began to recall upon what slender evidence the pretensions of their present guide had been admitted.

He had jumped aboard so hurriedly, and given orders so decisively, that, in her bewilderment, she never once thought of cross-examining him as to his acquaintance with her family and friends. Between the anxiety of seeing to her own and sister's luggage, and the pathetic leave-takings of Ned, she had allowed the clerical-looking gentleman to read the letter snatched rudely from her hand—said letter containing far more than enough to enable any clever impostor to sustain such a character as that in which the reverend personage beside her was now performing.

She blamed her own imprudence, but never ventured to imagine that there was any real danger. Her respect for the cloth forbade the idea that any villain—however lost—could assume that garb in which to deceive the unwary. The old Spanish proverb which tells us that, "When the devil wishes to hide himself most secretly, he gets behind the Cross," had never reached her ears.

Nevertheless, she would like—if only out of curiosity and natural affection—to ask him some questions as to the present state of those to whose affectionate welcome he was now conveying her. Alas! the good man was asleep, and every effort to arouse him was answered by a deeper snore.

"Let him lie as he is," said the driver, looking back into the carriage, "I guess he's travelled some to meet you last night and I know my way."

The speaker's hat was slouched over his eyes, and his face had far more mufflings than the condition of the weather seemed to call for.

But his voice! What could it mean. Surely she had heard that voice before—but where? She turned to look at Ellen and saw her worst fears confirmed by the breathless pallor and terror-stricken eyes which seemed to cry for help. She, too, had heard the voice before, and knew it as the bird knows the rattle of the snake. But where?

For the first time, Anne remembered that their guide had never given them his name. Thoroughly frightened by she knew not what, the elder sister now shook and pinched him with such energy that the somniferous clergyman could no longer remain insensible.

"What is it, my dears?" he asked, awaking only partially and giving symptoms of an immediate relapse.

"Stop the carriage, sir!" cried Anne, excitedly. "I desire to get out—to know where we are—and where we are going—and what is your name—and what proof you have that you are the man you pretend to be?"

The clergyman looked at her with a stare of fixed surprise as she rolled out this torrent of interrogatories. If the amazement was not natural, it was most admirably feigned. John Brougham himself could not have better simulated astonishment.

"To answer categorically," said the clergyman, putting a pause between each syllable, and letting fly each word as if it were a chain-shot—"I never pretended to be any one—my name is Richard Dermody—my style the reverend—as to proofs, I little thought that any would be asked for, when, on the entreaties of your worthy father, who is now in failing health, I undertook the burden of your care. As to stopping the carriage at present, you see it is impossible; for the carriage is on a ferry-boat, and the ferry-boat is on a mighty river; but with God's blessing we shall soon reach the other side; and then, after a drive of some miles, you will be at the railroad station, after which I shall commend you to the protection of the Saints."

Suspicions lightly aroused are often yet more easily allayed. It repented Anne of her hasty words; and the prospect of being left to pursue their journey alone did not sweeten the bitter thought of having offended a worthy and pious gentleman who had already done his best to save them from the perils of what they looked upon as a dangerous city.

"Then, you do not return with us to our father's?" she inquired, in a tone of deferential apology.

A snore that threatened to exhaust the air, and cause the sides of the vehicle to collapse inwards was the only answer.

The sisters turned to each other for mutual consolation; and soon, dismissing their anxieties, were engaged in balancing the probabilities, pro and con, for another meeting with their late protectors.

The carriage had long since left the ferry-boat and houses in its rear. The road over which it passed lay between sickly cornfields and market-gardens of the most unpromising appearance. The soil was sandy and uneven. The horses paced ankle-deep in dust along the deserted highway. Here and there as they advanced, clumps of scrub oak began to dot the shelving inequalities of the landscape. A lazy Dutchman, pipe in mouth, stared after them as they clattered by. A toppling shanty, with a green mud-puddle before its door, in which a group of ragged children were at play, suggested thoughts of fatherland to every patriotic Irish mind.

Turning, at last, from the highroad into a lane so little beaten that its surface, except the cart-ruts, was covered with grass and weeds, the carriage now plunged into a thickly timbered country, and groaned and jolted, as its wheels came in contact with the numerous logs which lay across its path. Its main growth consisted of scrub oak, with an occasional scraggy hemlock or dyspeptic cypress, lifting itself upward toward the copper sky. Its soil produced bull-frogs and mosquitoes, and every blackened stump had a fungus overgrowing it, flaccid and hideous as the liver of a dissected murderer. Such a path would have made a most appropriate avenue to the lake of the Dismal Swamp, as sung by Moore and sketched by the inimitable Porte Crayon.

The sisters had been silent for some time; the jolting made conversation impossible, and the silence left their minds disengaged, to receive the disheartening impressions of the landscape.

Could it be? or was she dreaming—or was he? Anne thought that the Rev. Richard Dermody was taking a furtive peep out of the corner of one squinting eye, while the other pretended to be closed in the deepest and most weary slumber.

"All right, Dick!" shouted a voice that there was this time no mistake about, as the coach drew up in front of a large, ruined farm-house, while the driver leaped to the ground and threw the reins to a ragged negro, who received them with a grin.

Your servant, ladies," cried Brand, thrusting his horrid head in at one window, while the Rev. Richard Dermody, alias Squinting Dick, made a hasty exit through the opposite door.

Screams, shrieks, entreaties, frenzied struggles, all were vain. Assisted by the black, and an old hag whose tongue proclaimed her a countrywoman, the girls were speedily gagged, bound hand and foot, carried up the crazy staircase, and thrown upon an iron bedstead in one of the central rooms, to which no light had access.

Utterly helpless, and half suffocated, they heard their captors descend the stairs, and from the loud uproar of laughter and the clink of glasses, which ascended from the chamber underneath, it would seem that the feat just accomplished was one of pride and exultation.

Oh, prayer, prayer, prayer! in every hour a blessing—in the darkest hour a gleam of more than earthly hope! Praised be the great God for it, that no human shackle can control thy wing! Praised be His mercy for it, that while the soul inhabits its house of clay, thy power can lift it higher than its chains—higher than its prison-house—higher than the throne of the oppressor—higher than the stars that wheel around more distant suns—high even as the throne of the Most High, whose ear is open to receive thy hallowed breath!

The sisters prayed.

* * * * * *

Some half-hour afterward, a heavy foot ascended the stairs, and Brand appeared, carrying a large fluid lamp in his hand, which he deposited on a mildewed table covered near an inch thick with dust and decaying blue-mould. The room had apparently not been entered for long years. There were some chairs in it, a trunk, the bed on which the sisters lay, the table afore-mentioned, a worm-eaten clock-case, and a gilt frame which contained a mirror, as Brand discovered on brushing off the dust.

The ruffian seemed amused by this. He cleaned it hastily, carried over the lamp, and stood for some moments admiring his beauty in the glass. This action did not proceed from vanity alone; he intended by this exhibition of coolness to impress the sisters with a deeper sense of his security and power.

Putting the lamp back, and striking one of the chairs against the floor to shake the dust off, he next arranged his handkerchief across its seat, tucked up his coat-tails, and sat down within a hand's breadth of the bed.

"This is really a most delightful reunion, ladies," he began. "To meet with those on shore who were our companions in the perils of the sea, inspires a sentiment of satisfaction which I am sure you thoroughly reciprocate. This room is not in a good condition, but it rests with yourselves to change it from a prison to a bower of love. The house is far removed from all the busy turmoil of the world—a fact which to heavenly-minded people such as yourselves and Squinting Dick, must recommend it highly. Let me add, however, that its proprietors are peculiarly opposed to noise; they have a latent monomania, in fact, which a scream or shriek is sure to awaken into active madness. I sent a very amiable young lady here some years ago, but the negro could not stand her screams; she fell a victim to his frenzy, or rather fell down a dark stone well, some eighty or a hundred feet in depth, which the late proprietors had taken the pains to bore in the back yard. It is a convenient arrangement in some respects; but it is deplorable to imagine how much its uses might be misapplied.

"I have now said enough, I trust," said the ruffian, rising and withdrawing the gags from their lacerated mouths, "to convince you of the importance of silence."

Their jaws had been so strained and cramped that articulation was impossible. They could not even close them; but, ghastly pale and horror-eyed, they lay before him with open mouths and frozen hearts, two incarnations of such agony as is shadowed forth by Rembrandt, in his lurid picture of The Plague.

Happy it was for them, perhaps, that to scream was physically impossible. They tried to shriek as they felt his coarse familiar touch, but the sounds only gurgled in their throats—the tongue and jaws were powerless.

"You are now free," he continued, in the same mocking and exultant tone; "but let me warn you that the staircase from this room leads down to the eighty-fathom well."

Pale and motionless they lay before him on the dusty and dusk-shadowed couch. Very silent—very motionless—very cold; he thought for a moment that the old Dutch clock had resumed its ticking. Pooh! It was only the throbbing of his listeners' hearts.

"For a brief space I must leave you," he said; "and would you know the errand which tears me from your coveted embrace? A fast-sailing schooner drops down the river to-morrow night; her papers are all regular; the Custom-house officials wink. She is in ballast for South America—thence home with a cargo of hides. Her papers say so. Bah! The hides will be stretched over the bodies of living animals! She goes to the barracoons of the Slave Coast for a cargo, and will be burned as soon as she has landed it in the Brazils. I have thought much about your friend Ned Morgan, and have come to the conclusion that a voyage in this vessel would improve his health. If opportunity occurs for making Mr. O'Reilly his companion, they shall not be separated. If not, I have a different fate—a shorter and a bloodier one—in store for him."

"Adieu, my dear girls," said the ruffian, giving a whistle, which brought the negro to the door—"From your own sensations while gagged and bound, you may realize what will be the sensations of Ned Morgan when he finds himself stowed away in like manner among the rats and empty water-casks of the lower hold. They say rats sometimes eat a living man when they find him helpless; at any rate, if alive at the end of the voyage outer-bound, he will fetch a high price from the negro dealers of the interior. The King of Dahomy, I doubt not, would give two hundred of his ablest-bodied savages in exchange for the mere whim of having a white-skinned slave to fan flies away from his ebony brow."

Very silent—very motionless—very cold, they lay before him on the dusty and dusk-shadowed couch. Again he fancied that the old Dutch clock had resumed its ticking. Pooh—pooh, what nonsense! It was nothing but the throbbing of his listeners' hearts.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

MY GENTLE BOY.

The gentle boy that calls me wife,
Has stately form, and manly life;
Yet swells the cry of playful glee
When children gather round his knee.

Dame Nature catches him at times,
And leads him to her lonely wilds;
But sure he seeks his sweetest rest
Upon the pillows of my breast.

He saw the hills of Cintra grand,
And Mafra's tower, and Belem's strand;
But still, he proves the Lee-waves know
A surer balm for human woe.

With Sunday fine, we hear the falls
That murmur by old castle-walls;
And truly can his pencil trace
The form and tint of Nature's face.

And many lonely nooks are ours,
With pendant buds, and mossy bowers,
And glades that show the distant sea,
And mazy windings of the Lee.

With skillful hand he works to stay
The lambs secure, and wolves at bay;
And pours for me, the songs at night,
That cheered his honest worldly fight.

My gentle boy has lips that rise
Not often to the proud and wise;
But pour a tide of love and glee,
When fondness sets his kind heart free.

My gentle boy has brows that show
The deepest sense of human woe;
And when his forehead sinks to rest,
The trace of suffering unexpressed.

And yet my boy has eyes for glee,
Like morning rustling in the tree;
With fringes soft as silken grass,
Where sunlight and clear waters pass.

And then his teeth can gleam as white
As snow upon the mountain height;
With lips as pure as morning lifts,
When laughing forth her freshest gifts.

My gentle boy has hazel eyes,
With shadows caught from evening skies;
And day-dreams stir those crystal wells,
Where joy, and grief, and passion dwells!

Blarney Lake, Ireland. SHINE BRADSTONE.

OUR ARBOR.

Placed on the breast of a steep-sloping hill,
Whose base is washed by a murmuring stream,
Our rustic arbor holds its rough-hewn sill,
And charms the senses like a fairy dream.
Behind its arches, climbing up the bank,
The locust, hemlock, pine, and oak abound;
And no entangling weed, deformed or rank,
Taints the perfume of the flowers around.

Below, in the shade of the drooping limbs,
The mirthful fish desport the livelong day;
The sucker, revelling in his sluggish whims,
And pike, low crouching for his nimble prey.
Above, in the dense foliage, thick and cool,
The robin hops, and trills his merry song,
While the quick swallow, skimming o'er the pool,
Twitters a greeting as he flits along.

The gaudy oriole, in bright red coat,
Betimes and oft drops from his swinging nest,
And though no music fills his pretty throat,
Yet he charms the eye, while he does his best.
A winding path, that leads from peak to base,
Directs the pilgrim to our cool retreat;
Where contemplation sweet the mind may grace,
And care nor guile dare ne'er the bosom greet.

Here man may learn, from ev'ry object near,
A lesson pleasurable, profound, and good;
From mighty trees, that gorgeous crests uprear,
May learn to love the paths of hardihood.
And, as the stout oak-leaves repel the sun,
And shield from harm the humble buds beneath,
So he with sturdy arm should Wrong restrain,
And crown the lowly with the victor's wreath.

Gaze on the flowers; think what fragile forms
Lade all the atmosphere with rich perfume,
And learn from them that they who seem the least—
Their port being meek—may oft in grandeur bloom.
Where will we find a gayer, purer heart,
In all the castles of the world's domain,
Than does Innocence to the bird impart,
As he flits the mazes of his sylvan realm?

Ah! well might one, with such companions near,
And soul responsive to the Muse's voice,
From Satan's wiles in safety ever steer,
And teach to man the raptures of his choice!
Such are the scenes, and such the lessons taught,
Within the shadow of our fragrant bower;
Such pious precepts sure were cheaply bought
By the still fleeting of a thoughtful hour.

BELSHAZZAR.

MA COLLEEN DHAS CRUTHIN NA MBO.

The Sun o'er the Slaney was shining.
And brightening its waves in their flow,
While in grief on my breast was reclining
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

She knew while a hope was remaining,
At Oulart, New Ross, and Arklow,
I fought for my country's unchaining—
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

So, far from old Ireland, to-morrow
Her tyrants compel me to go,
And leave you behind in my sorrow,
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

When I find in the land of the stranger
A home for the love you bestow,
I'll come back and bear you from danger,
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

Then Fate shall no longer us sever,
Our days will in happiness flow,
I'll cherish and love you forever,
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

But when there's a chance of redressing
The wrongs of my country, I know
I'll bring to her battle your blessing,
Ma Colleen dhas Cruthin na mbo.

Philadelphia, Oct. 17, 1856. GARRYOWEN.

ILLUSTRIOUS IRISHMEN ABROAD.

Translated from the Biographie Universelle.

DON GONSALO O'FARRELL,

A General and Minister of War to the King of Spain, was born at Havana on the 22d of January, 1754, of a family originally Irish, and of the highest respectability. He was brought to Europe when very young, and placed for his education at the College of Soreza, which had at the time the reputation of being the best directed educational establishment in the world. Young O'Farrell distinguished himself there by extraordinary abilities, and, after having completed his studies, passed thence into Spain, where he joined the army as a cadet. Shortly after, he was admitted into the Military School at Avila. Having received a commission, he was appointed Professor of Mathematics, but did not hold the office long, as he was made Director of the Military Academy for Cadets at Port-Sainte-Marie, near Cadiz. In 1780, when Spain, in alliance with France, decided on entering into the war which Great Britain was carrying on against her trans-Atlantic colonies, O'Farrell obtained permission to repair to France, for the purpose of serving as a volunteer in the expedition which was then in preparation to make a descent on England; but, this project not having been put into execution, he availed himself of the opportunity to visit the various military establishments and fortified places in France. The following year he served under the command of the Duke de Crillon, in the expedition against the Isle of Minorca, occupied by the English. This expedition was terminated at the commencement of 1782, by the taking of Mahon. Thence O'Farrell repaired to the siege of Gibraltar. After the unfortunate issue of this enterprise, he was preparing to take a part in the vast expedition which the two powerful allies were meditating against the English colonies of the Antilles, but the peace of 1783 put an end to the project, and O'Farrell continued to serve in the infantry. In 1788–9 he was Lieutenant-Colonel in the Regiment of Tolesa in garrison at Cueta; the year following, the Colonel of the Regiment of Asturias having lost his life in the earthquake which destroyed the station of Oran, O'Farrell was appointed to succeed him. The fortifications at Oran had been in a great measure destroyed; the Moors put themselves in readiness to profit by this catastrophe, to attack the town and take it from their enemies, but the Spanish Government took the precaution to destroy the remains of the fortifications, and recal to Europe the garrison which they had kept there for almost three hundred years. The Regiment of Asturias was sent to Cadiz, thence to Ferrol; Colonel O'Farrell, recalled to Madrid, was appointed Secretary to a Junta of General Officers, charged to draw up a set of rules for the Army, and this occupation kept them there till the war broke out between Spain and the French Republic, when he was sent to the Army of Navarre, in which he served during the campaigns of 1793–4. Having been wounded at the actions of Lecumberri and Foloso, he was made Lieutenant-General after the campaigns. At the beginning of 1795, Don Joseph Urrutia having been called to the command of the Army of Rousillon, in order to retrieve the losses which the Spaniards had there experienced, chose General O'Farrell for his Chief Staff-Officer; the latter assumed the command of a body of troops, supported with advantage the battles of Bagnola and Bascara, overran the Cerdagne, made himself master of Puycerde, where he captured three thousand prisoners, and was stopped in the midst of these successes only by the news of peace, which was signed at Bale on the 22d of July, 1795. Recalled to Madrid, he resumed the labors which war had interrupted, and made one of the Junta of Generals appointed to make a report to the King on the reinforcement, organization, discipline, administration, and instruction of the army, and was named as Commissary of the Spanish Government to determine the boundaries between France and Spain. He was at the same time charged, in concert with Don Thomas de Merla, General of Artillery, to mark out the places where fortifications could be constructed, and draw up a new plan of defence and fortifications on the frontiers of France. The Commissioners were not sufficiently informed on all the points, and their work, remaining without execution, was buried in the office of the Minister of War at Madrid. In 1798 O'Farrell was made Inspector-General of the Spanish Infantry. Meantime the alliance formed at Bale between Spain and France was drawn closer still. A treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, was signed at San Ildefonso, on the 19th of August, 1796, by Prince de la Paix, and General Perignon, Envoy of the French Republic. In consequence of this treaty, Charles the Fourth collected a squadron and an army of debarkation, which sailed from Ferrol, under the command of General O'Farrell, in 1799, and repaired to Rochfort, in order to join the army which the Executive Directory destined, they said, to make a descent on Ireland, but the secret object of the French Government was to effect the passage of the troops into Egypt, for the purpose of reinforcing General Bonaparte there. When the Chevalier d'Azara, Spanish Ambassador at France, was made aware of this double-dealing, he made a strong representation of the difficulty the allied fleets would have, to pass through or overcome the English fleet which covered the Mediterranean—of the dissimulation of the Directory towards a friendly government—and he obliged them to renounce the project of conveying the new troops into Egypt. The Spanish Division received orders to re-embark forthwith, after a long sojourn at Rochefort, and return to Spain. On his return, O'Farrell was sent Ambassador to Berlin. This selection caused some surprise; his appointment was attributed to one of those intrigues so frequent at courts, for the removal of men whose merit or honesty gives umbrage to the ambition of courtiers; but we can only perceive, on the part of the Spanish Government, in thus sending to a military monarchy a general of tact and experience, an intention of penetrating deeply into the secret military organization of this power. The mission was not marked by any important act.

After a considerable sojourn in the Prussian capital, OFarrell obtained leave of absence, travelled through Germany, made a tour of Switzerland, Italy, England and France, studying the military institutions of the countries he visited, everywhere collecting observations and information which he transmitted to the government at home. He returned to Madrid in the month of June, 1805, and received orders in January, 1806, to assume the command of a division of the army, composed of about seven thousand troops, which was dispatched to Tuscany, for the purpose of replacing, in the garrisons of the kingdom of Etruria, the army which Spain withdrew from them in order to direct it against Naples. In the month of October of this year, when the circular of Prince de la Paix to the Intendants and Corregidors of the Spanish monarchy, became the first signal of misunderstanding and that mutual defiance which secretly sprung up between the two courts, the Viceroy of Italy sent orders to O'Farrell to separate the regiments of his division, and distribute them into cantonments which he indicated. The Spanish General replied that he did not receive any instructions with reference to the proclamation of Prince de la Paix, that consequently he regarded as altogether unnecessary the precautionary measure which the French required; that, if they attempted to coerce him into it, he would shut himself up in Lehorn, and there defend himself against every attack.

This measure which did not meet the approbation of the French, would have given the English a foothold in the north of Italy; Generl O'Farrell was no longer disturbed, and harmony having been apparently re-established between the two powers, his division passed under the command of the Marquis de la Romana, who conducted it into Germany when Napoleon requested a body of Spanish troops to reinforce his army. O'Farrell remained in Florence and departed thence in order to accompany to Madrid the Queen of Etruria, who repaired to the Peninsula for the purpose of taking possession of the government which was assigned her by the treaty of Fontainbleau (27th October, 1807), in exchange for the Italian States. Shortly after his arrival at Aranjuez, Prince de la Paix offered him the post of Governor to the young King of Etruria: this he declined, and endeavored by urgent remonstrances to open the eyes of the Court to the hostile designs of Napoleon, to overcome the irresolution of the King, to dissipate the illusions with which the latter still tried to amuse himself, and to induce him to resist by force the first attempt at invasion on the part of the French. His counsel was not attended to; a French army advanced on Madrid without encountering any resistance; the weak-minded Charles the Fourth was forced to abdicate on the 17th of March, in favor of his son, and Murat entered Madrid on the 23d of the same month. Ferdinand the Second hastened to collect around him men who were held in the highest estimation and general repute in Spain. Azanza and Jovellanos were recalled from exile, O'Farrell became Director-General of Infantry, and a few days after (5th April, 1808,) Minister of War. But circumstances did not permit him to attempt anything; the enemy had penetrated into the heart of the Kingdom: every resource was wanting; disorganization, treachery, and fear had corrupted every one, and the young Monarch himself did not know on what to detemine. O'Farrell advised his Sovereign, in as much as resistance was altogether out of the question, to prevail on Napoleon to recognise him as King. This counsel was prudent and wise, but the Emperor of the French had other views, and Ferdinand, in adopting this line of conduct, only hastened the moment of his fall. O'Farrell was forthwith sent, with the Duke De L'Infantado, to General Savery, who had just made, by order of Bonaparte, a formal demand for the liberation of Prince de la Paix. He announced to this General that Ferdinand the Seventh had resolved to meet Napoleon at Burgos, and succeeded in obtaining a promise from him that there would not be a discussion till the two Monarchs had had an interview; Ferdinand set out on the 10th of April, leaving the administration to the care of a Supreme Junta of government, composed of Don Antonio, his uncle, who presided, and the Ministers. On the 16th of April, General O'Farrell was sent for by Murat, who informed him, after having alleged various causes of complaint, that he had orders from the Emperor not to acknowledge any other sovereign in Spain but Charles the Fourth, from whom they had extorted a protest against his own act of abdication - he added that he was about to announce it to the people by a Proclamation, of which he presented him with a copy. O'Farrell replied that neither the authorities nor the nation would pay any attention to his proclamation, and that Spain had no other King but Ferdinand. "Very well!" exclaimed Murat, "cannons and bayonets will force you into obedience." Next day, this General desired the Junta to send two of its members in order to confer with him on this same subject. Alanza and O'Farrell were deputed, and they forthwith repaired to Murat's residence. The conference lasted four hours. The Grand Duke de Berg reproduced the old arguments—that Charles the Fourth had been compelled to resign, that he had implored the protection of Napoleon, and that the latter found himself in consequence forced to sustain him. The Spanish ministers having triumphantly refuted all these reasons, Murat concluded by declaring that he had definite orders which he was bound to obey. The conference broke up, and the Junta approved of the answers of its deputies. On the 2d of May, a fierce insurrection having burst forth in Madrid against the French, occasioned by the departure of the Infant Don Francisco for Bayonne, O'Farrell and Azanza exerted themselves to the utmost in order to calm the popular fury and prevent the effusion of blood; their efforts were in a great measure crowned with success.

O'Farrell continued to resist, to the very ast moment, the pre tensions and threats of Murat. After the departure of the Infant Don Antonio, this general announced to the Junta that he deemed it proper, with the interest of order in view, to join their deliberations. A few days after, he repaired to the assembly of the Junta, in order to renew his demand. Gil Azanza and O'Farrell opposed this claim, but a plurality of votes having acceded to it next day, O'Farrell required the secretary of the Junta to act on his opinion and protest. He appeared no more at their meetings, and requested to be allowed to divest himself of his office. However, in less than a month after such loyal and courageous behavior, on the 6th of June, 1808, General O'Farrell accepted from Joseph Bonaparte the office of minister of War. Napoleon, they say, showed some distrust of him, and thought he had a leaning towards the English, though his name alone—recalling an Irish origin—should have dissipated such doubts. Nevertheless, O'Farrell held his post until the fall of him who had entrusted it; but one would have some difficulty to single out any act of an administration held on such feeble tenure. The authority of Joseph was not acknowledged at all, in many provinces. Even in those occupied by the French troops, it was uncertain, feeble, shackled, and reduced almost to a nullity. O'Farrell followed his new master, when he fled to Vittoria, after the battle of Baylen, on the 17th of July, 1808. In concert with Azanza and the Ministers Mazarredo and Caburrus, he prepared at Buytrago—about the commencement of the month of August—a memoir, which was presented to Bonaparte by Azanza and Urquijo, the object of which was to suggest some means of mitigating the unfortunate consequences to the Spanish people of their alliance with France. O'Farrell was present at the battle of Ocana, which was gained by Marshal Soult over the army of the Central Junta, and he succeeded in saving from execution twenty-two thousand Spanish prisoners, whom the French soldiers, greatly exasperated, were about to slaughter by way of reprisal. He accompanied King Joseph in his journey to Andalusia, after the success of this battle, endeavoring to render him popular among the Spaniards, to inspire him with an interest for his new country, and withdraw him from the abject dependence in which his brother held him. These efforts were vain; Joseph fell from the throne of Spain, and those who had followed his party were forced to fly with him. When, in consequence of the treaty of Valengay, Ferdinand was re-seated on his throne, O'Farrell wrote him, on the 10th of April, 1814, a letter, in which he asserted his devotion, explained the motives of his conduct, and sought to justify it. The following are the most important passages of this remarkable document:—"Sire: As long as I was able to be useful to your majesty, I have invariably fulfilled my duty and given constant proofs of my zeal, equal—if not superior—to that which has marked, without degenerating for a single moment, my forty and more years of services. But when the events, provoked by a sovereign whose ambition no longer encountered in continental Europe any barrier sufficient to arrest its march, dragged your Majesty from the throne of your fathers into the deplorable depth wherein my country beheld herself, I believed myself forced to abandon the party who could not save her, and in so doing followed the advice which the paternal solicitude of your Majesty addressed to your subjects. A great number of those, guided by a different mode of viewing things, or more fortunately situated, wished to act by themselves and keep aloof from the effervescence of passion which, if it sometimes secures the independence of a country, very frequently destroys forever its internal tranquillity. I apprehended that such a line of conduct would envelop in mourning, for a length of years, our beloved country, and oblige Spain, after countless losses and sacrifices—which could not ameliorate the condition of your Majesty—to succumb to her conqueror, and receive from him conditions still more harsh than those he then dictated. But the event has proved that this line of conduct was as honorable for those who had sworn to support it, as advantageous to Spaniards who witness the restoration of the lawful heir to the throne, and the sovereign whom their hearts desired. On this occasion of general rejoicing throughout the entire country, permit me, sire, to offer, at the foot of your Majesty's throne, the homage of my loyalty and submission, which I am ready to employ in any way your royal and sovereign will may be pleased to order. Condescend, sire, to permit a similar homage to be made by those who have been employed in that portion of the administration with which I was charged, and who share my lot. I can assure your majesty that all are, and have never ceased to be, Spaniards, and that their wishes for the honor of Spain identify them with a generous nation, governed by a monarch for whom, with one accord, we pray a long and prosperous reign!" This act of submission remained without a response. The sentence of the Central Junta of government, which, since the month of November, 1808, had declared O'Farrell and his colleagues traitors to religion, to the King, to their country—had confiscated their possessions, and pronounced against them the penalty of death, received confirmation. He took refuge in Paris, where he lived in retirement, assuaging the bitterness of his long exile by the study of letters and science. About the close of his life, however, the King of Spain restored him to his former rank and honors. O'Farrell died in Paris, on the 19th of July, 1831. His mind was highly cultivated—he possessed extended and varied acquirements. All the details of the military art were familiar to him. The nobility and integrity of his character have never been placed in doubt. A memoir of O'Farrell, by Don Andrew Muriel, has been published in Paris, 1831, an octavo of 82 pages.

OMEGA.

Literary and Artistic News.

If Cork, says the Dublin Nation, can boast of distinguished names of her sons in the highest branches of painting and sculpture—such as Barry, Maclise, and Hogan—Limerick has no need to hide her head with respect to her contribution to the promotion and preservation of the Arts and Sciences. We have seen oil-paintings executed by the children of some of the poorest among our laboring classes, painted at the Christian Brothers' School, which for tasteful design and harmony, and effective coloring, would do no discredit to the drawing-room of any gentleman in the country. Casually passing by the studio of a native artist a few days since—Mr. G. Glynn, of Roche's street—we were struck with a figure of nearly life size, and of perfect anatomical proportions in every part, affixed to a large wooden cross, representing our Redeemer in the last stage of His passion on Calvary. In our judgment, the modelling and casting of such a work deserves for the talented artist a very high degree of credit, which, we believe, no rival in his profession would fain dispute.

A trial, setting forth the secrets of collaboration, is reported from Paris. This was the contest betwixt M. le Marquis de Prato d'Armesano and Il Conte Pietro Adolfridi Tadini, on grounds like the following:—The Marquis, it appears, had contracted with the Count to write five melo-dramas, price £40 each,—the Count to find the ideas, the Marquis strictly to follow them, and merely (says the official report) "to be responsible for purity of style and the harmony of verse." The work was to bear the Count's name, and two-fifths of it,—a "Ruy Blas" and an "Ettore Fieramosca,"—were produced, in entire agreement with the conventions. On delivering Nos. 6 and 4.—"The Count of Montreuil" and the "Chevalier de Bourbon,"—the Marquis resolved to have his share in the glory, and demanded of the Tribunal de Commerce to justify him in forcing his name before the public, as the Count's better half. The Court declared its incompetence to deal with the matter.

A paragraph contributed to Notes and Queries, by a corrrespondent styling himself "Juvernus," has been going the round of the press, describing an interview which the late Mr. O'Kelly, the poet, had with George IV., on the occasion of that monarch's visit to Ireland, and in which O'Kelly, is very unjustly described as guilty of a most arrogant piece of vanity. An intimate friend of the bard's has favored us with the true version of the anecdote which he often had from the lips of the latter; and according to which it was the King, who observing that the poet was lame, remarked with a smile that Scott and Byron labored under the same corporal defect, and suggested that it was an excellent subject for an impromptu. O'Kelly, laughing, agreed that it was, and without a moment's hesitation repeated the following parody on certain well known lines:

"Three lame bards in three sister nations born,
The first for the thistle—the second for the thorn;
The third for the shamrock, which never will decay,
While the rose and the thistle will yearly fade away."

There are in the United States one hundred and twenty-two colleges, with more than a thousand professors, and having more than twelve thousand students. They have extensive laboratories and astronomical instruments, and libraries containing more than a million of volumes. There are about forty medical schools, with about two hundred and fifty professors and five thousand students. There are forty-four theological schools, with one hundred and twenty-seven professors, and between thirteen and fourteen hundred students. There are sixteen law schools, and about six hundred students.

Macaulay continues in Venice—the most insalubrious and unsavory Autumn residence in Europe. On his return he will resume his History. A calculation, says the Daily Times, has been made, on the "rule of three" principle, that if it took four volumes to narrate what was done in eight years, it will require sixty octavos to record the events of the hundred and twenty years intended to be covered by the whole of Macaulay's History. And if it took ten years to write the four volumes already published, Macaulay must live exactly a century and a half more to complete the work!

Mr. Putnam has issued the third volume of the people's edition of Irving's Life of Washington. It has a likeness of General Putnam, after Trumbull's portrait. In this volume the narrative is brought down to the close of 1779, when Sir Henry Clinton and Lord Cornwallis went on their expedition "for the capture of Charleston and the reduction of South Carolina," both of which feats they did not accomplish.

The library of four thousand volumes, lately belonging to Professor Lucke, of Germany, and purchased for the use of the Divinity School in Cambridge, chiefly by the generosity of Col. Benjamin Loring, of Boston, has arrived in safety at the institution for which it is designed.

Stringer & Townsend have just issued their twenty-volume library edition of Cooper's best novels and romances. The text has been revised from the author's latest corrections, and the volumes are particularly noticeable for the beauty of the paper, print and binding.

Thomas de Quincy is a contributor to the new English periodical called The Titan. In the September number he has an article entitled "Storms in English History; a glance at the reign of Henry VIII."

"Austrian Dungeons of Italy," by FELICE ORSINI, containing a frightful account of Austrian tyranny, has been translated and published in London, where it commands a great sale, and has excited vast indignation.

The King, we may add, offered the poet a present on the occasion of £50, which the latter, with true Celtic spirit, declined to receive.

In the Nouvelle Biographie Universelle there is a notice of Brigham Young the Mormon, in which he is called Brigham le jeune.

It is worth mention that fully two-thirds of the cheap books published in London during the last three years, are reprints of American works.

Mr. R. G. Horton's clever Life and Public Services of James Buchanan, has been republished in England. The author's name, however, is given as Norton.

Military News.

Letter from Nicaragua.

GRANADA, Oct. 1st 1856.

I arrived here on the 24th of last month. Our voyage up the river San Juan was without any incident, except that we lost one man overboard. We stopped one night at the fort of San Carlos. The officers took a small boat and went ashore to see the men stationed there. They received us very kindly. They were all in good health and spirits. Next day the Lake Steamer came down and took us to Granada. Our arrival was unexpected and took them all by surprise. We were escorted into town by the military band. A few days before we arrived, some volunteers, to the number of fifty, went to San Jacinto, where they met the enemy, numbering five hundred men. Our men had to retreat, but not before they killed one hundred of the enemy. There was an attack meditated on Granada the day we arrived, but our advent saved the city. Government scrip was down to two-and-a-half cents in the dollar. It rose next morning to ten, so you can form some idea of how much we were wanted. All the parties in our organization, who held any rank, were confirmed in it, except Charles A. Walters, whom, as I informed you in my first letter, was appointed Acting-Major on board the Steamer. He was commissioned as Captain, which leaves me still 1st Lieutenant. However, I am quite satisfied until I shall do something to distinguish myself. I like the country. I think that after a short time it will afford the finest opportunities for realizing wealth. All we want is men of capital to develope the resources of the country.

I called on Gen. Walker. He is a man who says very little, yet thinks a great deal.

I have been very busy since I arrived, drilling the men, drawing their arms, clothing, &c. I have not had a minute to myself as yet. This is the only letter which I have had time to write. You will let all my old friends know how it is, so that they will excuse my not sending even a line to any of them.

I have just had orders to serve out ammuntion to the men, and make them sleep on their arms. There is a report that some of our piquets were cut off, but I cannot say positively, there are so many reports going, and the General keeps his mind to himself. One thing is certain—there will be an engagement very soon.

One of the companies that came with us was ordered to Massya, at daybreak this morning. The Company I belong to are attached to the 1st Infantry, and I think that we will be sent to Rivas.

Captain Rakielewicz, one of the four officers who came out in the Tennessee, was broken, and is to be sent home by next Steamer. He is confined to his quarters. The reason of all this is not known.

I send you a number of El Nicaraguense, with the list of our appointments. If published in the Irish News, send a copy to my father. Give my best regards to all friends. The chances are we will have a brush with the enemy to-morrow or next day. If so, and that this should be my last letter to you, ever remember your friend, M. FLOOD NAGLE.

Battalion of New-York Volunteers.

Arrived in Granada, Nicaragua, by the Tennesse—Official List from El Nicaraguense.

COMPANY A.

CHARLES A. WALTERS—Captain.
M. F. NAGLE—First Lieutenant.
JAMES S. JUDGE—Second Lieutenant.

1 C. Armstrong,
2 Robert Archer,
3 Fred. Abott,
4 Henry Adams,
5 Richmond Burns,
6 G. Blair,
7 Thomas Burns,
8 F. B. Chrissy,
9 Mich. Considine,
10 Isaac Clark,
11 Richard Doe,
12 Charles Dougherty,
13 A. S. Fairchild,
14 John Fitzgerald,
15 Thomas Gibbons,
16 John Haskins,
17 John Hennessy,
18 William Harris,
19 George Howard,
20 William Jackson,
21 William Kaylor,
22 E. R. F. Latson,
23 Samuel Leonard,
24 John Moony,
25 Henry Mowray,
26 James Morrow,
27 E. W. Moosman,
28 H. McLord,
29 William Manning,
30 Henry Manning,
31 Charles Brockington,
32 Henry Rodman,
33 William Byan,
34 A. Roth,
35 Thomas Stewart,
36 James Smith,
37 P. Shannon,
38 W. G. Turner,
39 C. C. Van Houten, 1st Sergeant.
40 James Welsh,
41 H. W. Wheeler,
42 John Welsh, 2nd Sergeant,
43 James Warrin,
44 James Racker,
45 Patrick Everett,
46 John Corcoran,
47 J. F. Taylor, 3d Sergeant.

COMPANY B.

CHARLES RAKIELEWICZ—Captain.
F. LAWTON—First Lieutenant.
G. VON HILL—Second Lieutenant.

1 John Colbrig,
2 Charles Wenzel,
3 Joseph Sauer,
4 Franz Neier,
5 Charles Krauss,
6 John Axt,
7 John Beyer,
8 Edward Bibra,
9 John Bruns,
10 John Dietz,
11 William Fliegel,
12 Theodore Fick,
13 Julius Frank,
14 Henry Felz,
15 William Giesson,
16 E. Henken,
17 Joseph Hoene,
18 Oscar Henritzsch,
19 J. Kuperfschmidt,
20 Leopold Klorthhe,
21 Edward Knndig,
22 T. Krothenhauer,
23 Arthur Hopper,
24 John Lenz,
25 Charles Lupus,
26 Philip Meyer,
27 Charles Moosfield,
28 Augustus Muller,
29 Charles Mazewsky,
30 B. Martin,
31 Robert Newmann,
32 Charles Peters,
33 Charles Roschere,
34 Edward Rhein,
35 Joseph Schem,
36 T. Schrempiff,
37 Charles Scriba,
38 Charles Schmidt,
39 Theodore Swevert,
40 C. G. Staehhi,
41 J. Schermasser,
42 Dion Straub,
43 Emile Seibt,
44 C. Ummerlin,
45 Ferd. Wessenberg,
46 Edward Wilke,
47 Otto Weher.

COMPANY C.

HIRAM RUSSELL—Captain.
A. McK. PITTMAN—First Lieutenant.
WM. NORTHSIDGE—Second Lieutenant.

1 Patrick Butler,	24 H. F. James,
2 Thomas Brooks,	25 Edward Craft,
3 Samuel Brown,	26 Thos. King,
4 P. Connelly,	27 James Lovelace,
5 Thomas Carroll,	28 James Landreth,
6 William Charles,	29 Patrick Larrigan,
7 Geo. Carpenter,	30 H. F. Miller,
8 D. Cormollan,	31 W. G. Martin,
9 Edward Corey,	32 J. W. Loughlin,
10 Edward Clark,	33 Wm. McCarthy,
11 John Denham,	34 Pat. O'Donnegan,
12 W. Davidson,	35 Thomas Pidgeon,
13 Dennis Elliott,	36 William Rose,
14 Patrick Everitt,	37 J. A. Smith,
15 M. Taney,	38 Charles Smith,
16 R. W. Forman,	39 Thos. Winters,
17 John Foote,	40 John Barnacle,
18 Alfred Gray,	41 Oscar Cromroy,
19 Ben. Hardin,	42 J. Lyster,
20 James Haynes,	43 D. W. Wilkins,
21 J. Henderson,	44 J. W. Austin,
22 Charles Gehrels,	45 D. Cook,
23 David Johnes,	46 Thomas Fitzgerald.

COMPANY D.

LEWIS E. GRANT—Captain.
A. STRULLER—First Lieutenant.

1 Otto Wucke,	23 Henry Ponce,
2 Emile Barrera,	24 Wm. Sommer,
3 Herm. Schmidt,	25 Dan. Schrader,
4 P. Buile,	26 John Vitta,
5 C. Bauman,	27 F. Consigne,
6 John Dumas,	28 Francis Coussone,
7 T. R. Dohn,	29 Phil. Bramagan,
8 S. Dariff,	30 W. P. Copland,
9 Theodore Ditt,	31 Henry Isaacs,
10 Henry Dalton,	32 Philip Leondra,
11 Anton Gabbeltz,	33 Jos. Schugman,
12 F. Grantz,	34 Fred. Dirkop,
13 Theo. Heronaren,	35 James Muller,
14 S. Harnheim,	36 Wm. Gannelly,
15 Pierre Instirre,	37 John Hargen,
16 Leop. Kroztowsky,	38 James Finnegan,
17 Robert Kempf,	39 J. J. Schuyler,
18 Jules Leblond,	40 James Dale,
19 Henry Merteors,	41 James Hall,
20 Charles Prentz,	42 — O'Neal,
21 Henry Paulson,	43 W. M. Agate,
22 G. Pazzi,	44 Pat. J. Rivers.

City News.

GEORGE LAW'S FIRST APPEARANCE ON ANY STAGE.

From the Herald.

Mr. LAW—like a man going to execution—slowly and solemnly divests himself of his great coat, and shoving his hands to the very depths of his capacious pockets, measuredly trod to the little table in front of the chairman, and, amid cheers and waving of hats and handkerchiefs and other like signals of popular favor, commenced his speech—a wag in the gallery irreverently calling out "George, mind to put in the railroad."

MR. LAW'S SPEECH.

Fellow citizens—(pause)—we have met to-night under a call of the North Americans—(He takes one hand out of his pocket, thinks, and puts it back again)—favorable to the election of Col. Fremont. (Loud hurrahs.) We have met to look over the past (con expresione), to confer together (a long pause) and see how we can provide a remedy for the evils which now trouble our country. (Looks round complacently after finishing the sentence—suppressed laughter.) the extension of slavery in the Territories has overshadowed every other question in the Presidential canvass. (He goes on swimmingly.) The question which we considered to be settled in 1850 has been again re-opened. (Here Mr. Law made several efforts to clear his throat, and the audience heartlessly laughed at them.) And that question now—(a long pause—no prompter)—seems to threaten to swallow up every other interest and to destroy—(another pause—he is trying to recollect)—the liberties which we possess, and which our fathers fought for in the Revolution. (Bravo! bravo!) While we have anything to do it is well to look where we are—(laughter, which seems to disconcert him, and he makes several tugs at the dish-cloth in his throat)—to look at the evils, and to look at the remedy. (Bravo!) The constitution gave the power to Congress—to—to—legislate, and to pass such rules and regulations as might be necessary for the Territories. (Good.) In the several States of this Union the legislative power of those States are the power of legislating for them so long as they don't interfere with the preservation of the constitution and the power yielded to the general government. (Meaning rather cloudy—George evidently getting oblivious—the laughter becoming more irrepressible.) These were considered wise provisions by our fathers. With these provisions in reference to the States and in reference to the Territories (with emphasis) we have lived (takes two steps backward) since 1787 up to the present time.

For the purpose of removing that evil we have met to-night. These men that have represented us truthfully and honestly we propose to sustain and we propose to re-elect. These that have misrepresented us we propose to put aside, and to take others in their places. (Cheers and laughter—further pulls at the dish-cloth in the throat.) The democratic party is now organized—(a pause—he steps forward, pulls his hand out of his pocket, fills a glass of water and drinks it, to the intense amusement of the audience—holds its power and strength at the South. It has united all the Southern States in its support. It has become the great propagandist—(got out with fine effect)—of slavery. (He renews his efforts to clear his throat, and the audience laughed immoderately thereat.) It thinks by—(a pause—he rubs his nose, then puts the hand again in the pocket, and tries to remember—the action and the attitude are irresistible, and roars of laughter greet him from all sides.)

Mr. Law (parenthetically and apologetically)—Never mind, gentlemen—we'll get along by and bye. (Continued laughter.)

Mr. Shaffer—I hope the house will be as orderly as possible.

The "as possible" was another provocative of mirth, and the shouts of laughter continued, while Mr. Law kept rattling his keys at the bottom of his pockets.

Mr. Law (resuming where he had left off—They think to extend slavery—(a minute's pause—pleasantly filled up with laughter—calls to order—cries of "Go on George" and immense fun all round—George sinks his chin on his breast, and, when he recollects, proceeds)—and by the excitement that they may get up on that question, to rule and control the government of this country. (Another awkward pause, and intimations to "Go on." Let us then at the North unite (finger raised) for the purpose of putting down that sentiment and that feeling!) It's too late in the day—(he takes two strides backward and speaks forcibly)—to talk about revolution when the people govern. (Cheers—a pause—he rubs his nose gently and continues.) It's too late in the day to talk about disunion when these thirty-one States and twenty-three millions of people, all linked together by railroads, by canals, by ties of relationship, and by all the interests of trade. I am willing to undertake to do what I can in an election; but I am the last man who will undertake to get up revolution and disunion. (Roars of laughter.) Those who do undertake it have a job on hand which they little consider the amount of. (Applause.) When they talk to the free North about coercing us to vote for who they think proper to direct, they talk without knowing to whom they speak. (Splendidly declaimed—much applause.) The spirit of '76 exists—(hunc)—and when it is lifted up it will become as intense as three millions of people is to 23 millions. (Loud laughter.) Virginny, (sic) the State of the great Apostles of liberty—of American liberty—has reduced itself in the estimation of all by that act—an act that the despotism of Russia could not do worse on its poorest subjects. (Laughter.) There has been a conspiracy—as dark, and as daring and as heartless as that of Catiline of Rome. (Applause and laughter.)

We propose to put an honest man in their place (cheers), and a man of intelligence and patriotism, that has done good service to his country; (applause) and if they talk to us of disunion, if we do so, we'll tell them "you've scuttled the ship and we're baling it out, (laughter), and if you don't behave yourselves we'll throw you overboard." (An immoderate outburst of laughter) That's the idea that I have—(puts both hands in his pockets with an air of intense self-satisfaction and receives the laughing plaudits of the house.) Gentlemen, the election approaches—(solemnly spoken.) A few weeks, and it comes around. The evils that has been inflicted on the country is now crowded into the space of some three weeks. It becomes us to remedy them—shall we do it? (Cries of "yes.") Then we'll elect John C. Fremont. (Tremendous applause, during which Mr. Law thrusts his hands in his pockets, and smiles benignly.) There is now a candidate before the people on whom we can rely for this great deed. (Applause.)

Mr. Law once more thrusts his hands in his pockets—he had abstracted them to give effect to the last sentence—turns his back soberly upon the audience, and returns to his seat on the back benches, saluted as he goes with cheers and good humored demonstrations of applause.

FACTS THAT SHOULD BE KNOW.

AN OPINION AND ITS BASIS.

Dr. Maloun, a French physician, is said to have been so fond of drugging the sick, that when one of his patients had swallowed a dozen or two of his prescriptions without wincing, he seized the poor victim's hand in an ecstacy of admiration, exclaiming, "My dear sir, it really affords me pleasure to attend you—you deserve to be ill." The remedial system of Prof. Holloway, with whose fame all the world is ringing, is in beautiful contrast with this wholesale indiscriminating use of the materia medica. It comprehends only two preparations—but they would seem to include the antidotes for nearly all maladies. As a case in point, (for we cannot discuss so vast a subject in a couple of paragraphs,) we may instance the extraordinary success of Holloway's pills in fever and ague. This complaint, we are informed by medical men, has greatly extended its ravages of late years, and assumed a more malignant form. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that it prevails in every section of the country at this saason, and in the fall, and that it baffles the skill of our most eminent medical men. One of its worst features is, that it paralyzes industry at the busiest seasons of the year, and if not fatal in itself, lays the foundation of many dangerous disorders. A remedy, therefore, that will at once break the chills and restore the strength and energy of the patient, must be of inappreciable value in our agricultural districts. Friends upon whom we can rely and who have had full opportunities to form a correct judgment, ifform us that Holloway's pills are a positive specific for the complaint. They have been tried in the rice fields and cotton plantations of the South, in the valleys of the Ohio and the Mississippi, on the unhealthy banks of Red River, on the Western prairies, and among the cane breaks and swamps of Louisiana and Texas, with the same happy results; and multitudes who have heretofore trusted to quinine and other dangerous curatives, and found them of little or no use, now rely entirely upon this powerful yet harmless vegetable remedy.

We state these facts, derived from competent sources, as matters of general interest. It has become of late years so much a matter of course to extol every new remedy that came up, that the respectable journalist requires proof as the basis of his commendation. We have taken the precaution of examining the credentials of Prof. Holloway's preparotions before endorsing them, and with the consentaneous testimony of half Europe to sustain the result of our own inquiries here, we feel no hesitation in sending this article to our readers.—(Texas News.)

It has been mentioned at Lloyd's, in London, as a most remarkable occurrence, that the last set of Australian steamers and packet-ships have arrived at Cork and Kinsale a full week before their stoppage at Liverpool. The White Star packet-ship Sardinia, arrived at Kinsale from Melbourne; and, for the first time, the mail-bags in several wagons and vans—and intelligence of the arrival of upwards of £200,000 in gold—was transmitted by Irish railways to Dublin, and thence to London. It now remains, the Limerick Chronicle suggests, for the Irish government to turn their attention to establishing a permanent packet-station for the passengers and mails either at Kinsale or Cork. Passengers, as in the case of Miss Catherine Hayes and Dr. Scoresby, who arrived by the preceding Australian packets, are always anxious to land on terra firma, and see something of Ireland.

OBITUARY.

Died in Boston, on the 12th inst., MICHAEL J. PLUNKET, son of Michael and Mary Plunket, aged 11 years.

The deceased was a scholar, attached to the Sunday school of Father Walsh, in Albany street, and is deeply regretted by his young friends and associates.

Although of tender years, he was endowed with wisdom and knowledge far exceeding the average of youth of his age; his death was sudden and unexpected, which sends still greater affliction to the hearts of his beloved parents, and his surviving brothers and sisters—yet they are consoled that he died in the odor of sanctity.

But a few hours before his death he requested his mother to send for Father Haley quickly, for he was going to die, and after having received the last consolations of religion, his spirit, too pure for this deceitful world, winged its flight to that blessed country, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Weep not for me, gentle Mother!
Sister! shed no tears for me;
The longest day is short, Brother!
Then haste! prepare to follow me.
Prepare to meet me, on that day,
When the world shall all in ashes lay;
And when the last dread trump shall sound,
Oh! may we then with Christ be found.

THE KEY STONE CLUB IN NEW-YORK.

We take advantage of the delay in getting to press, to mention that the gallant Key Stone Club that has taken so active a position in the battle which has been fought and won in Pennsylvania, returned the visit of the Empire Club of this city on Tuesday. The Club numbered over 200 men, carried appropriate banners, and were accompanied by a splendid band. The Democratic Clubs of New-York turned out in great force to give their brethren of Philadelphia an appropriate welcome.

The day was fine, and the streets were filied with citizens gathered to witness the procession, which, after marching through the principal thoroughfares, filed through the Park, and proceeded to the Governor's room, where they were received by the Mayor, whom they hailed with enthusiastic cheers.

In the afternoon a deputation from the Keystone Club did us the honor of visiting the Irish News Office, and we were happy to hear from them that the majority in Pennsylvania for Buchanan in November will be rolled up seven-fold.

The big gun of the Empire Club thundered out a glorious welcome. There was a great meeting in the Park in the evening, eloquent speeches were delivered, and there was decidedly a glorious time for the Democracy of the Empire City.

DIED.

On Friday the 17th inst., at her residence 118 East Thirty-seventh street, after a long and severe illness, which she bore with Christian resignation, in her 36th year, Maria, the beloved wife of Michael Quinn, late of 36 Lower Camden street, Dublin.

Her remains were followed to Calvary Cemetery by a large concourse of friends and relatives by whom she was much esteemed and beloved.

Dublin and San Francisco papers please copy.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellec ual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

MR. WALLACK will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," MISS AGNES ROBERTSON, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,
WITH A POWERFUL
Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes.....50 cents | Pit.....12½ cents.
Gallery.....12½ cents. | Orchestra Stalls.....50 cents.
Private Boxes.....Five Dollars.
Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,

Opposite Niblo's Garden,

Every night this week, will be produced, by particular request, the grand burlesque opera of

TROVATORE,

in three acts, and all the principal scenes.

Preceding which—

NEGRO MINSTRELSY,

of a superior order.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 1-2 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

In rehearsal—

DRED; OR, THE DISMAL SWAMP.

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL
OF THE
EMMET LIFE GUARD.
ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,

At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.

Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the GUARD and at this office.

☞ The LIFE GUARD pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by by them to produce the best Ball of the season.

Capt. T. Lynch, Chairman.

A. O'TOOLE, Sec'y.
JAMES WATSON, Treasurer. oct11

CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Lectures for 1856.

DR. MCELHERAN will lecture on the Phisiognomy of the white races of men in America, illustrated with Portraits and Cranial Forms, at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Thursday evening October 23, at 8 o'clock.

Tickets 25 cents; can be had of Dunigan & Brother, Sadlier & Co., P. O'Shea, 789 Broadway; and at the door on the evening of the Lecture.

oct18 2t

LECTURE

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE CAPT. KERRIGAN
BY
THOS. FRANCIS MEAGHER.
SUBJECT:
The Irish Lancers in South America.

At the TABERNACLE on Monday Evening, November 17.

Tickets 25 cents.

The Rev. Dr. Moriarty Lectures throughout this week at the Church of the "STAR OF THE SEA," Brooklyn.

Tickets of admission to each Lecture, which begins at 7½ P. M., 25 cents. For sale at this Office.

American News.

An accident, says the Toronto Globe, has cast a gloom over many circles in our community. Two young gentlemen, Mr. Selby Cameron, of the firm of R. D. McI'herson & Co., and Mr. J. L. Talbot, barrister, embarked in a skiff for the purpose of visiting one of the houses at Sunnyside, recently purchased by Mr. Cameron. It is not known how the boat was upset, but they were seen by persons living near the Humber, clinging to the boat, which was floating bottom upwards and drifting from the shore. No boat could be procured to go to their rescue, and they were soon beyond the view of the spectators. There were sailing vessels not far off, when the accident happened, and there is a possibility, to which hope still clings, that they may have been rescued, and are now on their way to some distant port on the lake. Mr. Talbot was the eldest son of Mr. H. W. Talbot, proprietor of the Leinster Express, Dublin. He was trained for the Irish bar, but, on the conclusion of his studies last spring, he emigrated to Canada, and had made all the necessary arrangements to pursue his profession in Toronto.

The Newark Advertiser says the humbug of Captain Kidd's treasure has been revived. Mr. Harrington, the celebrated diver, having been applied to by a person in New-Jersey, who pretends to have an instrument that will unvaryingly point out metal, even if it were 300 feet under water, and with the use of which, he says, he has found the safe of the steamer Lexington and also the long-sought-for "Kidd vessel," which lies ten feet under the mud, and with about twelve feet of water over that besides.

An extract of a letter from Rome mentions a fatal accident as having occurred to the Rev. James O'Reilly, a Roman Catholic clergyman of the diocese of Hartford, Conn. Mr. OReilly was in feeble health and was recommended to bathe in the Sulphur Lake, near Tivoli. Being an excellent swimmer, he ventured beyond the limits of safety, and, overcome by the exhalations of the lake, perished. His body was found but life was extinct.

Some of the crack oarsmen of New-York have challenged the Union Club, St. John's, N. B., to engage in another encounter for $2,000. The crew is considered superior to that which was lately defeated on Charles River. The Halifax Boat Club, in answer to the recent challenge of the St. John Club, express a wish to meet the clubs of New-York, Boston and St. John's in this city, next summer, each putting up $1,000.

At a camp meeting on the 6th inst., at Shady Grove, Tenn., thirty-five persons who had dined at the tent of Mr. J. F. Shaffel, wene taken sick with the usual symptoms of having taken poison, and the Negro woman died. The rest are recovering, and it is supposed that the poison was prepared by a Negro belonging to the family.

Female wages in California continue very high. Advertisements in San Francisco papers offer $60 a month, and $40 for a girl. A letter says—"It would astonish you to see some of our servant girls in full rig in Montgomery street. A $75 blue velvet dress, a $30 bonnet, gold chain and big cameos to match, are not at all unfrequent.

Ex-Judge T. C. Haliburton has taken a final farewell of Nova Scotia, as a place of residence. Clifton, his beautiful seat at Windsor, was sold some weeks since, and the old Judge has taken his passage for Liverpool, to make his home in Great Britain for the remainder of his days.

The steamer City of Savannah sprung a leak during a violent gale, on Tuesday last, when off Cape Hatteras, on her passage from Savannah to Baltimore, and in spite of the exertions of the crew, she sank on Thursday. The officers and crew were taken off by the bark Sylph, and arrived at Baltimore on Saturday night.

The clock business of Connecticut, which has been driven so extensively for several years, has completely run down. These clocks have been sent to every part of the world, and amongst the largest markets for them were Great Britain and China.

The "Calliope," or steam-organ, which of late has attracted some attention, is to be introduced upon several Western railroads.

November 20th has been appointed by the Governors of the states of Maryland and Missouri as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

THE PRESS ON BUCHANAN.

The recent State elections indicate the complete triumph of the Democratic party in November. The N.Y. Herald of Sunday morning says:—

"The late result in Pennsylvania, in connection with the unexpected success of the Democracy in Indiana, indicate pretty clearly the election of James Buchanan as our next President by a handsome majority of the Electoral College."

The Daily News says—"The official returns received from Pennsylvania confirm us in the belief that the Democratic majority in the State will certainly reach 6,000 or 7,000. Of the 25 Members of Congress elected, 15 are Democrats, a gain over the present number of 9, and both branches of the Legislature are Democratic. Never was a battle more boldly fought or more nobly won than that of Pennsylvania.

"In Ohio, the Democracy have also done nobly. A large majority against us is conceded, but they have elected six certain, and probably eight members of Congress, which are all gains.

"In Indiana, we have swept the board; carried Governor by about 5,000 majority; Lieut.-Governor, both branches of the Legislature, which secures us a U. S. Senator; and six certain of the eleven members of Congress. The House as well as the Senate of the United States is now safe."

"The first returns from Pennsylvania," says the N. Y. Daily Times, "do not wear a very brilliant look for the Fusion ticket; but then they do not come from that section of the State where the Democratic opposition had anticipated a triumph, though the Democratic gains are suspiciously large. It is not safe to judge from present appearances. The Buchaniers, however, are making the most of what they have got thus far, and are rather cheery in their demonstrations of joy."

Under the caption of Fright of the Fremonters the N. Y. Herald of Monday the 20th inst., states:—We have received several letters from various quarters, severely reflecting upon our course in telling the exact truth in relation to the present campaign, and which truths have, it seems, created a tremendous panic in the Fremont camp.

The searching scrutiny, says the Detroit Free Press, to which Mr. Buchanan's private and public life have been subjected since his nomination to the Presidency, marked as it has been with unsparing malignity in too many instances, has resulted in inspiring his friends with increased confidence in his exalted qualifications for the responsible duties to which the voice of the nation is soon to call him. His private life presents a character in which virtue, morality, fidelity and frankness are beautifully combined. Malignity itself has been unable to discover even a trace of any characteristic inconsistent with the purest integrity. He is, emphatically and confessedly, an "honest man," and therefore stands upon the only sure pedestal of true greatness. No public man has ever undergone a more severe ordeal, and none has ever had more cause to congratulate himself that he has made virtue the polar star by which he has governed his long career. Passing from his private to his public record, we speak but the sentiment of thousands of our countrymen when we say that Mr. Buchanan stands to-day on a more elevated platform as a statesman than he did when his friends and his foes turned back, after his nomination, to study his political character in a series of public services covering more than forty years. The examination of his record has baffled the hopes of his enemies, while it has increased greatly the admiration and confidence of his friends. The investigation proves this general and material fact, that Mr. Buchanan has taken his position on all the great questions that have arisen, since he first entered the Federal Legislature, with a degree of deliberation, and after such mature examination and reflection, that, after a lapse of more than thirty years, the impartial man rises from the retrospect with the conviction that he has been a wise and consistent statesman.

The South, says a contemporary, which has ever been Democratic, supports the Democratic candidates, not as sectional, but as constitution loving men. Her reasons are brief. 1. They maintain State equality, and a faithful adherence to the stipulations of the Constitution. 2. They present the only rallying point for national men to beat down the enemies of our peace and of the Constitution. 3. They combine elements, which once dissolved, can never be re-united upon the basis of a defensive alliance with the South in maintaining the principles of the Union of our Fathers.

The following papers in California support Buchanan and Breckinridge. They present a battery capable of great execution, being the leading papers of California in ability and circulation:—Daily San Francisco Sun, Daily San Francisco Globe, Daily Stockton Republican, Daily State Journal, Daily Marysville Express, Daily Batte Record, Weekly State Journal, Weekly Express, Weekly Shasta Courier, Weekly Sierra Democrat, Weekly Trinity Times, Weekly Galaveras Chronicle, Weekly Columbia Gazette, Weekly Mariposa Democrat, Weekly Placer Herald. Making in all a total of seven dailies and nine weeklies, or sixteen in all.

BIRTH.

October 11, at Bloomington, Illinois, the lady of John P. Hely, Civil Engineer, of a son.

Kilkenny Journal please copy.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At Monkstown, Edward, son of the late Jeffrey Browning, of Caras Court, in the county Limerick, to Eliza, daughter of the late R. T. Mahony, of Blessington street.

At Brentigby, Leicestershire, James Fletcher Corbett, of Rock House, Gloucestershire, to Clarissa, daughter of the late St. George Gregg of Dublin.

At Millbrook, near Southampton, John Easther, to Lavini Theresa, relict of George F. C. Coleman.

At Tewkesbury, John W. Fletcher, of Upton upon Severn, to Caroline Chambers, only daughter of Humphrey Brown, M. P.

At St. Andrew's Church, Westland-row, Thomas Kinlan, of Grafton street, to Mary, daughter of the late Denis Connell, of Nassau street.

In St. Peter's Church, the Rev. R. J. Moffett, Chaplain of St. Stephen's, to Margaret Elizabeth, daughter of F. Higginson, of Burlington-road.

At Queenstown church, Captain Frederick Charles Hanson, of the steam screw ship Dodo, to Hannah, daughter of Edward Burke, Russian Consul of the same port.

At the Friends' Meeting House, Limerick, Thomas Fisher, of Dublin, to Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Robinson, of Limerick.

At Killough Castle, John Edward Venables Vernon, of Clontarf Castle, county Dublin, to the Hon. Rosa Gertrude Harriet Daly, daughter of the late Lord Dunsandle.

At the Meeting House of the First Presbyterian Congregation, Thomas Garrett, of Belfast, Solicitor, to Mary, daughter of Wm. Burden, M. D., Professor of Queen's College, Belfast.

John Emanuel O'Farrell, 24 Blessington street, Dublin, Solicitor (Clerk of the Crown, county Longford,) to Maria, daughter of John M'Manus, of Gurteen House, county Longford.

At St. Michael's Chapel, Limerick, John Hanrahan, George street, grocer and wine merchant, to Christiana, daughter of the late Thomas Ryan, John street.

At Taney church, county Dublin, George Philips, of Dublin, to Mary, daughter of the late William Allen, of Leefield, Staffordshire, and niece of William Dargan.

George Mansfield, to Mary, daughter of D. Walsh, of Manglin, Ballincollig.

At Cork, John H. Hartnett, to Mrs. Margaret Holland, both of Cork.

At Tuam, John Ferguson, of Castleblakeny, to Miss Kelly, daughter of Martin Kelly, of Carramoneen.

At Claregalway, Francis P. Monahan, San Francisco, California, to Teresa, Delia, daughter of James O'Brien, of Loughgeorge, county Galway.

At Headford church, George St. George Tyner, to Isabella, daughter of the Hon. and Very Rev. Robert Plunkett, Dean of Tuam.

At St. Pancras Church, London, William R. Unthank, of George street, Limerick, to Hannah, daughter of the late Robert Hatton, of Lee-bank, Cork.

At Rathfarnham church, Robert Henry, son of H. Peare, Pear Mount, county Dublin, to Amelia Elinor, daughter of Thomas Stratford, J. P., Eyre Villa, county Galway.

IRISH DEATHS.

At Dublin, Andrew George Malcolm, M. D.

At Sirmount, county Cork, aged 95 years, S. M'Carthy.

At 5 Parliament street, Dublin, Mrs. Rebecca M'Lean, aged 79 years.

Catherine, eldest daughter of the late Dr. Speer, of Ardee.

In Tralee, Jane, relict of John Crumpe, Surgeon.

At 5 North William street, Dublin, James Murphy.

At 26 Summer Hill, Isabella, relict of Edward Duncan, formerly of Dublin.

At Blackrock, Catherine, relict of T. Falkiner, of Oberstown Hill, Naas.

At Airfield, St. Dolough's, aged 90 years, Sir Edmund Nugent.

At Kingstown, Mary, wife of the Rev. Henry B. Poer.

At Lodge Park, Straffin, Arthur Henry.

At Bushfield, Robert Fair, aged 64 years.

At Dublin, Benjamin, son of Benjamin Norwood, of Nelson street.

Soulden, son of Lieutenant Oakeley, 55th Regiment.

At Boulogne, Alexander Clendining.

At Blackrock, Cornelius Curtin.

At Bandon, Stewart James Tresilian, M. D.

At Shuttle Hill, Coleraine, Richard Yates, aged 62 years.

Matilda Evans, daughter of the late John Evans, of Strabane.

John Hamilton, senr., Esq., Surgeon, in his 67th year.

At Holywell street, Milbank, John Bernard Sale, in his 78th year.

In Wimpole street, Cork, Sophia Elizabeth, daughter of the late Charles Rousseau Burney, of Bath, and niece to Madame O'Arblay, in the 78th year of her age.

At Skerries, county Dublin, the wife of Nathaniel A. Hamilton, of 39 Lower Dominick street.

At Comaher, county Westmeath, Thomas M. Vignoles, son of the Very Rev. the Dean of Ossory.

At Bridport, killed by accidentally falling from the cliffs east of the harbor, Ada, daughter of George Symes, M. D., in the 18th year of her age.

At her son's residence, 17 Kildare street, Dublin, Mary, relict of George Dean Holmes, in the 75th year of her age.

At Elvidge's Hotel, Kildare street, Dublin, Christopher Clarges Patrickson, late Colonel 43d Regiment.

At Stepney, at an advanced age, Edmond Fennell, formerly of the extensive firm of John Meade Thomas, and Edmond Fennell.

At the Parsonage, St. Helen's, Lancashire, Anne, the wife of the Rev. Doctor Carr. She was sister of Samuel Cooper, of Killenure castle.

At Spout road, Nenagh, Michael Cronin, Carpenter.

In Peter street, Nenagh, Mrs. Magrath, relict of James Magrath.

At Ringdufferin, Jane, daugter of the late Ross Mahon, of Castlegar, county Galway.

In Dublin, the beloved wife of Capt. Lewin, of Cloghan House, county Mayo.

In London, Mrs. Clarke, wife of Michael Clarke, late of Limerick.

At Blackrock, Lucy, relict of Thomas Lynch, late of Patrick's Hill, Cork.

At Ballycotton, Honoria Emily, daughter of John Wilkinson, of Cloyne house.

At Athy, James Ryan.

At Maryborough, Mark Morgan.

Charlotte Wilhelmina, relict of Westby Percival, of Knightsbrook, county Meath, and Carrickmakeegan, county Leitrim, J. P., and daughter of Major General Thomas Hawkshaw, H. E. I. C. S.

At Monck street, Wexford, at the venerable age of 81 years, John Roche.

At Slaney street, Enniscorthy, Nannie and Robert, children of Michael O'Dempsey.

Special Notices.

Information Wanted of Andrew Arthur, Gunmaker, lately of Petaluma, California, supposed to be in Nicaragua; was formerly in Walker's expedition to Sonora. Information addressed to M. Arthur, 95 Cranberry stre et, Brooklyn, or this Office, will be thankfully received.
California papers will please copy. oct11

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, Broche and Woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, Woollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c.

ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street,
oct4 3mos and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

Political.

7TH WARD.—TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATS AND CITIZENS GENERALLY OF THE SEVENTH WARD.—Awake to your rights and put down the frauds and violence of primary elections.

The committee appointed by the Democratic Electors of the Seventh Ward, opposed to the present corrupt and demoralizing scenes perpetrated at our primary elections, present the following ticket for the suffrages of the Democratic Electors of the Ward, at the election to be held on the 4th of November, 1856; and in thus doing, we call upon you to sustain this ticket composed of gentlemen respected alike for ther integrity as citizens, and well qualified to discharge with honor and ability the duties of the offices for which they have been respectively nominated, and who condemn the present mode of conducting our primary elections, which but express the voice of ballot-box stuffers and not the wishes of the people.

SEVENTH WARD NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

FOR ASSEMBLY,
THOMAS H. FARRAN.
FOR ALDERMAN,
SAMUEL HURLEY.
FOR ASSESSOR,
RICHARD O. GRADY.
FOURTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT,
PETER ZEGLIO.
FIFTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
JAMES L. JOHNSON.
SIXTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
ABRAHAM BROWER.
SCHOOL COMMISSIONER,
GEORGE W. FARLEY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN MURPHY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN WAGONER.
INSPECTOR,
OWEN McCABE.
CONSTABLES,
CHRISTOPHER F. KLENCK, MICHAEL SHANDLEY.

M. T. RUNYAN, Secretary. M. DOUGHERTY, Chairman.
October 18. 3t.

FIRST WARD

Democratic Republican Regular Nomination.

FOR ALDERMAN,

oct18 WILLIAM WILSON. 3t

Daguerreotypes.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY's establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY's colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. GURNEY's plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY's Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

FACTS
THAT NEED NO MARKING.
Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. FREDRICKS, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of several of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. GURNEY, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After succeesfully fellowing his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

FACTS WHICH ARE KNOWN.—PHOTOGRAPHS, DAGUERREOTYPES, AMBROTYPES, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of business, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhibted. Those desiring Photograps, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M. CHARLES D. FREDRICKS,
Late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, No. 585 Broadway
oct11 3mos opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y.
JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Fawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill.
CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York; also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y21june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Stics, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

Improved Billiard Tables and Cushions.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this conntry, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 13, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug23 10t

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, August 12 1856.—To the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York:—Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the general election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to-wit:—

A Governor, in the place of Myron H. Clark.
A Lieutenant-Governor, in the place of Henry J. Raymond.
A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Cornelius Gardiner.
An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Thomas Kirkpatrick.
A Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Benjamin F. Harwood, deceased.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.
Thirty-five Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.
A Representative in the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States for the Third Congressional district, composed of the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Eighth wards in the city and county of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fourth Congressional district, composed of the Fourth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourteenth wards of the said city and county.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fifth Congressional district, composed of the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of the said city and county, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth wards in the city of Brooklyn, in the county of King's.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Sixth Congressional district, composed of the Eleventh, Fifteenth and Seventeeth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, composed of the Ninth, Sixteenth and Twentieth wards of the city of New-York.
Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Eighth Congressional district, composed of the Twelfth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second wards of the city of New-York.
City and county officers are also to be elected:—
A Mayor, in the place of Fernando Wood.
A City Judge, in the place of Elisha S. Capron.
Two Governors of the Almshouse, in the places of Isaac Bell, jr., and Simeon Draper.
Also, sixteen members of Assembly for said city and county.
All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.

Your's respectfully, N. P. STANTON, Jr.,
Deputy Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, New-York, August 20, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET, Sheriff of the City and County of New-York.

All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, chap 6, title 3, article 3, part 1, page 140.
aug30

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicines.

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

DRS. GILBERT AND KENNEDY,

TREAT

CANCERS, TUMORS, ULCERS, &c.,

WITHOUT SURGICAL OPERATIONS.

OFFICE 746 BROADWAY, COR. ASTOR PLACE, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES FROM

Ex Gov. T. M. Tucker.	Hon. T. Butler King.	Judge Alex. Walker.
Judge F. W. Hugling.	Gen. Narcisso Lopez.	Col. Maunsel White.
Capt. Isaiah Sellers.	Capt. Wm. Leathers.	Thos. E. Bond, M. D.
A. S. Baldwin, M. D.	W. P. Allison, M. D.	J. S. Peacocke, M. D.

PERMISSION TO REFER TO

Ex Gov. James C. Jones. Hon. Frederick B. Stanton.
B. F. Palmer, Inventor of "Palmer's Artificial Leg."
Francis Grice, Naval Constructor, Navy Yard, Philadelphia.
Proprietors of the Girard House, Philadelphia.

☞ Send for a Pamphlet! oct18 4t

Special Notices.

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.
JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept13

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until every has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 18 tf

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 80 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

PROPOSED DATES OF SAILING.

FROM NEW-YORK.		FROM LIVERPOOL.
Saturday	Oct. 11	Wednesday	Oct. 1
Saturday	Oct. 25	Wednesday	Oct. 15

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING,
ROBERT J. DILLON,
HUGH KELLY,
} Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 185, 187 and 189 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1856. NO. 30.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXX.

Editorial.

THE CONSTITUTION AND FATATICISM—THE FOREIGN VOTE.
JOHN MITCHEL ON THE DEVIN REILLY TESTIMONIAL,
FREEDOM'S NEXT BATTLE-FIELD.
CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.
THE ENGLISH NOMINEE.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part V.—By Garland O'Halloran.—Modern Greek Literature—Lit. and Art Items.

Correspondence.

Letter of Bishop England on Slavery—Letter from Dublin, on the Campaign, by "Kilmainham."

Poetry.

Fineen Dhu's Prophecy—by F. O'R.

Miscellaneous.

Celts and Saxons, Dr. McEleheran's Lecture—D. F. McCarthy on the monument to Tommy Moore—Celebrated Irishmen, Honest Tom Steele—Walk through Wexford—Reminiscences of other days—Old New-York—Reminiscences and Death of a Victim of '98—News from all parts of the world, &c.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $3.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Now Ready!

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET,

By DR. R. R. MADDEN,

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil.

AND A MEMOIR OF

Thomas Addis Emmet.

with a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo., cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF CLONCURRY.
MADDEN'S UNITED IRISHMEN.
SAVAGE'S '98 AND '48.
GILBERT'S STREETS OF DUBLIN.
FITZPATRICK'S LIFE OF CLONCURRY.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.
LIFE OF O'DWYER THE OUTLAW.
MOORE'S LETTERS TO MACKENZIE.
LIFE OF ROBERT HOLMES. By Savage.
LIFE OF CORBETT.
B. P. BINNS' LETTERS.
GRATTAN'S LIFE. By his Son.
PHILLIPS' RECOLLECTIONS OF CURRAN.
JOHN BINN'S LIFE.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
MACNEVIN'S PIECES OF IRISH HISTORY.
MAGOON'S AMERICAN ORATORS.
CURRAN'S LIFE. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.
oct18 tf

MONEY SAVED

IN BUYING BOOKS ON THE GIFT PRINCIPLE.

Great Sale of Books at $1 each, Which includes Wolks sold at $1 25.

A GIFT WITH EVERY BLO.

Orders from the country will be sent by Mail or Express, with dispatch.

☞ Catalogues of the Books and Gifts send to any address.

oct18 6t J. S. Andrews, 140 Nassau street, N. Y.

THE BOOK FOR THE TIMES!

Eleventh edition now ready.

WELL'S ILLUSTRATED NATIONAL HANDBOOK,

EMBRACING

THE Lives of Fillmore, Donelson, Fremont, Dayton, Buchanan, and Breckinridge, with lifelike Portraits of each.
Platforms of the American, Republican, and Democratic Parties.
Lives of all the Ex-Presidents, with elegant Portraits of each.
View of the new Capitol at Washington.
Electoral votes for President and Vice President, from 1789 to 1856.
The important incidents connected with each Administration.
Declaration of Independence.
Constitution of the United States.
Washington's Four Principal Addresses.
Missouri Compromise.
Fugitive Slave Law.
Kansas and Nebraska Act.
Formation of the Original American Union.
Great Seal of the United States, with description.
Seals of the Thirty-one States, with description.
Population of the United States at decennial periods.
Congress of the United States, etc. etc. etc.

☞ It contains Fifty-two Illustrations, is printed on extrafine paper, and handsomely bound in muslin. Price 50 cents. Sent postpaid.

J. G. Wells, publishing agent, 11 Beekman street, New-York, Depot for Books, Maps, Charts, &c., suited to the sales of Agents.

Special Notices.

Attention!—"Irish News Guard."—The Company meet for drill and admission of members for their first annual Target Excursion, on Tuesday evening of each week at the "Eagle Drill Rooms," corner of Chrystie and Delancey streets. The GUARD cordially invite additions to its ranks.

P. J. WALL, Sec'y E. K. Butler, Captain.

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX, is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities of the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its genera appearance, as well as to the chasteness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

The work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,
Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

Special Notices.

AGENCY OF NICARAGUA, NO. 347 BROADWAY.—The undersigned having been appointed by the Government of Nicaragua GENERAL EMIGRANT AGENT in the United States, has established a permanent Agency at 347 Broadway, Room No. 2, up stairs. All persons desirous of obtaining information of any kind concerning Nicaragua, will receive prompt attention by addressing the undersigned, personally or by letter, at the office of the Agent.

The price of passage to Emigrants has been fixed at a very low figure; and for those without means, arrangements have been made with the Nicaragua Emigration Company to advance the price of passage, upon the transfer of a part of the land granted to each emigrant by the government of Nicaragua. This secures to Emigrants a large grant of land and a free passage to Nicaragua.

The splendid steamship TEXAS, will sail from Pier No. 35, foot of Barclay street, North River, for SAN JUAN DEL NORTE, on Friday, the 24th of October, at 3 o'clock, P. M., and all persons desirous of emigrating to that beautiful country, are advised to make early application at the agency.

Alexander C. Lawrence, Gen'l. Emigration Agent
oct25 tf of Nicaragua for the United States.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 13, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug28 10t

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $180; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $325. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. ap26 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt.	J. W. Porter.
Neptune	"	E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	"	E. Young.
Isaac Webb	"	J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	"	W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	"	T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	"	E. Abeel.
Columbia	"	C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	"	W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	"	C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

☞ Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr., | Manhattan,
Great Western, | Neptune,
Harvest Queen, | Columbia,
Isaac Webb, | Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright, | Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $80; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS
ON
BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my8 1y

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Bóller and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 139 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and subtsantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for ONLY ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 31 PARK ROW, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.

N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2.

sept6 3mos Conklin Smith.

European News.

The news from Europe to the 11th inst., brought by the Arabia, is unimportant. There have been no new developments in reference to Naples, or the other vexed questions which disturb the diplomats and monarchs. Everything is in an uncertain, unstable position, and the interruption of the hollow truce, concluded at Paris, and the breaking out of a more formidable war than that recently closed on the shores of the Black Sea, seems to be generally expected at no distant day.

The Collins steamship Atlantic, from New-York on the 27th of September, arrived out at Liverpool, on Thursday, the 9th inst.

The steamship Canadian, from Quebec, arrived at Liverpool on the 8th inst.

GREAT BRITAIN.—Parliament has been further prorogued to November 30th.

The English Telegraph Companies gave a grand banquet to Professor Morse in London on the 9th. W. F. Cooke, Esq., presided, and Mr. Cyrus W. Field, of New-York, was one of the honored guests.

Prof. Morse has succeeded in telegraphing over the united wires of the magnetic telegraph of the English and Irish Company, a distance of 2,000, miles at the rate of two hundred and ten signals per minute, thus proving the practicability of an Atlantic communication.

FRANCE.—The monthly return of the Bank of France shows a decrease of bullion equal to two and a half million pounds sterling, but the deficit has not caused so much depression as was anticipated.

The Congress for the settlement of the points of disagreement between Prussia and the Allies will forthwith assemble in Paris, at the Hotel of Foreign Affairs. It is anticipated that the whole matter will be arranged in one or two sittings.

Telegraphic accounts say that the Austrians, 4,000 strong, have occupied Galatz, and other points on the Danube. If this is true, and Turkey has consented to the occupation, the Danubian Commissioners will return home. It is, however, expected that Austria will be called on to evacuate the Principalities at once, by the Congress at Paris, and that she can adopt no other course than obey.

Intelligence has been received in Paris, that orders have been given to a Russian squadron to prepare for sea, and that the destination of this squadron is Naples. Of course, with such a demonstration we can have nothing to do. If the Emperor of Russia chooses to send his ships to Naples or elsewhere, so he does not violate the Treaty of Paris we have not the slightest title to challenge the exercise of his discretion. This demonstration either means nothing or something. If nothing, the sham will soon be found out; if something, all we can say is, that the Russians are welcome to set sail for the Bay of Naples whenever they please, and to stay there as long as they can. The only direct effect of the demonstration will probably be, that the French and English Governments may think it necessary to increase the number of their ships upon the Neapolitan station. Such is the present aspect of this affair."

Mr. Crampton has been made a Knight Commander of the Bath, as a tribute to his enlistment services in America.

The Ericsson which arrived on Friday brings no later dates than those previously received by the Persia.

The Viceroy of Egypt has determined to establish steam communication between various points on the shores of the Red Sea, and has chartered a steam navigation company, with a capital of ten millions, of which the Government will furnish three millions.

ITALY.—The direct news from Naples to the 29th ult., intimates that the king is still determined to resist all demands and remonstrances, but some of the German papers report that he has been induced to make certain concessions, and that De Martini, the Austrian ambassador at Naples, will, it is hoped, complete what Baron de Hubner has commenced. Martini is the bearer of an autograph letter from Francis Joseph to the King of Naples, in which he is implored, in the name of the relationship of the two courts, not to draw down misfortune, not only on Naples, but on the whole of Italy. Meantime, Ferdinand has sent, or is about to send, a very voluminous dispatch to the European powers, containing a defence of himself and his government. The opinion, however, is becoming more general that the Neapolitan question will be settled without a hostile demonstration, notwithstanding that rumors to the contrary continue to be perseveringly circulated.

Two English ships of war, with Admiral Dundas on board, were at Ajaccio, and more were expected.

The French fleet continued at Toulon.

A strong Russian fleet commanded by the Grand Duke Constantine, is to go into the Mediterranean, merely as a guard of honor to the Empress mother, in her tour in Italy.

A Spanish fleet is on hand, merely as police of the Spanish Islands.

The Austrian squadron is to cruise in the Adriatic, solely for exercise.

A letter from Rome in the Weekly Register, written during the early part of last month, says:—"The dear old Jesuits still sit early and late in their confessionals, and preach away in heavy cloaks as in cold weather. As Padre Curci said, when preaching during the Novena of St. Ignotius—'Have patience, my good people—I know you feel the heat; but if you suffer sitting still, how must I feel it preaching.' Even most of the German historic painters have deserted Rome this summer; there is not a studio to go to, scarcely, if one had the energy to attempt it. Ovenbeck is away at Perugi, Cornelius at Frascati, Seitz, at Castello, Szoldatics in Hungary. Only Flaiz remains, busily engaged in a splendid picture which will one day figure as an altar piece in a chapel built by a noble-hearted individual somewhere in the north of England.

SWITZERLAND.—M. De Salinac Fenelon, the French Ambassador to the Swiss Confederation, paid an official visit, on the 1st inst., to M. Stampeli, the President of the Confederation, for the purpose of asking from him, in the name of the French Government, an amnesty for the Royalists of Neufchatel. It is believed that the Federal Government would assent to this only on condition that the King of Prussia shall renounce his claim on the Principality.

DENMARK.—The Fatherland newspaper, not a good authority, announces that the question of the Sound Dues is settled.

England and Denmark have come to an agreement that the Land Transit is to be reduced.

TURKEY.—Uneasiness is felt for the tranquillity of Syria. There is nothing of importance from Turkey proper.

INDIA.—The Indian Government has opened a new four-and-a-half per cent. loan for an unlimited amount, which had disturbed the money market.

AUSTRALIA.—At Melbourne, wet weather had caused a temporary depression in trade, and there was a decrease in the gold production, but there were signs of a revival, and a season of more activity was looked forward to.

IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA—TWO BATTLES FOUGHT—WALKER VICTORIOUS.

A summary of the news brought by the Tennessee from Nicaragua has been telegraphed from New-Orleans. We are without details, but there is enough to show that General Walker has triumphed over the combined forces of the enemy, and completely routed them in two pitched battles. We expect interesting details of both engagements from Lieutenant Nagle in his next dispatch. The following are the particulars at hand:

General Walker finding the enemy advancing on Massaya, withdrew the small force there, when the enemy, 4,000 strong, occupied the town.

General Walker then left a small force at Granada, and advanced towards Massaya with 1,000 men, and meeting the enemy on the 12th inst., near the city, repulsed them, driving them back to Massaya, where a battle was fought, lasting until midnight.

At daylight a courier arrived from Granada, stating that 1,400 Guatemalans and natives were besieging Granada. Gen. Walker, on receiving this information, immediately marched to the relief of Granada, and arrived on the heights surrounding the city on the morning of the 13th, at ten o'clock, and finding the city barricaded by the whole force of the enemy, he charged upon them and drove them from their posts, capturing their commanders and all their field-pieces, and routing them from the city with great slaughter.

The total loss of the enemy was 1,100. General Walker's loss was 16 killed and 30 wounded.

General Walker would immediately march on Massaya and Leon. His troops were in the highest spirits.

The citizens of Granada held the government buildings 22 hours against the forces of the enemy, and were vigorously defending the place when General Walker arrived.

Messrs. Lawless, Wheeler and Ferguson, American citizens, who have had no connection with Nicaraguan affairs, were murdered by the natives.

REMINISCENCES OF OTHER DAYS.

OLD NEW-YORK.

Grant Thorburn, that relic of a by-gone generation, writes to the Home Journal, giving these curious reminiscences of New-York as he found it more than sixty years ago:

New-York was an old city in 1794—now, after a lapse of sixty-two years, it has assumed a new aspect, and looks like a new city. I first stepped upon American soil in that year, and as I landed from the ship at Governeur Wharf, Front-street crossed the head of the wharf, and South-street lay in the bottom of the river. The corner of Front and Wall-streets was occupied by John Jones, and the old Coffee House stood on the corner of Water and Wall-streets. Both sides of Wall-street, between Pearl and Nassau streets, were inhabited by "Uppertendom," such as General Hamilton, William Jauncey, McEvers, Barnwall, McVicker, Keese, and Mrs. Daubney, who entertained the members when Congress sat in the old Federal Hall, at the head of Broad street. Immediately after landing, I traversed Front street, from Cornwall to Moore streets, then called Canvass Town, near Whitehall Slip. It was here that the great fire commenced when Lord Howe held possession of the city. The conflagration swept both sides of Broadway, including Trinity Church, and extended nearly up to old St. Paul's. Canvass Town was inhabited by flocks of wild fowls, known by the name of Mother Carey's Chickens. They sang like nightingales, and often would the midshipmen from the fleet and the soldiers from the barracks congregate around the Whitehall dock and listen to the siren notes of their songs. But the fire consumed the boughs and branches which contained their nests, and left the trunks of the trees standing. The sailors then went and brought spars, ropes, and old sails from the ships, and covered the roofs, and the birds remained in their nests. Hence came the name of Canvass Town. As I entered Broad-street, near its foot stood the old Royal Exchange. On the ground-floor a butcher was selling beefsteaks—on the second story Gardiner Baker kept his museum; a dozen or more of Bergen "squatters" were trying to dispose of their stock of crabs, clams and muscles, and all were talking together and creating a compound jargon of High Dutch, Mohawk and African, accompanied by laughter loud and long, resounding towards the shores of Gibbet Island. On their sloops sat Conrad W. Ham, Wm. Nitchie, Abram Brinkerhoff, and Frederick Depuyster, with their genial rotundity and long pipes; true Dutch specimens, as described by Washington Irving—that is, like beer-barrels set on skids. There, too, sat Dr. Anthon, from the land of William Tell. He was my first family physician. A circumstance which transpired in connection with his attendance at the birth of my eldest child, I will relate simply for the benefit of mothers and nurses. When only a few days old my child began to scream, and soon fell into fits. I called in Dr. Anthon, who looked at the child and inquired when he was undressed.

"Not since he was born," said the nurse.

Immediately the pins were withdrawn, and the child sank at once into a profound sleep. The infant had grown to be a grandfather—his life having been preserved through the fidelity and thoughtfulness of Dr. Anthon. From him sprung a group of children and grandchildren, among whom are doctors at law, physic and divinity, many of whom are now living, and most worthy descendants of the great parent stock. On the east corner of Broad and Garden-streets (the latter Exchange-street now,) stood the ferry-house. In former days they steered and landed not at Pauld's Hook, but at Blazing-star—a landing-place further down the river. On the south corner of Wall and Broad-streets stood the watch-house—the only one in the city at that period. Then the old Dutch Church—Dr. Harper's—stood in a garden near William-street; Dr. Rodgers' church stood in Wall-street, near Broadway; the French Church was in Pine-street; Drs. Mason and Boymain were in Cedar-street, near William-street; between Broadway and William-street, near Cedar-street, was Dominie Labaugh; there was a German church in Nassua-street, near Fulton-street; there was a Moravian church in Fulton-street, (near where the Home Journal office now is), and Dr. Pilmore's church (Episcopal) stood in Ann-street, near William-street. Altogether there were nine churches, all located below the Park, mostly all of them swept away from the streets of the city, in the course of forty years! The City Hotel, which filled the space between Cedar and Thames-streets, I saw built in 1794; seven years ago it was transformed into a rag-fair. The sugar-house in Liberty-street, which stood a hundred years, and ought to have stood a thousand years more, is now filled with nothing but old rags. Nothing ancient is tolerated in New York. The old Brick Church, too, is to be levelled with the dust. There, sixty years ago, I heard Drs. Rogers and McKnight startle the walls of the church and the hearts of their hearers, with their extempore pulpit eloquence. Would that there were more of such churches and such ministers at the present day!

MILITARY TENDENCY OF THE UNITED STATES.

(From the New York Daily Times.)

The Earl of Ellesmere said in a speech made some time during the Crimean War, that if he were asked which he considered the most warlike people on earth, he should say those of the United States of America; and a recent British writer in this country remarks incidentally, "The fact, that there is such intense application of American ingenuity in the manufacture of fire-arms proves, we think, that there is a strong tendency to to military ambition in the American mind."

There is, no doubt, much truth in this latter observation; the greatest and most important improvements made in fire-arms during the past twenty-five years have originated in this country, and yet during the whole of this period we have been at peace with the whole world, excepting only our very brief war with Mexico. But, still, the improvements of the instruments of destruction and defence have gone on with such activity as though an enemy had been all the while at our doors. The recent visit of one of our steam frigates to an English port has awakened the utmost wonder and surprise at the completeness of her armament, the superior force of her metal, and the admirable arrangements of her interior for fighting. The steam frigate, the Merrimac, is the smallest and the last one of the six lately constructed that we would have thought of sending abroad as a show ship, or an example of our steam navy. Yet her model and equipment have been the themes of the most remarkable commendations in the English press. The marvel of all this is that England has recently made enormous additions to her navy, and since the Crimean war commenced has built an immense number of steam frigates and line-of-battle ships, yet none of them, it seems, is equal to the most inferior of the six steam frigates which have recently been added to our navy rather as experiments than as force for which we are likely to have any employment. We certainly do not allude to these things in any boastful spirit. Our superiority in ship-building is acknowledged even by our competitors, and our skillfulness in the use and manufacture of fire-arms is patent all the world over. The commendations bestowed upon the Merrimac only corroborate the theory of Lord Ellesmere and the writer we have quoted. A superiority in the manufacture of the implements of warfare certainly indicates a warlike propensity in the people.

Since the Merrimac has made so great a sensation among our English cousins by her visit in Southampton, we hope when the Niagara goes to sea she will be sent to Portsmouth, or some other of the great naval stations of England, where she may be seen and examined by those who will be capable of appreciating her splendid model and formidable arrangements for active service.

The Dublin Freeman in a spirit of intense nationality says that Ireland has produced some of the best dancers the sun ever saw. James Silvain, of the Royal Academy, Paris, and the favorite pupil of Conlon, is an Irishman. He has been selected by Fanny Ellsler, Madame Taglioni, and Cerito, as the first dancer in the world; and he has danced with all these celebrated artists at all the principal opera houses. Having left Ireland whilst a child, he was noticed by Conlon, who perceiving in him a wonderful genius for dancing, took great pains in developing his talents. He was obliged to change his name in Paris, not because he was ashamed of being Irish, but because having his veins full of royal Milesian blood, he had to Frenchify himself to give his family bread. He was the best of sons, a kind brother, and a warm-hearted Irish patriot. He would never allow his friends to call him by any other name than that of Sullivan. In the year 1848, when Ireland was in a disturbed state, he visited Bantry Bay, with a view of finding out some of his relatives. The police in that quarter, taking him for a French spy, arrested and put him in prison. He was released, but not without much difficulty. At the hotel, he gave all his relatives, poor and rich, a princely entertainment—he showed by his generosity that he was a true Irishman.

The editor of the Dublin Freeman has seen the first of a series of views illustrative of Irish scenery, and drawn by Irish artists. The work has been undertaken by Mr. E. J. Harty, of Ulster Chambers, Duane-street, by whom the landscapes are drawn on stone, and it is designed to embrace all the most celebrated and interesting points of view in every part of Ireland. At present four of the prints drawn by H. M'Manus, Esq., R. H. A., and embracing some charming scenery in the vicinity of Delgany, and Greystones, in the county of Wicklow, have been published. They are admirably drawn, and have been transferred to the stone in a style highly artistic, and with great feeling and delicacy of touch. The contrast between them and the very best of those views of Irish scenery which crowd the shop windows about Dublin is infinitely in favor of the former, yet they are not only so much better, but are also much cheaper. If the plan of executing in the same style a large number of illustrations of the fine scenery, of which every county in Ireland can boast its share, be fully carried out, a national benefit will be conferred on society.

The Vice Chairman of the Clifden Board of Poor Law Guardians, had the misfortune, lately, to lose a valuable mare somewhere or somehow, and he asked the Guardians of the union to admit her orphan foal to the workhouse, to be cared after and fed, and groomed, and national schooled, as never before was an incipient horse in any country. The sages of the union, acknowledging the quality of mercy—that it is blessed in him that gives and him that receives—took the orphan foal to their bosom, and declared on their books that a foal six weeks' old, the property of Mr. Redmond Joyce, Deputy Vice-Chairman, whose dam had been drowned, has been taken into the workhouse for the purpose of safe keeping for a short time:—Ordered that the foal be permitted to stop in the yard for a few weeks'. These entertaining facts we derive from the Galway Vindicator.

Immense quantities of eels have been lately taken in the Fane river, and in other streams near Carrickmacross. There were seven cart loads of them at Dundalk market, and Mr Rice, proprietor of the Carlingford Oyster House, brought up on Monday not less than 35 cwt. of them for the Liverpool and Dublin markets.

Irish News.

The vice-chairman of the Clifden (Connemara) board had the misfortune, he alleges, to lose a valuable mare somewhere or somehow, and he asks the guardians of the union to admit her orphan foal to the work-house, to be cared after and fed, and groomed, and national schooled, as never before was an incipient horse in any country. The sages of the union acknowledging the quality of mercy that is blessed in him that gives and him that receives, take the orphan foal to their bosom, and declare on their books, 13th August, 1856—"Resolved—That a foal six weeks old, the property of Mr. Redmond Joyce, deputy vice-chairman, whose dam had been drowned, has been taken into the workhouse for the purpose of safe keeping for a short time—Ordered, that the foal be permitted to stop in the yard for a week." And this is signed by the proper officers!

A year or two since, says the Tipperary Vindicator, the village of Enniskeen was the hot-bed of souperism, and unfortunately eight or ten poor hungry creatures took the temporal gifts offered them, and refrained from attending Mass; but to say they were converted to the Establishment, save to the loaves and fishes it has in its keeping, would be mere moonshine. With the return of plenty or the approach of death, they left the conventicles of proselytism and returned, with two exceptions, to the Catholic Church. The other day one of them, named Hugh Deary, became seriously ill, and sent for the good and zealous curate of the parish, the Rev. Mr. Beggan, who at once attended, and received the prodigal back to the one fold.

At the establishment of Mr. J. Deering, watchmaker and jeweller, Castle-place, Belfast, may now be seen a large urn, or basin of copper, elegantly shaped, and of curious workmanship, which was recently found in a bog in the townland of Raffery, townland of Killinchy, county Down. It is two and a half feet in diameter, and stands eighteen inches in height. The curved portion, which connects the widest circle of the vessel with the aperture at top, is united to the lower portion by a row of brass nails. It is likewise here and there ornamented with small crosses, and is furnished with two large handles. It was lifted from a depth of fifty feet underground, and is in excellent preservation. An engraving of this antique is to be executed for the "Ulster Archæological Journal."

A Tenant at Will, says the Dundalk Democrat, informs us that Lord Clermont is about to collect the "famine arrears," and that his bailiff has noticed the tenants to that effect. He will strike 25 per cent. off these debts, and charge the debtors about 9s per acre yearly in addition to their rents, till the remainder is paid off. Next week we shall have a word or two to say on the subject. We are also informed that the tenants are not willing to accept leases of their farms for 21 years, as the cost is very high. We believe it would be better for them not to accept such leases, and next week we shall give our reasons for saying so.

A correspondent of the Waterford News, states that Mr. John Hayes, publican, of Kill, accompanied by his daughter, went to milk cows on a farm which he held, adjoining the village. The cows having been milked, he directed his daughter to return home, whilst himself drove the cows to a sheltry part of the land. His family not finding him return at a reasonable hour, went in search of him, and did not succeed in finding him until Tuesday afternoon, when they found him drowned in a drain of water in a field near his own land. The deceased, who carried on the spirit trade in Ballybricken recently, was not, it is said, in a sound state of mind this time back.

The Dublin Telegraph informs us that after the marriage of John Power, late Head Constable, to the daughter of Richard Collender, he was presented at the dejeuner with a magnificent silver tea service from Lord Stuart de Decies, and the surrounding gentry, in token of their esteem. Mr. Power gave his generals in the Crimea, (where he had been Chief Commissariat Storekeeper during the entire campaign) such satisfaction as to elicit their approbation so strongly, that on his return to London, a few days since, he received from the Lords of the Treasury a suitable appointment.

The Dublin papers report that during the late storm in that city the Liffey was covered with masses of agricultural produce, hay and corn, and even the bodies of drowned animals, also large trees which had been torn up by the roots. The Usk, a small paddle steamer, trading between Dublin and Wexford, broke from her moorings in the river and came broadside on in contact with a large barque, the Harriet Carr. The steamer received such injury by the collision that she broached to and filled.

A Court of Inquiry assembled at Fermoy, on the 13th ult., to investigate a charge of misappropriation of the public stores to a large extent, preferred against Barrackmaster Major Daniels, by Barrack Sergeant Carey. The result of the investigation completely exonerating Major Daniels, and convicting the Barrack Sergeant of gross falsehood and malicious aspersions, Sergeant Carey was immediately suspended from his duties, and an order was received at Fermoy, on the 22d ultimo, for his summary dismissal from the service.

After the consecration of the new Catholic Cathedral of Longford, the Bishop of Ardagh entertained at a sumptuous dinner, at the episcopal residence, in most hospitable style, the prelates and a considerable number of clergy and laity. The dioceses from which clergy attended the consecration were those of Ardagh, Elphin, Meath, Clogher, Kilmore and Dublin.

At a recent meeting held in the church of Enniskillen, to take into consideration the most practical means of enlarging and affording more accommodation in the convent at the East Bridge, at present occupied by the Sisters of Mercy, Dean Boylan subscribed £100, and the Lady Abbess £200 for that object.

Exeter Hall missionaries recently held a meeting in William street, Kilkenny, at which the Protestant Bishop of Ossory presided. The quiet Catholic inhabitants of the marble city don't like to be annoyed by the intrusion of those fanatics.

The Tipperary Union Farming Society have held their second anniversary show and dinner in the town of Tipperary. About one hundred and twenty gentlemen sat down, and Le Comte Jarnac occupied the chair.

The extensive mills at Kilmainham, Dublin, have been turned into a factory for the production of Roman, Portland, and other cements. A few years since there was no such establishment in the country.

Constable Carey of Kingstown, at the imminent risk of his life, dashed into the waves and rescued a sailor from the wreck of the Robert and Mary, at that port during the late storm there.

It was my misfortune to see, says a correspondent of the Cork Examiner, 10 or 11 families evicted on the 29th ult., up at the cottage part of Clonmoyle, the property of Mr. Henry Leader, who purchased it lately in the Encumbered Estates Court. Five or six of these were the families of widows. The scene was a painful one. Your kind heart would have bled at witnessing the affection with which some of the creatures clung to their dwellings, and the grief they appeared to suffer in parting with them. Most of them, however, were readmitted into the houses for a time, with a promise to some, as the houses were to be levelled, that they would be allowed to take away the roofs if they left quietly. The parties responsible for the rents were very well able and most willing to pay the rents assumed hitherto, and a much higher rent—in fact any reasonable rent that might be imposed, in future, and to give ample security for the punctual payment of it, if permitted to continue in possession.

At the late great fair of Ballinasloe, on the 7th instant, Mr. Colter, of Lincolnshire, bought 14 horses, at prices varying from £50 to £250. Mr. Pat Taafe, county Roscommon, sold a hunter at £170; a second at £160, and a third to Lord Cowper, at £120. Mr. Dawson, a dealer from Dublin, purchased a hunter from Mr. Stone, of Frankford, at £150; another from Mr. Armstrong at the same figure, and a third from Major Yelverton at £120. Mr. Dillon, of Johnstown, sold a hunter to Mr. Balfe at £120; Mr. Parsons Battersby sold a colt, three years old, at £80. Mr. Magrane, a dealer, purchased a colt four years old, at £175. Mr. Hartigan, of Liverpool, bought a hunter from Captain Winter at £200. Mr. Courtenay, of Cork, sold a hunter at £100.

A fine young man, named John Stafford, son of Mrs. Stafford, while out bathing with his brother in a part of the sea coast called Ballyvooney, near Stradbally, was drowned. His brother, after several attempts to rescue him was obliged, in consequence of the roughness of the sea, to desist. The deceased was lately married, and his wife, who was a witness of the sad scene, wildly rushed into the waves, and would doubtless have met with the same fate as her husband if her brother-in-law had not, at the imminent risk of his own life, succeeded in dragging her out.

This morning, says the Cork Examiner of the 8th instant, the Donald M'Kay, a large emigrant vessel, bound for Melbourne, put into Queenstown, bringing with her the melancholy intelligence of the death of her surgeon, Dr. Trayer, who had been for many years the respected and assiduous house physician of the Cork South Infirmary, and who had determined on going to Australia for the benefit of the sea voyage. It appeared that on Sunday, when the ship was off Cape Clear, he got ill, and died in the short space of three hours. As the vessel could not well proceed without a surgeon, she was in consequence put back to Queenstown.

On the 4th instant, a match of hurling took place between the parishes of Kenmare and Templenoe (Co. Kerry)—the former encouraged by Mr. Trench, agent to the Marquis of Landsdown, and the latter by Richard Mahony, Esq., D.L., Dromore Castle. The Kenmare hurlers won the first game after a short contest; the second game was undecided, having continued over an hour; the Templenoe men seemed to have the best of the play. Mr. Mahony, who has made himself most popular among his tenantry and neighbouring peasantry, provided liberal entertainment in Kenmare for the Templenoe hurlers after the match was over.

Application having been made to the Commissioners of Irish Fisheries to take the necessary steps for exercising the powers given to them under the Fishery Acts, to rescind their bye-law of the 25th October, 1854, prohibiting the use of trawl-nets, at all times, within that part of the Lough of Belfast, within a straight line drawn from Grey Point, in the county of Down, to Kilroot Point, in the county of Antrim, and to make such other bye-law restricting the use of trawl-nets within said Lough of Belfast, as may seem just and expedient, the commissioners intend holding public meetings to inquire into the subject.

The Dublin Freeman says that Marshal Pellissier, Duc de Malakoff, was expected to arrive in Dublin on the 4th inst., on a visit to Lord Gough. Several persons were waiting at the Kingstown Railway terminus, anxiously expecting the arrival of the gallant Marshal, but they were destined to be disappointed. The Marshal's arrival in this city is hourly expected; a steamer has been placed at his service by the Dublin Steam Packet Company to convey him to Ireland.

A man, named Pat Farrell, of Anameadle, near Toomavara, committed suicide by drowning. Farrell was only a week out of Nenagh gaol on bail, where he was confined since sometime early in August last, for being the principal in the riot which took place in Toomavara about that time, in which the skull of a man of the name of Brien was fractured.

A brogue-maker was going to his home in the town of Tipperary, after having finished some work, when he was attacked by a man who attempted to stab him. He put up his hand to ward of the blow of the knife, but he unfortunately received it in the arm. The poor brogue-maker was near being destroyed, the blow took effect near a vein which, had it been severed, would have bled profusely, and thus probably cause death.

The Secretary of State for War is causing the whole of the pensioners residing in the several districts in the United Kingdom to be examined by competent military officers for the purpose of proving their identity with the individuals originally admitted on the pension list.

At a meeting of the rate-payers held in Dungarvan, it was resolved that a loan should be raised on guarantee to construct a Railway from the City of Waterford to Fermoy.

The creditors and shareholders of the Tipperary Bank have entered into a compromise for the purpose of avoiding litigation, which was likely to swallow up all the available funds.

At the October monthly fair of Kilkenny, fat heifers went from £12 to £15. Fat bullocks from £14 to £16. Stores from £8 to £12. Yearlings from £4 to £6. Bacon pigs, £3 per cwt. Stores, £2, to £3 each; bonhams, 25s. to 30s. per couple.

The Kilkenny Coursing Club have made arrangements for a 20 dog match, to be run off in November.

The Mining Journals say that in Ireland mining interests are quite in the ascendant, and a more encouraging state of things gradually comes over all home undertakings connected with this branch of commerce.

A court of enquiry is being held in Londonderry to investigate the question of compensation for the entering on and taking possession of the property adjoining the river, necessary to the carrying on of the contemplated new quays.

The case of Messrs. Grierson, proprietors of the Daily Express, has been up in the Bankrupt Court, Dublin. They owe £71,000.

At the recent sessions of the QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY, held in Dublin Castle, degrees, certificates and diplomas were conferred on the following gentlemen:—Alexander Cuthbert, M.R.C.S.E., Belfast College; Richard Day, M.R.C.S., Cork; David B. Jacob, L.R.C.S.I., Belfast; Edward L'Estrange, Galway; Edward Louis M'Sheehy, L.R.C.S.I., Cork; John Moorhead, A.B., Galway and Belfast; William Roche Rice, M.R.C.S.E, Cork; David Walker, Belfast, received the degree of M.D.; Henry Cowan, Belfast College; Charles J. Hooper, Galway; Patrick Ford, Galway; John Ferguson M'Callan, Belfast; James Young, Belfast, obtained the degree of A.M.; Pierce Arnold, Galway College; Acheson George Bartley, Belfast; Joseph Corkey, Belfast; Bennett Clear Davidson, Cork; Hugh Clarke Graham, Belfast; George Wray Hamill, Belfast; Francis B. Hurley, Galway; John Brown M'Bride, Belfast; Thomas M'Cowen, Cork; John M'Parland, Belfast; Timothy O'Brien O'Feely, Galway; Arthur Herbert Sinclair, Belfast; Daniel Tierney, Galway; Thomas Wall, Cork; Walter Augus Watts, Galway; William Taylor Whan, Belfast, received the degree of A.B. The diploma of Elementary Law was conferred upon Timothy O'Brien O'Feely, Galway, and Robert Seeds, Belfast. Certificates of first medical examination were obtained by John William Collins, Cork; Henry Talbot Dann, Cork; Richard B. Davidson, Belfast; William M'Cormac, A.B., Belfast; James M'Crevy, Belfast; Daniel Murry O'Hara, Belfast; Robert Stewart, Belfast.

The Mayor of Kilkenny has received a letter, of which the following is a translation, from the French Minister of Finance, acknowledging the receipt of the money subscribed in Kilkenny, for the relief of the sufferers from the late inundations:—"Paris, September 17, 1856, Minister of Finance, Central Cash Office. MR. MAYOR—I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of the draft of £129 5s. 2d., the sum contributed by the inhabitants of Kilkenny, under the title of 'relief for the victims of the late inundations in France,' which you have addressed direct to me. The agreeable duty of thanking you, Mr. Mayor, both for this remittance and the very kind letter which accompanied it, devolves upon me. I acquit myself of this duty with the greater satisfaction, as it renders me the medium of conveying sentiments of the deepest gratitude, which this manifestation of the sympathy of Ireland for our unhappy fellow-citizens has again awakened here. I have the honor of being, Mr. Mayor, your very obedient servant, the Cashier, Central Paymaster of the Public Treasure, J. ROUMA."

A faction fight took place at the fair of Castlemot, on the 7th inst. It appears that a number of persons were returning home from the fair of the night in question, and on arriving near Ricketstown, a quarrel arose, which resulted in the whole party resorting to sticks, with which they belaboured each other in a most unmerciful manner. A man named William Spragg, had his skull frightfully fractured, and when raised up, a portion of the brain was found protruding from an orifice made in the head by a blow of a stick. He was removed to the county infirmary, but no hopes are entertained of his recovery. The following persons were arrested by the police, and committed to the county prison, by Mr. Denis, J. P., of Fortgranite, charged with being implicated in this lamentable affair:—James Kavanagh, Edward Joyce, Edward Byrne and Richard Pilson.

So active has become the competition in the passenger traffic with England, that arrangements have been recently made by the City of Dublin Steam Company, and the Great Southern and Western Railway Company for carrying passengers between Kilrush and Liverpool at the very low rate of 8s. per head. Out of this sum, the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company receive 3s., leaving for division between the other two companies, 5s. for carrying each passenger a distance of 270 miles, or at the rate of less than a farthing a mile.

A threatening letter was recently sent to Abraham Coates, Esq., Agent to the Earl of Stradbroke, over the Ballymacarberry Estate, stating that the writer would have "the pleasure of meeting him (Mr. Coates), before long, with Powder and Ball!" Mr. Coates has offered a reward of fifty pounds for such private or other information as will lead to the discovery of the writer.

The Dublin Evening Mail reports the death of Arthur, Lord De Freyney, which took place at his residence, in London, on the 29th ult. The deceased Peer, who was in his 69th year, was long known in the House of Commons, as Mr. French, of French Park, in the County of Roscommon, which county has been represented by a member of the family for several generations in the Irish and Imperial Parliaments.

During the late storm, the yachts Blue Bell and Cygnet broke from their moorings in Kingston harbor, drove on shore and became total wrecks.

John M'Carthy, Esq., of Lathduane, Mill street, county Cork, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace, on the recommendation of the Earl of Bandon.

The half-yearly meeting of the Londonderry County Grand Orange Lodge was held at the Farmer's Hotel, Moneymore, on Thursday, the 2nd Oct.

So great has been the extent of draining throughout portions of the county Galway, during the last year, that several spring wells which have not failed for the last twenty years, have become completely dry.

Traffic of the Limerick and Foynes Railway Company (17 1-4 miles open) for week ending Saturday 27th Sept., 1856: Passengers, parcels, &c., £68 3s. 0d. Goods and cattle, £32 0s. 11d. Total, £100 3s. 11d.

A man named James Ward was drowned when crossing a river, as he was leaving the town of Carrickmacross. He has left a wife and family to lament his death.

Sir Richard Annesley O'Donnell has been presented with an address by the parishioners and Catholic clergy of Bunnishools, Newport, as an appreciation of his qualities as a landlord.

The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Kenmare has subscribed £500 towards the building of the Presentation Monastery at Killarney, which will almost complete it.

The literary session of the Cork Young Men's Society will open with a lecture from the President, on a subject that will prove a most decided novelty, The History of Cork.

James Butler, Esq., Broomville, has been appointed a magistrate of the county of Carlow, on the recommendation of the Earl of Besborough.

Edward Burke, Esq., of Waterford, has made the princely donation of £500 to the fund for building a new Chapel at Tramore.

Lieutenant William Sterling, of the Royal Artillery, died suddenly in an epileptic fit, at Newbridge Barracks, on the 26th ult.

The people of Wexford have paid a mark of respect to the Rev. Dr. Devereux, a Protestant landlord, by turning out and ploughing some forty acres of his demesne. At about one o'clock the Newtownbarry Chapel Band arrived, amidst the deafening cheers of at least 1,000 spectators. Shortly after, the Kilrush Chapel Band made their appearance, and were likewise cheered by all. Both Bands struck up the enlivening air called "Speed the Plough," with several other old Irish tunes, in a masterly style. After some time the Bands, accompanied by some hundreds, left the ploughs to do their work, and proceeded to the Dr.'s splendid mansion house, the doors of which were thrown open, and a Cead Mille Failtha for all. The ploughmen had their task (40 acres) turned up at 4 o'clock. They, with many others, in all about 180, sat down to a good and substantial dinner, with lots of strong ale and plenty of the "native." There were three celebrated Irish pipers, the Byrnes, from Bagnalstown, in attendance. Dancing commenced at 8 o'clock, in which the ladies and gentlemen of the Dr.'s family were pleased to join. At this hour there could not have been less than 1000 persons enjoying the merry dance. They were all supplied with plenty of coffee, tea, strong ale, and lots of the "native," and other refreshments, during the night. The dancing was kept up until after 6 o'clock in the morning, after which there were three cheers given for the best of landlords, the good Dr. Devereux.

Speaking of the late storm in Dublin, the Telegraph says:—The wind could scarcely be said to come from any distinct quarter, but rushed in fearful gusts, howling and raging through the empty streets as it seemed from every point of the compass. The police on duty, and the few belated wayfarers who had to pass homewards through the city at that advanced hour were obliged to fly to whatever temporary residence they could find. The rain came down in douches or unbroken sheets of water, and to add to the horror of the night, several flashes of lightning broke forth, giving a momentary and dismal illumination to the scene. In Fleet-street (Lower) where a large sewer was open in course of repair, flashes of bluish light were observed darting along the course of the sewer. At Carlisle bridge the water was seen pouring in a regular flood from the centre towards Sackville-street, whilst against the abutments of the bridge on the east side the water of the river, lashed into foam, and broke with great violence. One of the yachts lying near the bridge broke from her moorings and drifted down the river. Fortunately for the safety of property in Dublin and the immediate vicinity, the storm did not continue at this pitch of fury just then for any length of time; but it was in the direction of the coast that the most serious fears were entertained for the fate of every vessel afloat in the channel at the time. We understand that outside the force of the sea was felt from the southward and westward, veering occasionally somewhat to the west. The sun went down amidst continued wild weather on Saturday evening, leaving many persons in a state of fear and apprehension as to the safety of friends known to be at sea, and probably in the channel during this fearful storm.

This far-famed locality, (Killarney), in the words of Macaulay, "The most beautiful tract in the British Isle," where the stranger and the foreigner sojourn with so much delight because of its majestic and lovely scenery, writes the Nation, is, we regret to say, like many other places in Ireland, the abode of much poverty and wretchedness. The destitution of the numerous peasantry must have often shocked the visitors of the lakes. This is no exaggeration but stern fact, for, though of late the condition of the people has been considerably alleviated, yet there remains enough of misery to form an unseemly blot on a district so favored by nature. Happily for the poor of Killarney, religion has extended its protecting influence over them—it has thrown its warmth over the young and untutored female, and by its holy teachings directed the infant minds to higher and nobler objects. Even here in the midst of poverty, the zealous, pious, and indefatigable Sisters of Mercy—how worthy of that divine name! have established their schools of industry and mercy for the benefit of these poor people, instructing the young, training the more advanced in their industrial school, and protecting in their temporal House of Mercy the young women from the many temptations that surround those who are exposed to the bitter and depressing cares of poverty.

We are glad to observe, says the Tuam Herald, that the Council of the Tenant League are resolved to hold their annual meeting in the course of the present month. The council would commit a mistake if they abdicated their position or their function of speaking periodically to the tenant electors of Ireland. A central organization is required, and required now more than ever, when so many elements of corruption are at work to debauch and demoralise the public mind. The Parliamentary recess is passing by without a stir being made in behalf of Tenant Right. An apathy prevails, unpardonable as it is unmistakeable. This is an error, and a serious error. We know as a fact that the convictions of the old friends and advocates of the cause are still unaltered, regarding its justice and the necessity that exists to secure its steady and satisfactory settlement. The tenant classes, also, are made every day to feel the evils consequent upon the insecurity of their position. Present prices will not always continue; the potato blight may again return, and again the fruits of the industry of the tillers of the soil will be absorbed in paying high rents. The result will be another famine, mitigated, perhaps, in its extent and intensity, but still severe enough to prove afresh the necessity of such a change in our land system as will enable the tenant to accumulate in and on the soil a store on which to draw in the days of his distress.

On the 2nd inst. at the Presentation Convent, Drogheda, the interesting and edifying ceremony of a reception took place. Miss Margaret Markey, called in religion, Mary Catherine, youngest daughter of Owen Markey, Esq., Reynoldstown, and sister to Rev. John Markey, C. C., Clogher, received the white veil from the hands of the most Rev. Dr. Dixon, Primate of all Ireland, in the presence of a numerous assembly of her friends and a large concourse of clergy. His grace delivered a most eloquent and instructive sermon on the occasion.

The Galway Mercury states that it is in contemplation to commence on an extensive scale the Cathedral Church of Loughrea. A returned emigrant from the United States, adds the Mercury, gives a most glowing account of the enthusiasm manifested by our expatriated countrymen, who, on seeing the new cathedral announced in the Irish papers, opened a subscription and expected that before twelve months they would be able to remit one thousand pounds to the Loughrea committee.

Traffic of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company (77 miles open) for the week ending Saturday, 27th Sept., 1856: Passengers, parcels, &c., £672, 1s. 2d. Goods and cattle, £379, 6s. 4d. Total, £1,051, 7s. 6d. Corresponding week last year, £1,074, 13s. 8d.

"I question if ever perfect potato seed has been sown, except by fortunate accident, it being necessary to have a variety of kinds in the same field, the blossoms of each being a perfect flower, having male and female insects visiting them for food, carrying with them Pollen of one kind into that of another, which accounts for the different sorts that may be obtained from the same apple."

The truth of this was tested lately in Kilkenny, £5 being offered for an apple containing a variety. Three competitors had the seed from an apple sown separately, and neither had a variety. Therefore the £5 is still open for competition, with this year's apples, and if not taken £10 will be given for an apple containing varieties, next year, open to the world; as perfect potatoes can never be given without it.

The Newry Examiner has much pleasure in stating that at the general examination held at the Pontifical College, Rome, on the 4th September, Mr. George Conroy, son of Nicholas Conroy, Esq., Dromiskin, in the County Down, obtained four first premiums, for proficiency in theology and sacred Scripture, and a gold medal, a distinction reserved for superior merit only.

As the train from Waterford to Limerick was passing at a short distance from the Kilsheehan station, on the Clonmel side, some malicious person threw a stone which struck the plate glass window of a first class carriage. The glass was shattered to pieces, but fortunately the stone did not enter the carriage, as it struck partly on the lower side of the mahogany sash and partly on the glass.

The 30th Anniversary show and dinner of the Iverk Farming Society were recently held at Pilltown. The show of stock &c. was extremely good, and gave the utmost satisfaction to all concerned. The attendance of farmers and gentry was large. The Earl of Bessborough, accompanied by the Countess, (who takes a very warm interest in the success of the Iverk Society) was in attendance.

Miss Farrell, daughter of Mr. Matthew Farrell, of Ballybricken, Waterford, has been received, by name in religion of Mary Joseph Ursula, into the order of Sisters of Charity, at Harold's Cross Convent, and at the same time and place, Miss Russell, also of Waterford, was also received by the name in religion of Mary Joseph.

So great, remarks the Limerick Observer, is the want of confidence now felt by some of the trading and farming classes of the district, that although there are Branches of the Bank of Ireland and of the National Bank established in the town of Tipperary—it is said that their customers exhibit a very odd mode of manifesting that want of confidence by dividing their deposits into the Limerick and Clonmel branches of the same Banks for additional precaution and safety!

Maurice Power, Governor of St. Lucia, and late M. P. for the county of Cork, has arrived at the residence of his sister at Queenstown, on a visit for a few days. He will not return to St. Lucia, having been appointed to the Governorship of Grenada.

With respect to the rumoured intention of several of the Irish constituencies at the next general election returning Mr. Smith O'Brien as a member of Parliament, it appears to be forgotten, says a letter in the Times, that a person having been once convicted of high-treason can never after sit in the House of Commons.

The Cork Examiner publishes a subscription list which has been opened to complete the repairs of Imogeelo, Dungournly, and Clonmult chapels.

Queen Victoria has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of J. F. Crampton, sometime her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, K. C. B., to be Civil Division.

The following is an extract from the remarks upon the potato read before the Literary and Scientific Institution of Kilkenny, in 1852, by our fellow-citizen, Daniel Ferguson, Esq.:

Three persons, named John Michael Corkerry, James Morley and John Long, have been committed to Cork jail, charged with the murder of Thomas Scott, who was beaten by a crowd of persons in Barrack-street, Cork.

The O'Connell Statue has been sent to Paris to be cast in bronze. Hogan, the sculptor, has proceeded thither to superintend the process.

Denis Florence MacCarthy, in a letter to the Evening Post protests against placing the statue of Thomas Moore, about being erected in Dublin, in a corner of the Dublin Society's premises in Kildare-street.

The renowned ventriloquist, Gallagher, is giving his humorous entertainments in Belfast, before crowded audiences.

The corporation of Cork have voted £1,150 towards the laying out of a public park for the benefit of the citizens.

Messrs. Fennessy & Son have commenced the planting of the Public Park at Waterford.

John Adamson, Esq., Sub-Inspector of Constabulary at Birr, is appointed County Inspector, and to be stationed at Letterkenny, county Donegal, in the room of James Reid, Esq.

Patrick Hobert, Esq., County Donegal, County Inspector, succeeds Wm. Beed, Esq., as King's County Inspector.

John Besnard, Esq., J.P., for Cork city, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the County.

A county Limerick gentleman is shortly to be married to the daughter of a Peer of a neighboring county.

An Irish gentleman won £3,000 by the St. Leger stakes at Doncaster.

The Mars sailed from Waterford on the 3d for Liverpool, and had on board upwards of 200 emigrants for the United States.

Correspondence.

DUBLIN LETTER.

DUBLIN, Oct. 10th.

All your old friends here are thoroughly gratified with the course you have taken during the Presidential campaign. It gladdens them heartily to find that at the very outset, promptly and unequivocally you declared for James Buchanan. If it be of any advantage to the great good cause he represents—the triumph of which in the first week in November is to be decided in his person—the intelligent sympathy of Ireland, be assured, is with both. That is—to make myself perfectly clear—the mind and heart of Ireland is with the American Democracy, as interpreted by the Cincinnati programme, and with James Buchanan as the chosen exponent of the great principles it enunciates. And why? Why this intelligent sympathy? Why this complete identification of the Irish heart and mind with that eminent statesman and the principles—and may I not add, the future?—of which he is in this serious contest the strong and lofty impersonation?

In the first place, there is a very correct understanding prevailing here regarding the Constitution of the United States, the relations which subsist between the several States, and their common relationship and subordination to the Federal Government established at Washington. Strange to say, this understanding exists—and not merely exists, but has taken root in the public opinion of the country, and there clings firmly and fastens itself ineradicably—despite of the denunciations which O'Connell repeatedly flung out against the citizens of the Southern States, and the system of labor—"the involuntary servitude"—which from the beginning of their existence has been sustained there. Strange, too—strange, indeed—that the man our generous and trustful people for so many years listened to with chivalrous obedience, and whose advice, even where that advice did violence to their best instincts whilst it insulted some of the dearest memories they treasured, was in so many instances so impetuously followed—strange, indeed, it is, that his view of Southern Slavery, organized as a Labor Power, met with little or no response, and that his Abolitionism—a flake of snow upon the breast of the rushing deep river—fell and left not a momentary impression on the surface. Yet such was the case. Such is the fact. The most reckless sycophant who trades in speeches or pamphlets, or any other species of political small-ware, on his name, dare not aver the contrary. Undisputed and indisputable, it is the fact—a phenomenon, if you will, viewed in relation to the spontaneous credulity and precipitate loyalty with which they echoed his words on every question. But it is the fact—undisputed and indisputable—that upon the subject of African slavery in America, the colossal Tribune was with his favorite people as powerless as a child. James Haughton—the Sensitive plant of Irish Politics—who with all his fine flowers shrunk within his milk-white stem the instant any adverse opinion, the slightest even, approached him—and so became a very unpicturesque and fruitless stalk in his flower-pot on Sir John Rogerson's Coal-quay—even this crystal-veined James Haughton—he who lived on the Political Economy which starved the People—even he, without eloquence, stalwart frame, animal or spiritual fire, on this question, was influential as O'Connell. O'Connell, on this question, being nothing, what was James Haughton? That's a question which it concerns the world—the Irish Race or the American Republic—very little to interrogate or decide.

But that the Irish people refused to accept the teachings and dictation of O'Connell on this question—the question which now agitates your glorious Commonwealth to its very depths—is to me a decided proof that the Irish people instinctively—that is, from the light which Heaven flashed upon them—had a clearer knowledge of America—of its political organization, and its regularly constituted functions, compromises, and interests as a Democratic Republic Confederation—that the great towering Constitutional Irish lawyer himself—Daniel O'Connell, of Derrynane Abbey, in the county of Kerry—who stormed the British Commons—flung their Penal Code against the Catholics into the fire before their faces—dragged the ponderous chain of gold from off the neck of Orangeism—wore it triumphantly in the presence of the Brunswick Queen herself—and was, for the last twenty-five years he lived, the terror of the Tory and the master of the Whig Administrations—the two official factions which alternately appropriate the spoils wrung, in the shape of revenue and taxes, Civil Lists and Military Estimates, from the myriad serviles of Great Britain and Ireland, India, Canada, and Halifax—brown skins and blue noses included.

Well, in a letter of this sort, of course, I'm not going to inquire into or elucidate the American Constitution, and the maxims of Jefferson and others. Although—to tell the truth—if that were needful, I could do it. For I am almost—within a few months of the time—an American Citizen you know—in fact, every body who reads the IRISH NEWS knows—that Kilmainham has been in America for four years a resident—that he has been twice across the Isthmus at Nicaragua—without a cent expense, through the princely liberality of the Company of which K. T. Garrison was the agent and head-administrator in San Francisco—and that he has been once round the Cape of Good Hope in a ship, the keel of which was laid in Boston, and the flag of which, when questioning strangers, as the wide wild waves went by us, were the inextinguishable Stars and the ineffaceable Stripes. And then again, I was for a year an editor in Pittsburgh, previous to my being a very subordinate satellite of the Sun—South corner of Fulton and Nassau—for another twelvemonth or so. Wherefore—if I wished to do so—I feel I have a right to talk about the American Constitution, and every other question—like a strong stream from a marble lion's mouth, fronting a great public fountain—flowing and gushing, and tumbling turbulently (or otherwise) from it. But I don't. What's more—I won't. I just state the fact—leaving the logic, and even the common sense, to yourself.

Read on. All I shall say is this. Young as I am, I have been an old follower of O'Connell. I was so when we were at Clongowes together. I was so, when in the Library of that pious, erudite, and salubrious establishment, we held a Precursor Meeting—George Abraham in the chair, and Edward Buckley (now a Parish Priest somewhere in the county Wicklow) as Secretary. But on this subject of American Slavery neither I nor any of the Young Irelanders ever agreed with him, nor (as I have emphatically affirmed) did any portion of the Irish people. Hence it's too late for politicians in America to be quoting him against the Democratic Party, with the hope of bringing over the Irish Vote to Fremont, Sectionalism, and Civil War.

K[illegible]

BISHOP ENGLAND ON SOUTHERN SLAVERY.

To the Hon. John Forsyth.

LETTER II.

SIR—I proceed to give additional reasons to show that the letter of our holy father, Pope Gregory XVI., regarded only the "slave-trade." At the late council in Baltimore, that document was formally read and accepted by the prelates of the United States. Did it contain anything contrary to their judgment, respacting faith or morals, it would have been their duty to have sent their statement of such difference to the Holy See, together with their reasons for such dissent. Did they believe it contained the correct exposition of Christion morality, and were aware that in the ecclesiastical province of the United States, under their churge, there existed practices in opposition to that exposition, it would have been their duty to use their best efforts to have such practices discontinued, and to refuse sacraments to those who would persevere in the immoral conduct which it denounced.

Thus if this document condemned our domestic slavery as an unlawful and consequently an immoral practice, the bishop could not have accepted it without being bound to refuse the sacraments to all who were slave-holders unless they manumitted their slaves; yet, if you look on the prelates who accepted the document—for the acceptation was unanimous—you will find, 1st, the Archbishop of Baltimore, who is also the Administrator of Richmond, having charge of the slave-holding territory of the States of Maryland and Virginia, and the District of Columbia; 2d, the Bishop of Bardstown, having charge of the slave-holding State of Kentucky; 3d, the Bishop of Charleston, having charge of the slave-holding States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia; 4th, the Bishop of St. Louis, having charge of the slave-holding States of Missouri and Arkansas; 5th, the Bishop of Mobile, having charge of the slave-holding State of Alabama, and the Territory of Florida; 6th, the Bishop of New-Orleans, having charge of the slave-holding States of Louisiana and Mississippi; and, 7th, the Bishop of Nashville, having charge of the slave-holding State of Tennessee. They formed a majority of the council, and were in charge of all the slave-holding portion of the Union. Amongst the most pious and religious of their flocks are large slave-holders, who are most exact in performing all their Christian duties, and who frequently receive the sacraments. The prelates, under whose charge they are, have never, since the day on which they accepted this letter, indicated to them the necessity of, in any manner, adopting any new rule of conduct respecting their slaves. Nor did the other six prelates, under whose charge neither slaves nor slaveholders are found, express to their brethren any new views upon the subject, because they all regarded the letter as treating of the "slave-trade," and not as touching "domestic slavery."

I believe, sir, we may consider this to be very conclusive evidence as to the light in which that document is viewed by the Roman Catholic Church.

Since the issuing of this document, the Holy See has been in treaty with Portugal, which has, first and last, been most deeply engaged in this cruel traffic, and I have good reason to believe that one of the stipulations without which the Holy See will not conclude the treaty is, that the Portuguese government will act as ours did upwards of thirty years since, and prohibit this desolating, criminal, and inhuman system of murder, ruin, and desolation. What Southern planter would deliberately sanction a system of which the following passage of a letter from a highly creditable person, is but the description of a trifling appendage?

"SIERRA LEONE, JUNE 18, 1840.—The slave-trade is by no means extinguished upon this coast; it is, however, more covertly conducted. From the most accurate sources of information, I can fairly state that not one out of seven slave-ships is caught by the British cruisers. There is more secrecy, but the trade is nearly as frequent as before, but more profitable, and for that reason more alluring. A few days ago I visited a captive slaver. In a space which a moderate-sized French bedstead would occupy, I have seen forty-five unhappy wretches packed, without regard to age or constitution, like herrings in a barrel. I saw them fed after being captured. On a shell about the size of a half-crown piece, was deposited a pinch of salt, for which a father and four children contended, each endeavoring to scramble for a portion to eat with his rice. I have seen four children packed in a cask I thought impossible to contain one."

It is against this desperate traffic, in which Portugal and Spain have had so enormous a share, that the Pope's letter is directed, and not against domestic slavery, [of] the existence of which he is conscious, but respecting which he uses no action, and which rests upon a totally different basis, as it is perfectly unconnected with cruelty such as is above described.

If you will permit myself, sir, to be a witness in this case, I can inform you, that in different audiences which I had of his Holiness upon the subject of religion in Hayti, I urged, amongst other topics, to induce him to make a selection of a different person as his envoy, my peculiar position; I stated that my being a bishop of the diocess, within the limits of which was contained the most numerous negro slave population that is to be found in any diocess in the world, would render me unacceptable to the Haytian government, and that being engaged to transact the ecclesiastical organization of that island, would probably render me unacceptable in my own diocess. His Holiness met me by stating the very distinction to which I have been drawing your attention. "Though the Southern States of your Union have had domestic slavery as an heir-loom, whether they would or not, they are not engaged in the negro traffic;" that is, the "slave-trade."

Thus, sir, I trust I have succeeded in showing that this letter of his Holiness, which you describe to be "an apostolic letter on slavery," does, in fact, only regard that "slave-trade" which the United States condemn, and not that domestic slavery which exists in our Southern States.

But, sir, I regard this subject as one of great moment at the present time, and likely to become much more troublesome before many years shall elapse; I shall, therefore, enter more deeply upon its elucidation.

Respecting domestic slavery, we distinguish it from the compulsory slavery of an invaded people in its several degrees. I shall touch upon the varieties separately. The first is "voluntary;" that which exists amongst us is not of that description, though I know very many instances where I have found it to be so—but I regard not the cases of individuals, I look to the class. In examining the lawfulness of voluntary slavery, we shall test a principle against which abolitionists contend. They assert, generally, that slavery is contrary to the natural law. The soundness of their position will be tried by inquiring into the lawfulness of holding in slavery a person who has voluntarily sold himself. Our theological authors lay down a principle, that man in his natural state is master of his own liberty, and may dispose of it as he sees proper; as in the case of a Heebrew—(Exodus xxi. 5)—who preferred remaining with his wife and children as a slave, to going into that freedom to which he had a right; and as in the case of the Hebrew—(Levit. xxv. 47)—who, by reason of his poverty, would sell himself to a sojourner or to a stranger. Life and its preservation are more valuable than liberty, and hence when Esther addresses Assuerus—(vii. 4), she lays down the principle very plainly and naturally. "For we are sold, I and my people, to be destroyed and slain, and to perish. But if we had been sold for bondsmen and bondswomen, I had held my tongue." The natural law then does not prohibit a man from bartering his liberty and his services to save his life, to provide for his sustenance, to secure other enjoyments which he prefers to that freedom and to that right to his own labor, which he gives in exchange for life and protection, Nor does the natural law prohibit another man from procuring and bestowing upon him those advantages, in return for which he has agreed to bind himself to that other man's service, provided he takes no unjust advantage in the bargain. Thus a state of voluntary slavery is not prohibited by the law of nature; that is, in a state in which one man has the dominion over the labor and the ingenuity of another to the end of his life, and consequently in which that labor and ingenuity are the property of him who has the dominion, and are justly applicable to the benefit of the master and not of the slave. All our thologians have from the earliest epoch sustained, that though in a state of pure nature all men are equal, yet the natural law does not prohibit one man from having dominion over the useful action of another as his slave, provided this dominion be obtained by a just title. That one man may voluntarily give this title to another, is plain from the principle exhibited, and from the divine sanction to to which I have alluded.

In one point of view, indeed, we may say that the natural law does not establish slavery, but it does not forbid it—and I doubt how far any of the advocates of abolition would consent to take up for refutation the following passage of St.Thomas of Aquin—1, 2, q. 94, a. 5, ad. 2:

"The common possession of all things is said to be of the natural law, because the distinction of passions and slavery were not introduced by nature, but by the reason of man, for the benefit of human life; and thus the law of nature is not changed by their introduction, but an addition is made thereto."

As well may the wealthy merchant then assert, that it is against the law of nature that one man should possess a larger share of the common fund belonging to the human family for his exclusive benefit, as that it is against the law of nature for one man to be the slave of another. The existence of slavery is considered by our theologians to be as little incompatible with the natural law as is the existence of property. The sole question will be in each case, whether the title on which the dominion is claimed be valid.

I know many slaves who would not accept their freedom; I know some who have refused it; and though our domestic slavery must upon the whole be regarded as involuntary, still the exceptions are not so few as are imagined by strangers.

It may be asked, why any one should prefer slavery to freedom? I know many instances where the advantages to the individual are very great; and so, sir, I am confident, do you; yet I am not in love with the existence of slavery. I would never aid in establishing it where it did not exist. St. Thomas gives very briefly one of the principles upon which the answer may rest, and Aristotle sustains him—(in 1 Polit. c. 3 circa fin. T. 5)—in his view. St. Thomas is proving that the law of nations is distinct from the natural law, and answering an assertion that slavery is of the natural law, because some men are naturally fitted for slavery:

"This man is a slave—absolutely speaking, rather a son—not by any natural cause, but by reason of the benefits which are produced; for it is more beneficial to this one to be governed by one who has more wisdom, and to the other to be helped by the labor of the former. Hence the state of freedom belongs principally to the law of nations, and to the natural law only in the second degree, not the first."—2. 2. q. 57. a. 3. ad. 2.

The situation of a slave, under a humane master, insures him food, raiment, and dwelling, together with a variety of little comforts; it relieves him from the apprehensions of neglect in sickness, from all solicitude for the support of his family, and in return, all that is required is fidelity and moderate labor. I do not deny that slavery has its evils, but the above are no despicable benefits. Hence I have known many freedmen who regretted their manumission.

In examining the case of the voluntary slave, sir, we have then discovered some of the grounds upon which Catholic divines, however they may deprecate its existence, teach that slavery is perfectly compatible with the natural law, and that it has been introduced by the law of nations.

It will be useful to draw your attention, sir, to another distinction made by our divines, and which many of our speculative philosophers disregard. The natural state of man, in the day of his innocence, was very different from that in which he is placed since his fall; and the good gentlemen, in their abstractions, appear to forget the consequences of that original transgression. Death, sickness, and a large train of what are now called natural evils, are by Roman Catholics considered to be the consequences of sin. Slavery is an evil, and is also a consequence of sin. Thus St. Augustin, Bishop of Hippo, A. D. 425, in his book "Of the City of God," lib. xix. c. 15, informs us that slavery is the consequence of sin. "The condition of slavery is justly regarded as imposed upon the sinner. Hence we never read slave in the Scriptures before the just Noe, by his word, punished the sin of his son. Sin, not nature, thus introduced the word."

St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, A. D. 390, in his book "On Elias and Fasting," c. v.: "There would be no slavery do-day, had there not been drunkenness." And St. John Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople, A. D. 400, Hom. xxix. in Gen.: "Behold brethren born of the same mother; sin makes one of them a servant, and taking away his liberty, lays him under subjection." I could multiply quotations, but it is not requisite. Catholic divines are agreed in the origin of slavery, as of all our infirmities and afflictions, is to be found in sin. Hence it is overlooking one of the essential ingredients in our present condition, for a person who believes in the fall of man, as every Catholic must, to reason upon abstract speculations without taking this important fact into consideration. And besides looking generally at this fact and its results, he should consider the full force of the sentence (Gen. ix. 25), "Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren." Let him add to this the two succeeding verses, in which Sem and Japheth are promised the service of Canaan. It certainly was not then against the divine law for Sem and Japheth to use the service of Canaan.

Pope Gelasius I., A. D. 491, in his letters to the bishops of the Picene territory, the present march of Ancona, in Italy, writing against the Pelagian heresy, states slavery to have been a consequence of sin, and to have been established by human law.—Labbe iv. col. 1176—E. And in the book xix., "On the City of God," chap. 15, St. Augustin argues at length to show that the peace and good order of society, as well as religious duty, demand that the wholesome laws of the state regulating the conduct of the slaves, should be conscientiously observed.

Slavery, then, sir, is regarded by that church of which the Pope is the presiding officer, not to be incompatible with the natural law, to be the result of sin by divine dispensation, to have been established by human legislation, and when the dominion of the slave is justly acquired by the master, to be lawful, not only in the sight of the human tribunal, but also in the eye of Heaven; but not so of the "slave-trade," or the reducing into slavery the African and Indian in the manner that Portugal and Spain sanctioned, which they continue in many instances still to perpetrate, and which the apostolic letters have justly censured as unlawful.

The distinction will, I trust, be rendered more obvious as I proceed.—I am, sir,

Respectfully,

† JOHN, Bishop of Charleston.

BRITISH INTERFERENCE IN THE BAY OF NAPLES.

From the London Morning Star.

We said yesterday, that the country should count the cost before it permits the government again to break the peace of Europe; to-day, we are anxious to declare that if the peace is to be broken, we ought to know the true cause. Before our fleet is sent to the bay of Naples, in Heaven's name let us have a sight of the diplomatic notes. We want to see the text of this new quarrel. We, the public, who shall have to pay the money, and to find the soldiers, and to suffer the sacrifice, should beforehand know exactly what has been said and done to precipitate the crisis; what reasons have been assigned, what evidence have been adduced, what tone has been adopted, and what principle is at stake. We want to know all that Lord Palmerston and the Emperor of the French have said to the King of Naples. Notes have been sent which threaten war, and why should those who have to bear the burthen and suffer the consequences be left in the dark as to the contents of these notes? When are they to be published? The statement which Lord Palmerston has, through his editorial agents, sent forth to the world is that no remonstrance can bring King Ferdinand to his senses, and that the time has come to drop entreaty and to send ships of the line to hover round his coast. Further, the editors are instructed to say that in this matter England will act for herself, even though deserted by every European power. Not that he intends the frigates to open fire upon Naples. His lordship is prepared to reserve fire for the present and only to make ready. But see how this policy operates. Other nations make ready too, and the whole continent will again grow jealous and distrustful of England. And in a moment, with exasperated feelings and extended preparation, the tempest may break out, and despotic monarchs may rush into the field of battle to divide the spoils of Europe. Our Government hurries on to the very edge of this appalling precipice, and it does so by blindfolding the public mind. It keeps back every despatch, every interpollation, every note. It won't tell us what it has said, or what it has done; but it instructs its newspaper organs to browbeat and hurl defiance against another country, and to threaten that, single-handed, England will ride upon the whirlwind and open the gulf for a new deluge of human bloodshed. Our Government does not reason but rant. It withholds the indictment from the public eye, and employs others to rave and storm against an accused culprit. It hires writers to let loose the language of fury and wrath, but it will not give them the diplomatic letters. No parliament sits to ask their contents. No powerful opposition stands up to make the minister responsible. No public voice protests against the arbitrary and despotic power which rules our nation; and under such circumstances, the Premier claims the right to brag and intimidate, whilst he withholds the articles of impeachment, the names of the witnesses, and the character of the offence charged against a kingdom. And thus our executioners may be sent to the city of Naples, and they may put the people there to death before we have heard their defence, or given them a public trial, or found them guilty. Give us the papers, my lord. Let us see them. We mean the "notes" that you and others have sent to Italy. Their contents may be all right enough, and full of the highest feeling, and worded in language which angels of bliss would employ. But, on the other hand, these documents may be the very reverse of this—inconsistent, declamatory, and mysterious. They may be sophistical, meaningless, and absurd. And give us the real texts of the answers which have been returned. The people of this country are reasonable beings—they have some notion of politics, and they cannot shake themselves free from all responsibility in matters which involve life and death and the convulsion of a continent. The public ought to judge as well as the cabinet, and before a single engine of destruction is sent abroad from a constitutional country, the citizens of that country should be placed in possession of the correspondence that has failed to promote a satisfactory understanding. If our British policy is just and generous, one would think there is no need that it should be sheltered from the light of day. Only the deeds of evil, according to the Christian axiom, have need of the darkness chosen rather than the light because they are evil deeds. "Every association," said M. Volney, "which has mystery for its basis and secrecy for its means, is a league of robbers against society—a league divided in its very bosom into knaves or dupes, or in other words, agents and instruments." With equal truth he might have applied that accusation to Cabinet Councils which accomplish their purpose by secret and mysterious documents. But how long are we to be victimized by the process? Is the secret correspondence about the partition of Turkey forgotten? How do we know there is not another about the partition of Italy? Only the other day, in Paris, when the representatives of the great powers of Europe had met together to adjust the Eastern dispute, there were clandestine conferences for other purposes, and protocols between nations which were concealed from other nations represented at the conferences. Diplomacy has become a trick. Its language is elaborate and double; its object is advantage and ascendancy; its weapons are craft and cunning; its agents are designing and deep. There was a time when the diplomatic profession would have been repudiated in this country as worthy only of the hangman or the serf, and it is remarkable that the word "diplomacy" is not to be found in our old English dictionaries, for the thing itself had no recognised existence in our old English constitution. But in an age when compromise and deception are esteemed the best principles of legislation and policy, the diplomatist is received into the highest circles, and a government of clever diplomatists is regarded irresistible—international jealousies, armaments and wars. The field upon which the diplomatic profession operates is the wide world, and all the land dominions of the globe are placed under the crafty arrangements of a subtle science. Governments have to arm themselves to the teeth as a protection against each other's dishonesty; and Christian Europe in the middle of the nineteenth century is given up to the notes and protocols which excite violent agitation, and strengthen that military power that ever impedes progress and destroys liberty. Consuls, ambassadors, plenipotentiaries, and agents paid by secret service money are more than ever fully employed in sowing the noxious seeds of perpetual strife; while princes, kings, emperors, and statesmen employ their time in intrigues to extend their authority, and to weaken neighboring states. Meanwhile, those untold and growing millions of the human race called the people—that vast and accumulating multitude of men who, descended from the same God in Heaven, ought to be inheritors of only one country on earth—they who toil and spin, who work and pray, and who produce all the material greatness of every country, are made the victims of this diplomatic subtlety, and the slaves of those whose power would perish if once they were free. Then here is a new danger arising from the same system, for the sovereigns of Europe have their eyes turned towards the plains and kingdoms of Italy. But in the name of humanity and justice again we demand the dispatches. We do so all the more earnestly because we do not believe that English or French intervention will be employed for the good of the Italian people. We challenge the production of all the documents that bear upon the case. We call aloud for these secret and diplomatic papers to be placed at once in the hands of the public, and until they are forthcoming we shall not be moved from our deep seated belief that armed demonstration in the bay of Naples will not be in the cause of liberty and justice, but for the purposes of power and plunder.

CELEBRATED IRISHMEN.

From the Kilkenny Journal.

"HONEST TOM STEELE."

"How prized, how honored once, avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains of thee:
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud can be!"

The life of Thomas Steele was one of no ordinary character; it was from an early period, to the last moment of his eventful career, one living romance, a dream of some sixty years, chequered by sunshine and winter clouds—now dazzling in the gorgeous drapery of a July noonday, and soon changing like the wind into the centre of a December snow-storm, cold and bleak as the world which it enveloped. But who shall write "Tom Steele's" history? No man; for none knew him. He seemed, as it were, destined for other pursuits than those of his fellow-beings; and if circumstances and impulses caused him to mix in the beaten track, yet he was a man who dwelt in the world alone, his own thoughts being his companions, and the exuberance of his fancy conjuring up kindred spirits to join in his sojourn on this earth. Few men in the eventful age in which he lived, were better known to the public, and yet few ever knew him well. The closing scene of his existence every one must deeply deplore, and charity forbids one to say more than this, that a mighty mind had been turned from its healthy course by an overwhelming combination of direful circumstances, which, it is deeply to be deplored, he had no fortitude to resist; yet none can now fathom motives which for ever lie entombed in the narrow house which covers his remains. Born to a princely fortune, Steele was a real prince of nature's own fashioning. A true Protestant in religion, he was educated in that creed, and obtained the highest honors in the several English Universities. But it was in science that he particularly distinguished himself, and I believe there was not a scientific institution in Europe of which he was not admitted a member—honorary or otherwise. At an early period of his life he began to distinguish himself amongst his countrymen, by his love of freedom—civil and religious; and this was the more remarkable, as it was not fashionable, nor indeed quite safe in Ireland at the time, for a Protestant gentleman to favor the "Papists," either by word or action. Steele soon became popular in Munster, although he was decidedly the last in the world who quoted the "vox populi." His love of liberty carried him so far, that he embarrassed his property by raising a regiment and hiring a ship to transport them to join the Spanish patriots. This unfortunate affair is too well known to require further notice here. He was early in the field of Catholic Emancipation, and was amongst the first—if indeed not the very first—to enlist under the banner of O'Connell, which he never deserted until the day of the Liberator's death, an event which certainly hastened the earthly race of the honestest man that Ireland ever saw. Amongst the myriads of followers who kept about O'Connell and sailed in his wake, Tom Steele was the only man who was thoroughly disinterested in his admiration of the great Tribune. Steele had no purpose to serve but that of his country and his fellow-man, and his affection for O'Connell was as pure and sincere as the holy love of angels. O'Connell had flatterers, and sycophants, and parasites, and spies, and deceivers, and hypocrites in religion and politics, always about him. It was impossible for him, placed in the position in which he was, to avoid such; he could not help it. Such a state of things was inseparable from his position. The vast majority of such persons—99 per cent. of them—had some other object beside that of redemption from slavery of the Irish Catholic people in view. Steele stood alone untainted with such a sin. If he differed with his "august leader," as he always styled O'Connell, he did so on broad intelligible grounds; not upon questions of trifling detail. However, it very seldom happens that he did differ with the "Liberator," but his agreeing with him was the conviction of his mind—not the blind obedience of a slave to his master. Steele almost worshipped O'Connell, and he was sincere in his devotion towards him. He was the only man who proved his loyalty to the last; in a word, he was the only true and sincerely honest man who ever walked in the footsteps of that great man. I cast no slight on others by asserting this, which I maintain as a fact beyond the power of contradiction. Steele was one of O'Connell's greatest advocates at the Clare election, the result of which opened the portals of the Commons House of England to Catholics, against whom they had been closed for so many centuries. In fact, it was Steele who first conceived the idea of that election; and a very rare and valuable print, representing O'Connell, Steele, and O'Gorman Mahon, about to start for Clare, is still in existence. The attitudes of the three are excellent—the likenesses inimitable; but, unfortunately, this print is very scarce indeed. I only know of one in existence, and that is the possession of a valued friend, Mr. John Brownrigg, of No. 7 Denzilless-street, in the city of Dublin, who prizes it as a gem, which it really is. Few men ever lived who cared so little about self as poor Steele. His fine property was ruined in the service of his country, or given away for the benefit of persons who ultimately betrayed and deserted the man who had cherished and helped them to fame and independence. As an illustration of how little he cared about self, I may mention, that when a national subscription was proposed in order to redeem his property and present it to him free from all incumbrances, he indignantly spurned the proposal, and refused to accept of the offer. He had done, he said, nothing to merit such an offering, and come what might, no one should ever say that he had accepted of anything at the hands of his country. He might be poor in purse, but his integrity he would preserve, and so he did to the end of his life.

Steele was playful as a child; yet he was witty and sarcastic occasionally, with telling effect. He was full of amusing anecdotes, and as a story-teller, he was second to none. He would keep the "table in a roar" for a live-long night; and no matter what was on the tapis, he had as good a tale to tell. "That," he would say, "reminds me of a story I once heard," or "of what happened to me on such an occasion; and then he would proceed with something uncommonly good, all the better for being original—for above all men he could not bear to tell or hear an old story, a dry joke, or pointless attempt at wit. He used to relate an anecdote of a worthy priest, who resided up the Comera mountains, in the county of Waterford. The good man happened to govern a parish, the inhabitants of which were anything but governable. At that time faction fights at country fairs and markets were very considerably in vogue in that part of the country. The good priest did all in his power to put down such shameless and lawless exhibitions, but his success was not at all equal to his energy. At last, having, like the old man in the fable, tried every expedient to no purpose, he resolved on trying what virtue there was in a black thorn stick, and having attended a fair-green one day, where two factions had agreed to try their powers in a pitched battle, it was not long before an opportunity presented itself to test the efficacy of his new design. The parties fell to it hard and fast, when on a sudden the priest made his appearance in the midst of the combatants, and, without heeding either party, he dashed away right and left at them, and in a very short space of time he had done more than a squadron of dragoons could have effected—for he cleared the fair, as all individuals engaged in the melee, ran off in all directions, none of course daring to return the compliments paid them by the good man. The matter was noised about a good deal, the more so as the experiment was repeated three or four times subsequently with the best success. At last, some persons laid the affair before the bishop of the diocese, not in true colors, but deeply exaggerated, and the priest was cited to answer for his conduct before his superior. The bishop, in the mildest tones, laid the whole affair before the priest, who listened with great attention. His Lordship wound up by telling the priest that he should not have acted so, as that was not the manner the Apostles took to enforce the Gospel. "True for you, my Lord," said the poor clergyman; "but, my Lord, you will please to recollect that the Apostles had not to preach the Gospel up amongst the Comera mountain men!" This really happy reply caused the bishop to laugh outright, and he therefore gave the priest full liberty to do as he pleased; and before the end of twelve months from that time, the most unruly and riotous parish in the district became a model for all religious duties. Steele was inexhaustible in such stories as this. He was particularly fond of military engineering, and often wished that "His shroud had been the bloody rain

And thunder-smoke of the battle plain."

But alas, he was not doomed to die so. He was a man of wonderful energy and sternness of purpose, and, his moral and physical courage was beyond all doubt. He cared little about personal appearance, yet he was generally dressed in a peculiar manner. He was most remarkable for his liking of white trowsers, even in the depth of winter, and up to the time of the institution of the Repeal Volunteers in Ireland, he always wore such a garment. When the latter body was started by O'Connell, poor Steele adopted the dress of a colonel belonging to it, which he never after cast aside, except on occasions when he dressed in the magnificent green uniform of the 82nd club, in which he looked, indeed, like a general. His athletic and commanding figure was most conspicuous in this gorgeous dress. He was the most social companion in the world when in the midst of friends, but reserved among strangers. On the 8th of October, 1843, when the government made no secret of their intention to slaughter the people who had determined to attend the great repeal meeting at Clontarf, Dublin, Steele's influence was most remarkable. With a green branch in his hand, he paraded the road between the metropolis and the village, and induced the people to return home, and thereby he saved thousands of lives, for the artillery was there ready to be discharged at a moment's notice. His conduct on that day is well remembered in Dublin. I shall go no further, as it would be alike painful to myself and other friends of the illustrious dead. He sleeps his last long sleep in the cemetry of Glasnevin, near to the tomb of the great leader whom he loved in life, and the following simple but true inscription points out the everlasting resting-place of as noble hearted an Irishman as ever walked the earth—it is, "HONEST TOM STEELE."

D. F. McCARTHY—THE "DESMOND" OF THE "NATION"—ON THE PROPOSED SITE OF THE MONUMENT TO TOMMY MOORE.

To be sure, Leinster House has its associations, and the learned society therein located its traditions and its living activities in favor of art; but considering the bucolic nature of the exhibitions so frequently held upon its lawn, and taking into account that Moore was by no means a pastoral poet, his standing in everlasting bronze amid the sights and sounds that are to be seen and heard twice or thrice a year within that well-boarded enclosure, seems somewhat of an incongruity. To consign the wittiest man of his generation to the perpetual iteration of bulls—to fill the ear attuned to the notes of the dying swan with the gabble of geese, destined for daily death and deglutition—to fix the tired-out literary writer still drooping o'er his pen—and to make the inspired singer of the melodies of Erin, whom the artist so happily represents as just catching the linked sweetness and sorrow of the Coulin, or some other grand old Irish song, be stunned in reality by an Irish variation of the Ranz-des-Vaches from the short-horns around him—all these considerations, it must be confessed, present the poet in a rather ludicrous point of view.

The wishes of the living Moore should also, I think, weigh somewhat in the selection of a site for his statue. When Dublin began to be proud of her brilliant son (first having learned that he was well received in good society in London), the Royal Dublin Society, to its credit, was the first, and I believe the last, that ever thought of making some provision for the struggling bard, when it offered for his acceptance one of its best salaried appointments. The poet, however, declined the proffered post, though coupled, as he himself says, with the permission of "residing on the premises." Little did the self-reliant bard think that the society would one day have its revenge, and that he who scorned to recline in the easy chair of the Librarian, or to sit perched behind the awful desk of the Secretary, would be compelled for ever to stand a brazen janitor at its gates.

Taking for granted that the decision of the committee will be re-considered, the question is, where are we to put the statue? The Byron of Thorwalsden spent some twenty years in seclusion and sawdust beneath the London Custom House. The Moore of Moore, I trust is not destined to endure an equally ignoble eclipse. I think the original site in College-street, a good one. A public monument ought to be visible from various points of view, and this one of ours could there be seen from the openings of about twelve different streets and quays. But its claims are not merely optical. If we compare small things with great—Dublin with London—they will be found much graver and deeper. The spot where George Canning stands at Westminster, facing the venerable hall of St. Stephen and the modern miracle of Barry, in the presence of all of the greatest, best and wisest that can arise in England for a thousand years, is probably the proudest in the world. But next to it (though how inferior in dignity to one that stands at the very central heart of a great empire whence all its arteries are fed!) and equal to it in being the place past which every thoughtful, observant and inquiring visitor to our city must go, is the first selected site in College street. It is beside that University which, though no very fostering or discerning mother to him (not having been able to afford subscribing even for one copy of his Anacreon, poor old lady!) is ever associated with his fame; and it is before that classical temple, eternalized by the eloquence of Grattan, where for eighteen years of his life at least, Moore could not have doubted the possibility of Irish freedom, and the splendor of Irish independence. To think of the glory of Grattan in that region seems desolate without turning to the genius of Moore! Byron has blended their names in one immortal and too-truthful stanza—let Art combine the Statue of one with the Temple of the other.

To be sure, the Temple has now become a Bank, and it has been suggested that no poet but the author of the "Pleasures of Memory" would feel at home in such an unusual position. Now, though our poet was "of imagination all compact," it may be said of him that he understood the realities of life as well as any one, and that for its uses, conveniences and sustainments he "knew a Bank," perhaps as well as dainty Ariel or even Mr. Rogers himself.

A new site has been recently suggested—namely, inside or through some opening of the splendid railing of the College Park in Nassau street. If there were any great central street opening there, to which the statue might form an appropriate termination—or, if the College would take away from the singularity of one statue standing awkwardly opposite either Dawson street or Kildare street, by giving the solitary poet a file of not unworthy companions (her own children)—among others say a Swift, a Goldsmith, a Burke, and a M'Cullagh; or, in days to come, a Hamilton or a Rosse; then, indeed, the boulevard by the old trees of Trinity would be one of the first situations in the city. But if not, then, emphatically no. Where then are we to place our statue? An incorrigible friend of mine suggests that we cannot put "the poet of all circles" into a square. Let that mathematical difficulty save the Bard of Erin from the dismal angle to which for a moment he has been doomed. The angle, however it may be smoothened or stuccoed, plastered or painted, raked or rolled, can never be the right angle at which pilgrims to the shrine of our poet from the east and the west of the world are to meet. If the venerable Cathedral of St. Patrick is never to become for all of us, for all the sons of the Gael, a Valhalla for our heroes, whether of "sword or pen," like the Abbey of Westminster, let us not at least inaugurate a miserable "Poet's Corner" beneath the cracked chimney-pots and blackened foliage that congenially harmonise at the back entrance of Leinster House.

A RAMBLE THROUGH WEXFOBD ON FOOT.

By a Correspondent of the Wexford Independent.

I dropped my ramble where the Flying Shilmalier dropped its passengers, over the central arch of the bridge of Enniscorthy, and there again I take it up. I bade farewell to my ex-military fellow-travellers, and bent my way to the Cathedral to visit the grave of our late good Bishop, who had been but a few days interred. When I entered the Sacred Edifice, a solemn silence reigned over all—broken only by the sound of my own foot-fall, as I passed over the tiled floor of the nave, towards the rails of the Sanctuary.

A solitary female was reading her prayer-book, at the railing, and as I stood looking at the grave, one of the women whose business it is to sweep the church, passed near me, with a dust-pan in one hand and a sweeping-brush in the other, who in an under tone said—"it is a poor sight to see him there." Nothing appeared to have been stirred since the day the funeral obsequies had been celebrated—the windows were still veiled in black, and the columns of both sides of the nave were wrapped in the same mourning.

On turning round to depart, I observed the mural monument in memory of the late Right Rev. James Keating. The inscription is in Latin, but the panegyrics of the living cut into the cold marble over the dead, all come to this—born, lived and died.

On my return down the street, the white old windmill-tower of Vinegar Hill came right in view, and a sudden thought flashed on my mind to visit it for the first time in my life. It is needless to say, that old stories of it had grown with my growth, and strengthened with my strength. In my younger days I had listened with commingled feelings of delight and horror to tales of deeds of bravery and of blood enacted there, from the mouths of parties who were present on its crest or summit on that eventful day, which crushed the hopes of the insurgents, and extinguished the fire of rebellion in Wexford, in the summer of 1798. I repassed the bridge, took the road to Solsboro for a short distance, turned to my right up a lane, followed it for some time again, wheeled to the right through another extremely narrow lane, or borheen, and in a few minutes more I was standing in front of the old circular tower, which I am proud to say appears to be kept in a very good state of preservation. From the appearance of the stone-facing to the ditches on either side of the narrow lane, I infer that it is to-day of the same width as it was in '98, and if so, there must be some anecdotes of blood and slaughter concerning it still remembered.

I now took my stand upon the rock to the right of the tower, and as the sky was clear and bright, I had a fine view of the greater part of the country. To the eastward of me was Oulart Hill, now possessing more interest for me than ever, from the nature of my thoughts at the moment, and the place at which I stood. A Shilmalier "gunsman," who had been at the hill, often told me the victory was the effect of mere chance. When the people saw the soldiers approaching, they were for running away, and some actually did so, but seeing their retreat likely to be cut off by the party of yeomen cavalry, they returned, lay down behind the ditch, waited the near approach of the redcoats—fired—rushed—and made smooth work of the poor North Corks in a very small space of time.

Again, as my eye ran down the valley of the Slavery I had a view of celebrated Three Rocks. The flat about the tower does not occupy a rood of land, very little more than what a Barony of Forth man would call a good "mill ring." The ascent to it from all points, save that towards the town, is easy, but from the town it is steep and abrupt.

Mr. Redmond's laudable anxiety to fish up from the sea of oblivion our local poets and poetry, our local songs are nearly all nearly out of vogue. The dance-house, the wake-house, and I might almost say, the village public-house, as Mr. R. knew them in his boyhood, are amongst the things that were, and the songs which made the cobwebs quiver on their collar-beams, are seldom or never heard. The ample kitchen chimney-corner of the farmer no longer echoes the voice of the singer, whilst the large bright turf fire blazed under the supper-pot, and the flax-wheels of the young women whizzed on the kitchen floor.

A literary treasure has turned up—no less than a second copy of the first edition of Hamlet, the quarto of 1603. During the week (says the Athenæum) an Irish bookseller has been mysteriously hawking about London this precious work, which has hitherto possessed the rarity of a manuscript. The only known copy belonged to the Duke of Devonshire, and was reprinted a few years ago. We have now, therefore, a complete copy of the original text of Hamlet, and the newly-recovered leaf contains, we are told, a new and important reading. Of course many hearts are sore at missing such a treasure. It found its way, however, into the possession of Mr. Boone, the bookseller, in Bond street, at the cost, we believe, of £70, and subsequently into the hands of a well-known and indefatigable Shaksperian collector, for the moderate price of £120. We have Messrs. Boone's authority for stating that the book, which by the terms of sale to Mr. Halliwell remains in their possession for three months, may be seen at their establishment in Bond street by Shaksperian and other students.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1856.

THE CONSTITUTION AND FANATICISM—THE FOREIGN VOTE.

In the present distracted state of public affairs, it is not a little remarkable that what is called the Foreign Vote, is almost without exception, arrayed on the side of the Union, with the Democratic party, in favor of James Buchanan.

In the many disputes regarding the best interests of the country, this Vote has been always in favor of bold and expansive views of National policy abroad, and strictly uniform and conservative measures at home.

The element which has been so fiercely assailed because of its alleged want of sympathy with Republican principles, which the American or Know-Nothing party has waged war against, as dangerous to the liberties of the country; which that party has gone into secret conclave, and with solemn conjuration conspired to destroy; in the hour of darkness and danger, is found a solid bulwark of defence, staunchly supporting the integrity of the Constitution and the indissolubility of the Union.

When the Confederacy of the States was first formed, it was apprehended by the Statesmen and Patriots who created it, that many influences would militate against the harmonious working of the system—that they would repel rather than attract the forces necessary to blend together in the confirmation of one solid, compact body.

The Federalists were for imparting powers to the General Government, which the Democrats wished jealously to withhold.

But time dispelled erroneous opinions, and the trial of a second war with England gave strength to the Union, and established a sisterly affection among the States.

The increase in material power, in agricultural and industrial resources, in Trade, Commerce and Population, has since that period been such as to place this Union among the first of the powers of the world.

It has clearly demonstrated a doubtful problem in the theory of Government; it has been a noble vindication of the exercise of the prerogative of man to chose his own rulers; a glorious attestation of the value of Civil and Religious Liberty.

The flag which has protected the commerce of the country, has invited to its shores the oppressed of every clime. With hearts glowing with affection for this Republican form of Government, devoted to its principles, as the just and truthful expression of their political creed, Irishmen have united their destinies with it. By their industrial strength and numbers, they have developed its resources and augmented its material and national power. They found the country free, and they have aided in making it great.

After centuries of persecution for the sake of Religion, they beheld the dawning of a new era. Across the Atlantic in the American world, they beheld man regenerated, freed from the despotisms of other climes, and in the enjoyment of Civil and Religious Liberty.

In reverting to the past—for an oppressed people have long memories—they remembered the civil wars and contentions which had brought carnage and desolation on their own fair land.

It was the zealot, the fanatic, the morose and gloomy Puritan—the ruthless Cromwell and his followers—who placed their country a prostrate and bleeding victim, at the feet of the Saxon adventurer.

They were familiar with the political machinery that accomplished this—the embodiment of sectarian views in the Statute Book, the Penal Laws to enforce them, the unjust Judges, the packed Juries, the perjured informer, the lawless or the Godless Governor. They came to a country free from all these calamities—free from any domination of class—free from an Established Religion, and from all persecutions in its behalf.

When years of toil have brought the reward which industry is certain to secure—when their children, born in the land, have won honor and station—fought as they themselves have fought, for the glory of the American Flag, and bled or died as the fortunes of battle have determined—what do they behold?

From Massachusetts, from the spot where the Puritan Pilgrim first made himself a home, the same Puritanical spirit rises after long years of dormant life, and true to its former instincts' in the name of righteousness, preaches intolerance and persecution.

It makes the Slavery of the Black Race in the United States, the specious pretext for its sinister aims. It has the stiff-necked arrogance, as of old, with an intelligence suited to the Spirit of the Age; but it has the same bigotry at heart, the same unconquerable lust for dominion.

It seeks to rule these United States, to control the affairs of this free country, to be the dominant principle in its governmental supremacy, to dictate its National policy, legislate on morals and unite Church with State.

Irishmen have suffered too keenly from this spirit of old, not to know it now, in whatever garb it chooses to appear.

Who will submit to its dictation—in the name of Abolition or Free Soil—when on the merits of these questions, there is no right, no truth, in its behalf? Must the provisions of the Constitution which binds the States together, be disregarded? Must reason and common sense be overborne, to give place to the irrational views of intolerant enthusiasts?

Will the cry of "Freedom" be sufficient to hallow every outrage committed in its name?

There are no delusions so shallow as popular fallacies. The Free Soil doctrine, which would exclude Slave Labor from new territories, by arbitrary enactment is a false one—no assumption of right, so absolutely wrong. Can this exclusion be supposed to benefit the Slave? Will his position in one State or another add more or less to his physical or moral welfare? Will not the extension of Slave Labor over a wide surface, restricted as it must naturally be, by the causes which call it into existence, yield innumerable benefits to the condition of the Slave, and ameliorate the evils of thraldom?

Writing from Monticello, April, 1820, Thomas Jefferson has said—

"Of one thing I am certain, that as the passage of slaves from one State to another would not make a slave of a human being who would not be so without it, so their diffusion over a greater surface would make them individually happier, and proportionally facilitate the accomplishment of their emancipation, by dividing the burden of a greater number of coadjutors."

Or if it be supposed that weakening the power of the Slave States in the Senate of our Union, and placing it in a minority, is a sure step towards the emancipation of the Slave, it is a fatal and absurd delusion. It may be said, however, that the preserving the territory for Free Labor, is of service to the Union, by keeping it free from Slavery, which would stifle its energies and destroy its otherwise active life. But this, even if it were true, in the effect imparted to the individual State, would be destroying the Union itself by the very means taken to benefit it.

It would be a total disregard of the rights of the Southern States, leading as a certain consequence, to a rupture, dangerous to our existence. By the laws of Congress at the present moment there is nothing to prevent the settlement of all agitation on the Slavery question, in a peaceable manner, in accordance with the wishes of the people of a Territory.

But, say the Republicans—the Abolition Puritans—we shall secure Kansas to freedom, if we can but elect John C. Fremont to the Presidental Chair!

Can any true lover of his country give his support to this man and his measures, when they perpetrate a flagrant violation of established rights?—when the questions involved are but of doubtful expediency, at least? when the wisdom of human legislation is too narrow-sighted to determine what would be the ultimate result of even honestly-intended benefits to Free or Slave Labor by arbitrarily restricting their limits?

All this, too, is to be done at the dictation of that old Puritanism that lives again in the guise of modern Abolition.

The love which every loyal heart cherishes for these United States—the allegiance of every adopted citizen—instigate an unfaltering opposition to principles so hostile to the stability of the Union, and which, if not arrested, will inevitably overthrow it.

In the coming struggle for political ascendancy, this Puritanical party must be overcome; for, if it succeed, it will rule this country with a rod of iron, reviving the persecutions of the past, crushing the hopes and happiness of millions of the human race, and destroying the most glorious fabric dedicated to Freedom ever erected on earth.

THE DEVIN REILLY TESTIMONIAL—LETTER FROM MITCHEL.

Reilly's old friends are gathering about his grave from every quarter. To-day we publish a communication from the truest and warmest of the comrades with whom in Irish politics he was identified. Between Mitchel and Reilly there existed the utmost affection, strengthened and intensified by a thorough unanimity of sentiment on all questions relating to Ireland. They felt, thought, labored, and together nobly revolted against England. In our generation, they were the first to revive the republicanism of Wolfe Tone, and inspire the National movement with the simple and direct principles which the United Irishmen were organized and sworn to enforce. And now that Reilly sleeps beside the Potomac, and that his little household has been left a dismantled craft to the caprices of the sea of life, Mitchel, with a full heart and hand, comes forward to help the brotherly work, which, with the blessing of Heaven, is designed to rescue an honest grave from an ungracious obscurity, and give peace of heart, and sunshine, and a few of God's good gifts to a widowed home.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oc. 15, 1856.

MY DEAR MEAGHER:

As my address is now Knoxville, and not Tuscaleechee, the copies of the Irish News containing the excellent address on the subject of the "Reilly Testimonial Fund," and the names of the Managing Committee, &c., came to me a full month after their respective dates. As I was too far off to be consulted, I feel obliged to the movers in this affair, that they have taken my full and zealous concurrence as a matter of course, and so placed my name on the committee. Certainly no man in America is so strongly bound by all ties of gratitude and affection, to promote the movement, whether in honor of the memory of our brave friend, or for the substantial benefit of those he has left behind him in this cold world.

I send my subscription—twenty-five dollars—which you will please to hand to Mr. Haverty.

Faithfully yours.

JOHN MITCHEL.

Thos. F. Meagher, Esq.

Immediately after the November elections, effective steps will be taken to bring the movement to a successful maturity. Whilst the elections are pending, active proceedings in behalf of the Testimonial, are necessarily suspended; or if they be not suspended, so many exciting incidents and questions of a more immediate consequence interfere, that they are naturally of a less efficient character than they would otherwise be. After the elections, lectures will be delivered in Boston, New-York, Philadelphia, and other of the larger cities, in aid of the funds. In the meanwhile, it deeply gratifies us to find, that several of the Irish papers have published the address of the Managing Committee, and that some of the old Club-men of '48, in Cork and Dublin, are generlousy moving in the matter.

FREEDOM'S NEXT BATTLE-FIELD.

Again is the United States about to become the battle-field of Freedom. The contest in November will be only second in importance to Bunker Hill or Saratoga. The old despotisms of Europe, were shaken to their foundations in '48, have gathered sufficient strength to keep down the people at home, and prosecute their conspiracies against the suffering and discontented nationalities of the Old World. But so long as this grand Republic remains intact, enlightening by its example and emboldening by its strength the hoping and oppressed people of every clime, tyranny is not safe in Europe. It is in danger at the Tuilleries, surrounded by its spies and armed mercenaries—it is in danger at Naples, with its yawning dungeons and clanking fetters—in Vienna, with its superb military despotism—in Moscow, with its barbaric pomp, and in England, with its sham Constitutions, scheming diplomacy, aristocratic insolence, and Asiatic plunder. This is the only country in the world where the People rule. The advocates of Monarchy may call it a government of rowdies—a reign of the bowie-knife and revolver; a small street brawl may be magnified into a social revolution, and the swift justice executed upon the guilty offender may be designated red murder. But it cannot be gainsayed that from the ranks of the People, men are taken and placed in the highest offices of the State. No outside, exclusive class exists in this country, who claim an hereditary right to fill the offices of honor and emolument—to crowd the army, and the navy, and the Church, with the brainless and impotent progeny of a worthless aristocracy, or to quarter a host of dissipated gentility upon the hard earnings of the poor. The People have the reins of government in their own hands. If they be loosely or tightly held, that is entirely their own affair. In short, the government of this country forms a glorious exception to all the other governments of the world. Labor is here the patent of honor—industry is the noblest escutcheon. In Europe, they are the marks of inferiority—the badges of slavery. To keep the laboring classes down and rob them of the fruits of their toil, aristocracy is elevated and royalty is deified. This Republic is a living repudiation—a withering rebuke of all this humbug, and is consequently looked upon by European monarchs as a potent menace to the standing Despotisms which ride rough-shod over suffering Humanity in the old world. This American Republic, though separated from them by three thousand miles of ocean, is the only stumbling block that interposes between the return of the kings and rulers of Europe to the gloomy tyranny of the Middle Ages. It is no wonder that they regard with jealousy and hatred the commercial prosperity and territorial expansion of the Union. No wonder that they are anxious to have fifteen stars blotted from the Constellation that illumines the Western hemisphere and sheds its quickening rays upon the Democratic masses of Europe. It is natural that they should use their influence to break up and divide this Republic into a North and a South, whose arms should be raised against each other in suicidal strife. The name of Democrat is a terror to the kings of Europe, and they accordingly array themselves against the Presidential candidate of the Democratic party of America.

It is a curious fact, that the whole of the Press of England, from the organ of the Court down to the least influential mouthpiece of Aristocracy, have become campaign papers in the Black Republican interest. They are all opposed to James Buchanan,

He is a man not unknown to the Courts of Europe. If he were not a stern Republican, who could not be tampered with—if he were false to the Union—if he could be used or cajoled by the wily diplomatists of England, there would be no opposition to his election. This English and French interference in the affairs of this independent Republic is a piece of impertinence that should not be tolerated. Has it come to that pass with the American people, that Queen Victoria and Louis Napoleon, the Duchess of Sutherland and Mrs. Beecher Stowe, shall select a President for the United States? Is "Dred of the Dismal Swamp," or the Declaration of Independence to become the political text-book of the free men of this Union? Shall charlatans and traitors—shall foreign governments and soulless Abolitionists mar the work of Washington and pave the way to the destruction of the Union?

It is brought up as a grave charge against James Buchanan, that he attended a conference of American Ministers at Ostend, to take counsel, at a very critical period of European affairs, regarding certain matters which might probably endanger the integrity of the Union or disturb its peace. This charge is made against him by the venal Press of his own country, which, with slavish sycophancy, pay adulation to the Courts of Europe. Every member of the Ostend Conference was a monarch in his own right, was as free to meet at Ostend as the representatives of monarchy were to assemble at Aix La Chapelle, Vienna, or Paris. They met to look after the affairs of this Hemisphere—to see that American interests should not be compromised, and that none of the great European Powers should be permitted to obtain a permanent foothold in our neighborhood, where they could interfere with the extension of our commerce, or threaten our shores in a time of war. For this patriotic vigilance, the Ostend Conference is denounced by the Black Republican organs of America, and is anathematized by the English Press. But the Cincinnati Platform endorses it, and upon that Platform James Buchanan has taken his stand. Shall the self-respect, dignity, and freedom of the Republic be sacrificed to the predominance of English, or French, or Austrian influence on this Continent? No! The turbulent factions that have been stinging the Republic for the last two years, and infusing their poison into its veins, will disappear with the mosquitoes, on the 4th of November.

The man who sits in the chair of Washington, Jackson, Jefferson, and Monroe—who, unsceptered and uncrowned, exercises an authority more potent than the Cæsars', and takes charge of a confederacy grander in its design and more glorious in results than ever Roman consul or Greek monarch swayed, must be a candidate acceptable to the people of every section of the Union—that man is James Buchanan.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

We have heard it remarked by some of the clearest and oldest heads of the Democratic Party, that the present contest for the Presidency has elicited a greater number of intellectual efforts than previous contests, for many years past, gave rise to. The grave nature of the controversy—the priceless interests at stake—freedom, commerce, and national glory of the highest order—the prospect of the evils to be averted or incurred—every circumstance quickens the wit, whilst it inflames to the fiercest intensity the patriotism of every citizen who desires to see the equality and unity of the several States of the Union preserved, and through them the supremacy of Republican institutions secured on an impregnable foundation in the world.

The speeches of Senator Hunter and Governor Floyd—the letters of Robert J. Walker and Rufus Choate—are not less remarkable for their deep research into the Constitutional history and Commercial statistics of the country, and their impassioned adjurations to all good men, promptly and compactly to unite and ward off the peril which menaces the Republic.

Of the former, delivered at Poughkeepsie, we have already written at some length, having studied it previously with great advantage, in consequence of the solid information it contains, and with infinite delight, owing to the lofty tone and splendid illustrations with which it abounds. To the speech of Governor Floyd, we make no special reference, it having been delivered in this city—under the portico of its most impressive public edifice—and in the presence of thousands representing the capital as well as the labor—the ships as well as the sinews—of New-York. Special reference to it we felt to be unnecessary. It was a scene visible to the most populous of the great cities, which from the rice-fields of Georgia to the pine-forests of the Penobscot, stud the Atlantic seaboard. It was a scene of which the furthest flock-owners beyond the Texan Colorado, have heard by this, and by the account of which they will in the midst of their rude cares be deeply moved.

Indeed, we have seldom, in the political world, looked upon so grand a picture. The broad and towering back-ground of dark-grained stone—the colossal columns fashioned like those which upheld the master-piece of Phidias, in the sunny air of Attica—the clustering spars, discernible from the crowded roof-tops, and thickly fringing the warehouses and wharfs for miles—the massive, stately, and boldly-sculptured stores and counting-houses rising up all round, reminding one of the grand things told of Florence and Genoa by Schlegel—the dense multitude in front of these, blocking up the thoroughfare to the right and left, as far as one could see—the steps of the Exchange between the columns, grouped with the substantial men of the city, ship-owners, bankers, merchants whose argosies are "bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, a third at Mexico, a fourth for England," and other notables—and then, foremost of them all, this fine old Virginia gentleman, speaking as a brave Athenian would have done in the Pnyx, for the Laws, the Democracy, and the Immortal Gods.

Following close upon this great manifestation of the City against the Seditionists who would cripple and coerce the South, or failing in this—as fail they inevitably would, for there is flint and steel in the gallant South, and she stands right loyally by the Constitution in this mortal strife—would isolate, impoverish, and prostrate the North;—following close upon this impressive lesson read to the Seditionists at the Merchant's Exchange, we had the letter of the Hon. Robert J. Walker to the Democratic Committee of Pittsburgh. A more telling appeal for the Union—a more valuable defense of the South—a more severe and appalling admonition to the reckless experimentalists of the North—has not all through this busy and stormy campaign appeared. Written in a popular style, it interweaves the most solid facts and statistics with the sentiments of the genial, high-spirited, and true-hearted patriot, and does so with an exquisite felicity of order and effect. His picture of the calamities flowing from the extinction of the Union is sketched and colored with a hand of terrible truthfulness and power. It is the warning of an experienced statesman—one who has faithfully served the Commonwealth in one of the most responsible and sacred offices which could be confided to a citizen—and the old and the young of every party, North and South, now on the very eve of the fatal day—the day that is to decide the destiny of the Republic—should take these solemn words to heart, and be prepared to sacrifice everything—political associations, social considerations, political ambition, political rewards, everything—everything on earth—rather than these predictions should come to pass.

"No man values more than myself the countless blessings and benefits of the Union. But just in proportion as are its great advantages, will be the unspeakable disasters which would follow from its overthrow. I have never believed in a peaceable dissolution of the Union. If the disaster comes, it will be attended by civil war, and the sword will be the umpire. How can it be be peaceful? Who is to arbitrate between the North and the South? Who is to have the army, the navy, the national banner, the public treasure or revenue, the Capitol of the Union, the Government archives? and how are we to divide the public lands and common territory? What compact or treaty of peace between the contending parties can take the place of the Constitution? and how or by whom are the new governments to be formed and pacified? No, my countrymen; if in the madness of sectional passions and geographical prejudice, you overthrow the Constitution framed by Washington and the sages of the Revolution, you can never provide adequate substitutes. Those who have achieved our country's ruin, can never re-gather the scattered fragments of the Constitution, and rebuild the sacred edifice. No, it will be war, civil war, of all others the most sanguinary and ferocious. The line which separates the North from the South will be known in all history as the line of blood. It will be marked on either side by frowning fortresses, by opposing batteries, by gleaming sabres, by bristling bayonets, by the tramp of contending armies, by towns and cities sacked and pillaged, by dwellings given to the flames, and fields laid waste and desolate. No mortal hand can lift the veil which conceals the unspeakable disasters of such a conflict. No prophet vision can penetrate the dark abyss of such a catastrophe. It will be a second fall of mankind, and while we shall be performing here the bloody drama of a nation's suicide, from the thrones of Europe will arise the exulting shouts of despots, and upon their gloomy banners shall be inscribed, as they believe never to be effaced, their motto,

'Man is incapable of self government.'"

Colonel Doheny's speech before the Brooklyn Union Club—the greater portion of which appeared in this paper three or four weeks since, and has since been published in a pamphlet—came in fortunately in the midst of these noble efforts we have enumerated. Fortunately, for it forcibly dwelt upon certain points which the gentlemen we have named, in their letters and addresses, left uncovered. Fortunately, for it broke ground at a time when the most impetuous efforts were being made to dislodge what is called the Irish Vote from its long-established concentration in the constitutional forces of the Democracy. Pope Gregory, O'Connell, and a battalion of other influential authorities had been disinterred—political St. Patricks disentombed from anything but Free Soil—to convert the disciples of Jefferson to the Exeter Hall faith of Ward Beecher.

Two points particularly strike us in this most useful and admirable speech of our friend, Colonel Doheny. In the first place, he repudiates the attempt that has been over and over again made to seduce the Irish-born citizens from the Democratic party on account of Herbert, who killed poor Keating in Washington, being a Democrat, and the Democratic party being held falsely and foully by the Abolitionists and Sectionalists responsible for the crime.

On the subject of the Missouri Compromise, he is as equally conclusive.

Mr. Sumner calls it a "compact," "a solemn compact," and the "crime is its repeal." A legislative compact is, in its very terms and idea, a manifest absurdity. The assumption of the power to do any legislative act, is in its own nature an assertion of the power to undo it. Legislative action is the exercise of omnipotence by the legislature within its own sphere, and that omnipotence it cannot forfeit or abdicate for an occasion. This would be divesting itself of its highest function. So far as to abstract constitutional right. If then a Congress be incompetent to bind itself, "a fortiori," it is incompetent to bind another Congress.

With these letters and speeches circulating amongst the people—as they have thoroughly done for the last six weeks—confirming sound opinions, and keeping false ones at a distance, no one can have the slightest fear for the result on Tuesday next. The same guns—which from Brooklyn Heights announced the nomination of James Buchanan as the Democratic Candidate for the Presidency, will, as sure as that day comes round, announce in due season his election to that, the highest office in the gift of any people on this earth. James Buchanan is elected.

THE ENGLISH NOMINEE.

The London Times, October 7th, is very indignant that our Government should dare to interfere with British intrigue and philanthropy in Central America. English aggression is "protection." The extension of the American influence on American soil is "fillibustering." White serfdom and factory enslavement is "British freedom," and the domestication of the colored races is "tyranny." The Thunderer announces that our conduct will have the effect of putting the official power of this country into other hands. John Bull still dreams that this is one of his provinces. We are undutiful, and he is indignant. He says, "The Democratic party has now had its swing," and that, "It is high time for a transfer of power to other hands." He appeals to the respectable Anglo-Saxons—that is, his friends the Orange Lodges, the Know-Nothing rowdies, and Plug-Uglies of Baltimore.

While England has endeavored to create a ruffianly fanaticism to divide the Democracy, she appeals to the vanity of wealthy snobbery, and threatens exclusion from Court circles. Americans shall be debarred of the privileges of flunky trappings and the crab-walk in the august presence of royalty. Fremont and Stowe shall enjoy the favors extended to Gen. Tom Thumb. They are the drawing-room pets, "Ango-Saxon cousins," and almost subjects; the American crutches of old gouty John Bull.

It is a great thing, this great international system. It means the government of the world by a few royal and aristocratic families. By it, has been ruined, Spain, Portugal, Ireland, Greece, India, and every country that drifted or was forced into the whirlpool of diplomacy and imperial protection. The Democracy of this vast republic are animated by a spirit, fatal to the huxtering intrigue, dark conspiracies, secret societies, family quarrels, and combined monopolies of "the great European system."

More than once by open violence and fillibustering piracy, have the lords endeavored to regain their lost foothold. Beaten back, they secretly plot and bribe and embroil and divide. Well may we be the object of their unwearied anxiety, for our system is fatal to their system.

Buchanan does not please the English oligarchy. He assimilates to the old rebel, Washington. He has imbibed the Monroe doctrine. Old Hickory stiffens his back bone. He bends not to my Lord Clarendon. Buchanan and the Democracy are therefore denounced. They are unmanageable by the imperial system.

We remember how the Rowcrofts, Garrisons, Blackwells, Schoulers and other English born subjects, with the Irish Orange Lodges, took the lead in the Know-Nothing conspiracy, and how the English press and the Irish orange aristocrats, Lord Dungannon, Dr. Drew, &c., exulted over the Know Nothing storm, as a British triumph.

The poison which the English know so well how to administer, seemed to work effectively. Distracted and weakened, the Democracy appeared to fall back at the advent of the disunion champion—Fremont—the English nominee. The game goes on. Already the mockery of a divided army is terminating in the fusion of the Fremonters and Know Nothings. Let the old guard of the Democracy stand to their arms. America is threatened with no ordinary danger. Fremont is not merely the leader of disunion fanatics. He is the nominee of the Imperialism of Europe, as opposed to the Republicanism of America. "Bleeding Kansas," is but the stepping stone to monopolies in church and state, a standing army and privileged preachers, as they exist in "mother country," so fondly and frequently alluded to.

If native treason, and Irish Orange fanaticism, backed by the wealth of the wealthiest oligarchy that ever the world saw, could defeat Buchanan, he would be defeated, and the lordly enemies of the Democracy would make this election another terrible crisis in the history of America. But the combined free men of this great and extending Republic will march shoulder to shoulder, in dignity and order to the polls, and defeat the English nominee—John C. Fremont.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

"Pete," continued the villain, now turning to the negro, "step in here, and let the ladies have a full view of your comeliness."

"What you say, Massa?" inquired the Negro, stepping in as ordered.

"Let the ladies see your beauty and good looks, you black woman-killer," answered Brand, with a grin almost as broad as that which showed the white teeth in the other's ebon setting. "Do you rememer my instructions, Pete, and if so what are they?"

"Not to have no noise anyhow, Massa, and to spread a carpet fit for ladies to walk on from the bottom of the staircase to the well in the backyard."

"There's a gold eagle for you, my jewel of fidelity?" said Brand, once more turning round to where the sisters lay. "You hear him, ladies, and you had better heed him too! He is a fellow that will stand no fooling, and who thinks no more of a life than I would think of playing pitch and toss with the devil for my soul. It would be 'heads I win' with him, and 'tails you lose;' for a number of pious people think that he is sure of me in either case."

He left, but not before the Negro had brought up a tray of bread and meat, a decanter of some kind of liquor and a jug of water. The door was then bolted and barred on the outside and the sisters could hear his last directions, as he descended the crazy stair.

"I shall not be back till the day after the schooner sails—probably the day after to-morrow. Let them have all they want until then; but if they scream, you may have your will at them and then do what you like with their bodies. Should there be any symptoms of pursuit, upset the spirit casks on the floor below and then set fire to the building. Never mind its burning, for I mean to get it insured to-morrow for a couple of thousand at any rate—or five, if I can get them. It is a mere shell and would become a heap of ashes in less than ten minutes by the watch. Their screams could not be heard outside, even as it is—much less when such a fire had enveloped the whole building in an armor of roaring flames. Even if they were heard for a moment before being suffocated, lament the loss of your two cousins who were staying with you on a visit. Who could disprove your statement? The ashes of a white woman, I should guess, are much the same as those of a black: the bones of both are white, and they would furnish pretty pickings to the coroner."

These horrible instructions acquired a four-fold horror from the fact that, apparently, it was not the speaker's intention to have the sisters overhear them. Threats made to them directly, might be made to intimidate, and without any design of being carried to extremities: but these were the confidential instructions of the arch-ruffian to his instrument—there could not be a doubt, therefore, of their entire sincerity.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SCHOONER TAKES IN CARGO—A BUNDLE OF SOME INTEREST—QUEER TASTE SOME LADIES HAVE—THE SCHOONER'S NAME.

"Helpless and dumb, he heard the rogues discuss
What plan of murder would them suit the best—
With other things of high import to us,
Which, when he cometh here, shall be confest;
For they to him did bare their inmost breast,
Thinking him dead, or like to be so soon."

Fletcher

Two days after the arrival of the sisters and their imprisonment in the farm-house, a large three-masted schooner, clipper-built and apparently quite new, dropped anchor just within the mouth of one of the bays along the New-Jersey shore, and hoisted a signal which was immediately replied to from a timber-yard on the opposite side of the bay. A sloop shortly after stood across from the yard in question, and lay to along side of the schooner. The hatches were then removed from both vessels, and in less than half an hour, the whole material for a slave voyage was transferred from the coaster to the hold and decks of the sea-going craft.

While this operation was going on forward and amidships, three men were seated aft on the quarter deck, who apparently enjoyed the most sublime unconsciousness of danger either sublunary or celestial.

There was Brand, enthroned in a Boston-rocker—his feet elevated against a hen-coop, a cigar in his teeth and a bottle of the best Otard within easy striking distance of his hand.

To his left sat Squinting Dick, no longer disguised in the sad-colored garments and blue goggles which he wore when we first beheld him. Dick's vest and stock had in them all the colors of the rainbow; a heavy curb chain crossed the former, and the brightest of glass diamonds glittered impudently in his bosom. His trowsers were tight—his hat a Wide-awake—his coat a Shanghai, with a gold ornament on its collar, proclaiming him a member of some secret order. The device was a death's head and cross-bones, surmounted by a dark lantern and one shining star. Dick had evidently "made a raise," partly, no doubt, by the sale of the sister's baggage—which belonged to him as the entrails of the deer are the perquisites of the successful hound; and partly by the liberal pay which Mr. Brand, as theatrical manager, allowed to the higher grade of "artists" in his employ.

Facing these two, sat Maine—the late mate of the Vulture. He was dressed in working style, and the furious oaths which he let fly at the sailors and lightermen in the fore part of the ship proclaimed him to hold some position of authority.

Between the three lay something heavy and not quite motionless, tied up in a sack. Following the outline and indenntations of the bundle, it took the figure of a man with his knees tied up to his neck and his wrists locked together below his ankles. A twenty-four pound shot was fastened to the lower corner—the mouth being firmly secured with double knots on every lashing. Whenever the bundle stirred, Squinting Dick or Maine brought down a heavy boot-heel on that part which should have been a human head—supposing our surmise as to the contents to be correct.

Something like a moan would be heard after one of these iron poundings.

"Blast me," muttered Maine, in a voice which had all the fury of a yell compressed into the hissing of a whisper, "Blast me, I say again, Dick, if that last kick of your'n ha'n't dislodged the gag! We'll have him screamin' like forty thousand airthquakes jest in no time, and then, I guess, every one of them dod-rotted lightermen will be charging an extra V, jest to keep their mouths shet about his! Curse it, Brand, why didn't you overboard and have done with him, as we were spanking down the bay? If we were caught with him aboard, the trading business would be jest a fly-flap to it! Don't think you're so safe, nuther," he added, turning round uneasily to scan the entrance of the bay. "If one of them cussed revenue cutters was to double that point there, I guess we'd find ourselves in queer-street."

"Shut up, you chicken-hearted fool!" cried Brand, leaping to his feet as he spoke, and shaking his clenched fist in the other's face. "I've made it all right in New-York, don't I tell you! Even if the cutter were to come, would it be any harder to pitch him over the bulwarks here?"

"Shut up yourself," answered Maine, in the same fierce whisper, or by the God that's over us, I'll let you see who's cap'n of this craft! Would you heave a fellow overboard in still water, and it not more'n a few fathoms deep. Go to the side there, and drop a shirt button over; you can count the thread holes in it as it lies on the bottom. No, no, Brand, you don't catch me in any such scrape as that! When the schooner's under full sail, and in deep water, I wouldn't mind; the crew might swear what they pleased, but the body could never be found. I'll put my neck into the noose as far as the next man, when I'm well paid for it; but as to keepin' it in there, when you begin to tighten the noose and the other fixins after this fashion—then, by Heavens, you may count me out."

"Never mind it," said the runner, who began to be convinced of his imprudence. "There's no such danger as you speak of, and you'd better get the boat lowered astern and see to the alteration of the name. The lady was particular upon the point; and if she finds you haven't got it done when you get to sea, I wouldn't be in your shoes for the cargo landed safe on Cuba."

The captain called a couple of the men aft, and the stern boat was lowered from the davits until its keel just touched the water.

"Take your paint pots with you and step down lively lads," he said. "Paint the new name along the streak where the other has been painted over. What is it we are to call her, Brand? I never can think of the name of that wild-cat Mexican."

Brand took from his pocket-book and handed him a slip of paper, which Maine then passed down to the men.

"Do it as quick as you can, my lads," said the runner, leaning over the taffrail; "never mind how roughly, for she hain't got much scholarship, though she talks like a queen."

"Aye-aye, sir!" answered the foremost painter, dipping his brush into a pot of scarlet paint; "we'll put a flourish round it and then it 'll be sure to please."

When Maine and Brand resumed their seats, Squinting Dick pulled out a newspaper and asked the latter to read one of the advertisements inserted under the head of "Personal."

"Let's have no secrets," interposed Maine; "let it be read aloud for the good of the company."

"Here it is then," said Dick, "but you little know the value of it. Attention now, while I read; and when I'm done, I'll explain how it's little less than a gold mine that I've hit upon."

He then read the advertisement, which ran as follows:—"Anne and Ellen Plunkett, sisters, from Ireland, who landed from ship Vulture, at Coenties Slip, on Tuesday last, are earnestly requested to address a line to their distressed father, care of John Hancock, box 249, at this office."

"For my part," said Brand, gruffly, "I can't see how you're to make any profit of it, except by selling me, and that would be a rayther dangerous game. If the old man is anxious to find them, he must go to work in a different way. He can have 'em, though, in ten days or a fortnight, free gratis for nothing and all expenses paid," added the ruffian with a grin. "You may then sell him the secret, with all my heart; but charge a good price for it, Dick, for I hate doing anything small; and besides, Mrs. Haskins has a few vacancies which I promised her should be shortly filled."

"Then she shall have them," answered Dick, with a burst of generous recollection. "The last time I was in trouble she stood my friend; she shall have them, you may depend on it and yet the secret is a gold-mine, none the less."

"Will you enlighten our darkness, then?" asked Brand, with a slight sneer.

"Let me alone, and I'll tell you," answered Dick, contemptuously. "You're up to all the ropes on this side of the water, Mr. Brand; but there are mysteries on the other too deep for your simple comprehension."

"Explain—explain yourself;" cried the runner, impatiently.

"Well, I found it all out by the letter which I took from them when we met. You remember how careful they were to let no one—not even this lover of theirs"—he continued, giving the sack another kick with his sharp heel—"know to what part of the country they were going. They made a secret of it, and the letter explained the why. You see, their father—whose right name is McCarthy—was long ago engaged in some of what are called the Whiteboy conspiracies of the South of Ireland; these conspiracies are leagues the people make to keep the landlords from destroying them any faster than the law allows. This McCarthy—John McCarthy is his name—(for you see I saw him this morning in answer to the advertisement)—this John was a kind of a leader of the Whiteboys, and was present at a collision they had with the constabulary down near Ballinabola Cross, where a magistrate, called Fortescue, was shot dead in his saddle.

"It was believed then, and couldn't well be otherwise, that Fortescue was shot by some of his own men—for the ball entered at his back while he was in front of the peelers. Be that as it may, he was thirty-first cousin or thereabouts, to the Lord Lieutenant; so they made a great fuss about his death, offering five hundred pounds for the capture of McCarthy, as the ring-leader, and hanging and transporting as many innocent people for being accessories as the police chose to swear against.

"McCarthy, it seems, escaped, and settled in Western Illinois, where he purchased a large tract of country, the value of which has been increased a hundred-fold by the construction of a railroad. In fact, I should guess from what he told me—though he still retains the manners and appearance of a well-to-do Wexford farmer, and nothing more—still I should guess, I say, that there can be few richer men in Illinois.

"The night before last, after leaving the girls in the farm house, I went and laid the whole case—as I found it in the letter—before the British Consul, expatiating on the fine chance it would give him to display 'energy' by putting the extradition laws into force. He was delighted at such an opportunity of proving his zeal—promised me double the reward—and a clerk of his and myself were just about to set off post haste for Illinois, when next morning this advertisement appeared, as if the victim were unwilling to cost us any unnecessary trouble.

"I saw McCarthy this morning before coming aboard—described his daughters to him so that he wept for joy—told him then, that they had formed an unfortunate intimacy during the passage, with two young men, in whose company they left the ship. He thanked me—though his heart was wrung—and paid me handsomely for my trouble, (which was in fact a pleasure;) and after having done this up in the neatest style, I went straight to the Consul's office, who applied for a warrant before I came away. Doubtless," continued Dick, with one of his most hideous smiles, "the father of the girls ere this is safe and sound in irons which will never be taken off him till he is hung in front of Wexford gaol."

"By Heavens! Dick, you deserve to be made a bishop," shouted Brand exultingly. "I was afraid we'd have to use force with the girls; but with this knowledge, we can terrify them into any thing we wish, and hang their father into the bargain. It's a splendid opportunity, Dick—but how much did the Consul give you? How much, I say—for you know I must have my share?"

"N-n-n-nothing," stammered the artist, irresolutely. "He promised me five hundred pounds, but has given me nothing."

"You lie, villain!" shouted Brand, seizing the other by the neck, and pressing his hard thumbs across the wind-pipe until the roots of Dick's tongue became visible. "I gave you all the plunder the girls had with them, and you never would have heard of them, but for me. I'm entitled to the full half of the blood money, and by G—! I mean to have it. I tell you solemnly, Dick," he added, slightly relaxing his grip, "that I am going halves with you in whatever comes of it; and if you are not agreeable, I can readily put you where the money will do you little good."

"You shall go halves, Brand, certainly," gasped the more cowardly villain of the two—"only you took me up so quick; I meant to make that proposition myself. I did, upon my honor as a gentleman!"

"Enough, then!" said Brand, with a broad grin. "Having received an assurance of that kind from a person of your character and position, I at once retract any injurious remarks that may have escaped me. If that apology don't satisfy you, Dick, you must be hard to please. I quote it stereotyped from the Congressional reports."

"Have done with your eternal quarrellings," interposed the Captain. "I want to know what kind of a she-devil it is that we have got below in the cabin? And is the fellow along with her a brother, as she pretends, or is he a lover, or only a husband?"

"Much the same as her husband, any way, I guess," replied the runner; but "whether married or not, is a question we have no concern with. He's an old friend, at any rate—for they lived together in Texas as man and wife when I was engaged down there in the smuggling business, about six or eight years ago. I had been in Texas before; in fact it was my hiding-ground, whenever New-York became too hot to hold me.

This Pedro, who is with her now, was at last arrested for stabbing one of the Custom House officers, and was condemned to death. While there is life, there is hope, however; the sentence was commuted into imprisonment in the chain-gangs for life—but here you see him well and hearty, with money in his pocket, and a mistress, once handsome, though not always true to him, for his companion.

"After his arrest, though she had then two little children, she took up with a young fellow called Mowbray—a mere lad I had brought down with me on the occasion of my first visit.

"Let me see," he continued, as if striving to associate some half forgotten ideas in his mind. "It must be fully twenty years since I first saw the boy, who was not then more than five or six years old. He was born, Dick, in the very farm-house where the Plunketts are now confined; and I picked him up under peculiar circumstances, which, while appealing very strongly to my particular sympathies, excluded him from those of the rest of the world. His father was hung, I believe, for the murder of the boy's mother, and a gentleman whom he suspected of too intimate connections.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

"It occurred to me that young Mowbray might hereafter be useful to clean my pistols and boil coffee; and as none of the Christian souls on Long Island would touch such pitch, lest they should be defiled, I took him along with me, and he grew up in Texas. As he advanced in years, he became one of my boldest helps; and after Pedro's arrest, my protege succeeded him as lieutenant of the gang, and lover, it was said, of the Donna Isabella.

"It was known that Pedro had long been jealous of him; and there were suspicions that this youngster had been at the bottom of the first lover's arrest. What became of him, I do not know; but it could easily be ascertained from Pete—the negro at the farm-house—who remained with Mowbray after I came home, and did not rejoin me here until about six months ago. I have an indistinct recollection of his telling me that Mowbray was shot while attempting to assist in the escape of some prisoner. It could hardly have been Pedro he wished to liberate; and, now that I think of it, it would almost seem to have been in some part of the States the attempt was made. When I see Pete next—which will be this evening, I hope—I must ask him."

But to return to the Donna, the next I heard of her she had by some means acquired a large sum of money, and was anxious to embark in this business along with her first lover, who had escaped and rejoined her. She had intended going to the regular Portuguese house; but I met with her by accident, and she was persuaded (not without some trouble, to be sure,) to trust the agency to me.

"Thus it was," said Brand, in conclusion, slapping Maine upon the shoulder, "that I have been able to make you commander of this goodly craft. I thought it right to tell you these things beforehand, that you might know what kind of people you have now to deal with. Try any humbug with her, and she'll knife you even faster than Pedro, whose hand is forever wandering to his dagger hilt. But do your duty by them—land the cargo safe where they wish you, and you'll be able to buy a ship for yourself out of what you make by this single voyage."

"Brimstone and furies!" bellowed Maine, suddenly leaping to his feet and pointing to the long tongue of land which formed the further promontory enclosing the bay. Brand's story had interested him so much that he had relaxed his usual vigilance while it continued.

Behind this strip a small black funnel was now seen advancing, and presently, having cleared the extremity of land, a little steam tug stood across the mouth of the harbor and bore down directly on the schooner.

"Sold, by heaven!" yelled the runner, seizing one end of the sack, and beckoning Dick to take hold of the other. "Over with him!" he shouted fiercely—"it's our only chance."

"Your only chance to be hung, you mean," cried Maine, laying hold of him and pulling him astern. "Down with you into the boat, and you, Dick, along with us. I guess the lady may be captain of her own ship for this voyage."

So saying, he shoved the runner into the boat which the painters had just abandoned, and then jumped into her himself. The artist, livid with terror, had already cut away one of the davit ropes, and Maine severed the other with an axe.

"Give way, you dog!" he yelled, seizing the bow oar himself and tossing the other to Dick. "Keep the schooner between us, so that we cannot be seen from the steamer's decks."

Dick pulled for his life, and as the boat shot out from beneath the vessel's counter, he looked to see her name and the words were gleaming there in scarlet characters, as if they had been writ in blood.

"Isabella De Cascales"

[to be continued.]

FINEEN DHU'S PROPHECY.

Cold and buried was Fineen Dhu,
In the depth of his grave, for long, long years;
His head was marked by an ancient yew—
The clay on his breast was wet with tears.
Tears of fervor, and low complaints,
Were mingled with sobs and earnest prayer;
Whoever has been to the graves of saints
Will know what halo was round him there.

Cold and buried, so long he lay,
His looks, his accents, were nigh forgot;
But some words he uttered ne'er passed away—
Too sacred kept in the peasant's cot;
And uttered beside his evening fire,
They filled the hearer with dread delight,
Or nerved his bosom with bold desire—
The theme of many a wondering night.

And these were the words the old man said,
When death was loosing his prisoned soul:
"No grass shall grow o'er my buried head,
Till years appointed above me roll;
But when a sorrel at length shall rise,
And shade my grave with its leaf of green,
Then war shall blacken these happy skies,
And roll its thunders o'er all the scene."

Young men came to their drooping-time,
And sank, at length, in the parent clay;
Children grew to their golden prime,
And weeping, fled from the land away.
Winters lingered, and summers came,
And snows succeeded to skies of blue;
But spring and winter were all the same—
No verdure flourished o'er Fineen Dhu!

But why did the young men leave the land?
Or why did their tears so thickly fall?
Because of the tyrant's ruthless hand—
Because of the nation's hopeless thrall!
The people suffered—and yet no flame
Of Freedom quickened their bosoms through;
But ever their hearts remained the same—
As bare as the grave of Fineen Dhu!

But man and nature cannot be changed;
Hearts will kindle, and grass will grow.
Time's revealings may be deranged,
But naught can hinder their future flow.
Seeds long-buried at length shall bloom—
Old predictions shall yet be true;
Life shall spring from the meanest tomb!
Why not from the grave of Fineen Dhu?

When tyrants harassed, in days gone by,
The Helot hurled them back the blow;
And none so weak but have dared to die—
Why not in Ireland the case be so?
Weeds have flourished on Memphis' walls—
Flowers have blossomed, and thistles, too,
Above the marble of Shadmor's halls!
Why not on the grave of Fineen Dhu?

Slowly, slowly, the Heavens' design
Was formed; and when on the saint's cold bed
The dew in the evening cold did shine,
His clay with a fruitful strength it fed.
And soon a leaf, from the barren mould,
Most strangely quickened, appeared to view;
A leaf of sorrel; and when unrolled
It quickly strengthened and daily grew.

And soon and sudden there came a day—
A day of clouds and of lurid light,
Of rending thunder and distant fray,
Of noise, and rumor, and sore affright—
And across the valleys, and o'er the plains,
There swept a dozen disordered bands
Of royal troopers, with shattered reins,
And broken sabres, and bleeding hands.

And down afar, from the blackening height
Behind them, a roaring cheer was sent—
A lengthened peal of volcanic might,
Like thunder shaking the firmament.
And a dozen answering shouts rang out
From hill to hill, through the smoky air,
As if a demon prepared the route
From ev'ry summit that threatened there.

The troopers scattered to right and left,
Some o'er the river, some round the road,
Some by the village, some down the cleft;
And some through the churchyard's calm abode.
And there, desiring a spot of rest,
Came one who lay by an ancient grave;
And the blood flowed from his mangled breast
On a lonely sorrel that there did wave.

A peasant gazed from the churchyard stile,
On the bleeding man, with a face of grief;
But his pity changed to a fearful smile,
When he saw on the grave the promised leaf.
And he cried: "The Heavens have owned our cause!
With Freedom's blossoms the earth is bright—
Here goes to wrestle with England's laws—
On yonder hill I shall be to-night."

* * * * * * *

Is there a prophet—a man of prayer,
Whose eyes the future can well divine—
While yet he moves in the nether air,
Oh, let him give us a warning sign!
We'll trample passions and sordid cares—
On books and banners his deeds we'll write,
Mingling his name with all our prayers,
Till Death or Freedom shall crown the Right.

F. O'R.

MODERN GREEK LITERATURE.

Modern Greece; A Narrative of a Residence and Travels in that Country, &c. &c. By Henry M. Baird, M.A. Illustrated Harper & Brothers.

The title of this work sounds strangely on the ear. The words Modern and Greece seem a very inapt and unnatural combination. It seems an invasion of scenes, deeds and feelings the very history of which supplies the place of imagination, so remote from all latter-day earthliness appears the glory, the heroism, the beauty, the cultivation, the simplicity and grandeur that inspire and irradiate all that which, from wistful childhood to appreciative manhood, we have been accustomed to associate with the word Greek. To us that word conveys the most anti-modern meaning of any phrase in or out of use. To us it out-antiques the antique, is "older than the hills," is symbolical of the most ancient elegance, and never can be linked with the word "modern" without instantly suggesting the mock-heroic.

Who would go to Greece if it were "modern?" Travellers do not travel from Thermopylæ to Tenarum, from Ithaca to Ceos, to note the sayings and doings of nineteenth century Greeks, or if they happen to do, the nineteenth century Greeks may thank the shattered marble of Pentelicus and the pagan beauty of Doric ruins for the recognition. Why, here Mr. Baird gives us over sixty illustrations to his "Modern Greece," all of which, with the exception of a view of the University of Otho at Athens, a Greek Church, a peasant woman of Exarcho, and a few landscapes, have no more to do with "modern" Greece than has Prometheus. The illustrations are of mysterious mounds, of cleft columns, of oracular stones, of eloquent dust, of weird things that "syllable men's names," and speak in the voluble awe of tradition of the gods of Greece, and never so much as remind one of the nineteenth century at all; save that, indeed, in the shadow of the beatifully-haggard visage of the Parthenon, the wandering student meets a small antiquated form, absorbed in the dust and ruin of ages, from which he only awakes to see if the intruder be not Lord Elgin, or some other modern civilized foreigner or ignorant native, come to steal or smash up the history of the land. The little man is the "Old Mortality" of Hellas—Mr. Pittakes, the "Inspector-General of Antiquities within the Kingdom of Greece." He is the best informed of the Greeks in ancient topography, and is thoroughly devoted to his favorite pursuit, which is, says Mr. Baird, "to see that the statuary and works of art, discovered from year to year, are not carried out of the country, or broken up for lime by the ignorant peasantry." It is thus we are reminded of the nineteenth century.

When the past has been so eloquent, the present struggles at a disadvantage. Mr. Emerson did the cute thing when he entered the philosophic arena, and announced himself as having "no past" to his back. He thereby got rid of all odious comparisons, and was only responsible for his own steps forward. As he had not the good fortune to be born in some other age, he determined, like a wise man, to adopt all the plans of the age that preceded him—that was his right as the heir of the centuries—and knock into utter oblivion all those who projected them. Unfortunately, however, for "modern" Greece, it is not a live Yankee like Ralph Waldo Emerson, and cannot devour the past like so many pumpkin pies, and stand a self-opinionated epitome of the devoured. It must be content with the past, however it may shroud the present struggles of the little land.

Mr. Baird makes a very presentable book, a great portion of which, as was to be expected from a student, devoted to loving parlance about the scenes, and architecture, and ruins, the names of which have been whipped into every school-boy.

Travelling extensively, both in Northern Greece and the Peloponessus, he visited almost every site sacred to the history and literature of the country. Interlaced with descriptions of those visits and scenes, are clever glimpses of the manners, customs, religious ceremonies, and other incidental phases of the still-life existence of the modern dwellers on the soil—who bear very slight, if any, resemblance to the race immortalized by the poets and sculptors of the anti-Christian era. At a wedding party in Athens, the author had an opportunity of witnessing a large gathering of the "upper circles." There, as here, the latest Paris fashions were in the ascendant, although there were some gentlemen clad in the genuine Albanian costume. These, the author insinuates, were "free and easy people," who desired "to pass for the more independent class of society." The ladies were more remarkable for a fresh, healthy look, than for delicacy of feature. The observant Baird hints, however, that these beauties were not warranted to wash, and that the "belle of the ball-room makes but a sorry figure next morning." He continues:

"All the tight-lacing in the world could not give an Athenian young lady the wasp-like contour which is the admiration of French dress-makers and misses in their teens. Disguise it as they may, there is a tendency to embonpoint among the ladies, many of whom waddle about with a grace which would seem charming in the eyes of our Dutch progenitors. The men, on the other hand, are a lean, lank race."

The freshest portion of Mr. Baird's volume are the chapters devoted to "modern Greek literature." Notwithstanding the cold shiver such an announcement gives us—still thinking of the Greece—we must not disregard the raiseworthy labors unfolded to view, nor undervalue the hopes which the revival of Greek literature raises in the minds of good and zealous men and scholars. We will not dwell on the dim state of Greek letters before the revival which now may be about a century old, but, with Mr. Baird's aid, present some notice of those writers to whom it is principally due, as well as some who are contemporaneous with us.

Adamantius Coray (or Coraes) is the father of the movement. He was born at Smyrna, 27th April, 1748, and was at an early age sent to a school where, as he says himself, "the master gave very little instruction, accompanied by overmuch chastisement." This school was a type of all the rest in Greece at the time. Education was at a low ebb, titles of "most learned" and "most wise and learned" being lavished upon all who could decline a noun or conjugate a verb. A studious nature soon taught young Coray to despise these titles. With difficulty he succeeded in obtaining instruction in Italian and French, and afterward Latin, from Bernard Kenn, chaplain to the Dutch Consul at Smyrna. In 1732, then being more than thirty-four years old, he went to France to study medicine. He remained here (Montpellier) for six years, when he made Paris his permanent home. He soon acquired the reputation of being one of the ablest Greek scholars, and the First Consul employed him lucratively. Coray longed to diffuse among his countrymen the knowledge he had acquired. He deplored the state of ignorance into which they had fallen, and, with a view to at once give them the best authors, and prepare the mind for their reception, he commenced in 1805 the publication of the principal Greek writers, with copious notes. An edition of Isocrates was the first, and it raised yet higher the reputation Coray had already won as a critic. Plutarch's Lives, Strabo's Geography, the Politics of Aristotle, his Nicomarchean Ethics, the Memorabilia of Xenophon, Plato's Gorgias, and the speech of Lycurgus against Leochares, succeeded each other at short intervals, and were followed by the Strategies of Polycenus and of Onesander, Æsop, Xenocrates, and Galen, Marcus Aurelius, Plutarch's Politics, Epicletus, Arrian, and several others, making in all thirty-nine volumes. "The utility of such a series can be estimated only by those who consider the rarity of such books in Greece, and the still greater scarcity of dictionaries, works on classical antiquities, and annotated editions." Coray prefaced each volume with a dissertation which, in many instances, had but slight connection with the text. Thus he sought to convey such thoughts as the state of the people suggested to him. Many of the more important of these prefatory tracts have been collected in separate form. However devoted to his country, Coray was opposed to the Revolution of 1821. He believed in a gradual intellectual progression, and expressed his faith that freedom, "after twenty, or at most thirty years, would have been surely and absolutely obtained, with incomparably fewer evils." He died at Paris, April 1833, having lived four-score and five years.

Neophytus Doukas, a scholar of merit and of considerable learning in his country's literature, was accounted next to Coray, from whom he differed in toto as to the construction of the modern Greek tongue. Overlooking the changes of twenty centuries, and the consequent necessities of language to meet the ideas which have sprung up since, Doukas insisted on a rigid adherence to the ancient language, and struck out every word of foreign origin. He attempted the re-introduction of a quantity of tenses, cases and constructions which had fallen into disuse: so that his paraphrases accompanying his editions of various writers, are said to be as obscure as the original. He was very industrious, and though barely acquainted with Latin or any modern language, overcame many obstacles. He edited and annotated Sophocles, Euripides, Homer, Æschylus, Theocritus, Pindar, Anacreon, and Aristophanes—in all twenty-four volumes. "His notes are valued, but not read." Being a younger man, he survived Coray twelve years. After his death, Œconomus headed the school of philology which sought to restore the Greek by obsolete words and "involved construction of sentences."

Demetrius Galanos, an Athenian, went in 1786 to Calcutta, to instruct the children of some mendicants there. He acquired the English, Sanscrit, Persian and Hindostanee, and in a few years devoted himself entirely to the Oriental languages. Going to "the holy city of Benares," he clothed himself like a Brahmin, and in the space of forty years achieved extensive knowledge of Indian philology, and "made such attainments in their virtue and wisdom as to be regarded by the English Colonists and other Europeans, as well as by the most pious Brahmins, &c., as a most holy and learned man." He died in 1833, aged seventy-two, leaving nearly half his property, $6,000, and all his papers to the principal Academy in Athens. The funds were employed in building the University where his MSS. is preserved—six volumes octavo having been published, under the supervision of Mr. Typaldos, the librarian. "They consist of translations of various poems, and collections of wise and moral sayings, some of which, according to the assertion of learned Europeans, were previously unknown in Europe, and were published for the first time through the Greek version."

Neophytus Bambas, late venerable professor of Rhetoric to the University of Athens, was a man of extensive erudition. "A monk by profession," says Mr. Baird, "he had few of the prejudices which disgrace that class in Greece." He with two assistants translated the Bible into modern Greek, for the British and Foreign Bible Society; but he is better known to his countrymen as the author of several works on the Elements of Philosophy, Ethics, and Rhetoric, and of several Greek grammars, one of which, containing a comparative view of the ancient and modern forms, "seems written in a truly philosophical manner." Probably his most most important work is his volume of notes on several of Demosthenes' Orations. Mr. Baird regrets that "the learned professor of late years attached himself more and more to the Russian party," and adds with a sigh, "in the recent excitement at Athens among the students of the University, we understand that his pen was employed in inciting the people to the invasion of Turkish territory." Bambas was evidently something more than a Rhetorician!

In the way of History there is not much to show, the labors of that department, being chiefly confined to translating from English histories of Greece, Oliver Goldsmith's being the favorite, and the ordinary text-book in all the common schools of the kingdom. This is as bad, or rather as good, as Tommy Moore's "Lalla Rookh" being sung in the streets of Ispahan. To modern history, i. e. the revolution, several personal narratives, important to future historians, have been contributed. The principal of them is the "Memoirs of the Revolution," by Germanos, Archbishop of Patras, who was one of the conspirators who met at the Monastery oof Hagia Lanra, and the first to raise the standard of revolt. His work embraces the first three years of the war. He died in 1825. Speliades has commenced a work of the same nature—one volume of which is published. A. L. Marmonkas has collected in a volume all the Constitutions and official papers from 1621 to 1832; and Mr. Tricoupes, Greek Minister at London, has recently published a work on the same period.

Now come we to a batch of poets. Panagiotes Sautsos is, we learn, by many considered the best contemporary poet. The first volume of his complete works contains "Blackabas," "The Traveler," and the "Messiah," all tragedies. Of course we have not seen them, and must take Mr. Baird's word, that in style they are purely Hellenic, though the author did not stick ula Daukas to the ancient syntax. The greatest fault our author finds with Sautsos, is his "egregious self-conceit," where he compares some lines from his tragedy, the "Messiah," with some famous passages in Homer and Tasso, and even presumes to speak of them as equally beautiful!

Alexander Sautsos, brother of the foregoing, is a descriptive and satirical poet of considerable popular power. His late poems have been almost altogether political, the author being as much opposed to the government and ministry of Otho as he was to the Capodistrian administration. His writings, from their nature, are eagerly read, which gives them a double importance in the eyes of government, which has on sevreal occasions given Sautsos serious trouble.

A. Ranabes is quoted as a poet of great reputation, as well as an elegant prose writer, and professor of Archæology in the University of Athens. His dramatic poem of Phrosyne, founded on incidents in the history of Ali Pacha, of Epirus, is highly commended.

Athanasius Christopaulos is introduced to us as a "new Anacreon." We scarcely know, says Mr. Baird, whether his productions should be classed with the literature of modern Greece, for they are found rather in the mouths of the people, and in collections of popular songs, than in books. "He aspires only to the lyric, and in it excels all his rivals. He writes for all, and with freshness and simplicity. His muses, said a brother poet, inspired in the midst of flowery meads, and written by soft murmuring rivulets, have the fragrance of the rose and the myrtle, and glide naturally as streams of water." Younger bards, such as Salomos and Coumanaudes, are but mentioned. In the way of fiction, we have no announcement, save of an abundant supply from the French of Sue, Dumas & Co.

We must not forget our Old Mortality friend. Mr. Pittakes, who has devoted his life to antiquities, has published all the inscriptions to be found about the capital, with much antiquarian information, in a book entitled "L'Ancienne Athenes," and recently a more extensive work on the same subject. The formation of an Archæological Society for the same purposes, has published some useful works, and promises to be of great utility. A work against the prelacy of the Church, by Pharmakides, is alluded to as having created a great sensation when published.

These literary notes at least exhibit a desire of the Greeks to remember that they live in Greece, a fact with which the world at large is but very scantily acquainted. How few really are aware that there is a kingdom of Greece? We constantly hear of Rome—thanks to our painters and sculptors abroad, and the Know-Nothings at home—but of Greece, we hear no more than of Babylon, Tyre, Sidon, or Carthage. She might as well be, as Mrs. Malaprop says, "an allegory on the banks of the Nile," as "modern Greece." Will the new literature create a recognition—will it claim a hearing on its own soil? If it does, we shall hear of modern Greece.

We have received the ninth number of Gentillucci's "Life of the Blessed Virgin," published by Dunigan & Brother (J. B. Kirker), Fulton street. It is elegantly printed, the illustrations and engravings being very fine. When complete, it will form a most interesting work and become a valuable acquisition to the religious productions of the day.

Literary and Artistic News.

The Irish Banshee.—Dr. O'Donovan gives the following suggested explanation of some of the circumstances which may have given rise to the comparatively modern notion of the wailing of the Banshee previous to a person's death. He gives it on the authority of a friend, who indulges in philosophical experiments on many subjects, and who relates the following incident as having occurred in his own family:—"In November, 1820, when I was in attendance on a near and dear relative's death bed, in an old castle in the county Westmeath, I heard a most extraordinary sound, resembling that of an Æolian harp, but also having such a strong similitude to the human voice, it was more nearly allied to singing than to instrumental music. I never heard anything like it before or since. Had I been superstitious, I should have at once considered it to be the song or wail of the banshee. The sound appeared to me to be everywhere in the room, and not to come from any one point; and I feel certain that the servants in the house at the time might, with a little stretch of their fancy, have placed it anywhere except in the real locus from whence it proceeded—and that was the throat of the almost unconscious invalid. Under the circumstances in which I was placed I could not escape examining into the nature of the extraordinary sounds; and I found they were due to an involuntary action of the organs of voice, coupled with the spasmodic breathing of the patient, which changed every moment, producing a sort of ventriloquistic singing or melody, which was exquisitely harmonious, and perfectly unearthly, as was observed by one of the listeners, who did not venture to form an opinion as to the nature of the sounds she heard. The sound heard on the occasion referred to is not, I feel certain, the only instance of its occurrence, for I have heard of others; but sensible people generally do not like to speak of such things, and servants, nurses, and, indeed, others who have heard of banshees, and would believe in their existence without investigation, have attributed such sounds to their agency. I have known a shutter closed, when a window-sash was not entirely shut down, emit sounds not unlike the Æolian harp; but this was not the sound I refer to above. It was exactly what I have described, and, only for the circumstances under which it took place, would have been a matter deserving of notice and admiration. The other circumstance to which I refer was the death of one of those birds called willie-water-wagtails, which killed itself by striking itself against one of the windows of the bed-room the day of the night we heard the sounds deseribed. This trifling event was made curiously interesting by a sister of the sick person, who was living in the house, stating over and over again, from day to day, that she felt sure her brother would live till after a bird of this kind should kill itself at the window, for one had done so in several previous cases where members of our family had died in that room. Indeed she went so far as to maintain that it was always the case, and was preserved as a tradition in the family. I certainly gave little heed to what she said, till I was startled from my reading at the window indicated by a bird of this kind striking the window with great force, and falling on the window-stool stunned, and thence rolling off on the roof of a pantry or office beneath, off which I, in a few minutes after, picked up the bird dead, and brought it to the lady who had actually predicted the fact. It satisfied the family that the time was at hand that all had been looking to for some weeks."

Kilkenny Archæological Society.—The Kilkenny Archæological Society are about to publish in their annuary, "The Proceedings of the High Commissioners of Inquiry into the Grievances and Social State of the English Pale, anno 1537;" "The Book of Gerald, Earl of Kildare;" "Correspondence and Papers relative to Carew's wars, and Sir Edmond Butler's Revolt in 1569;" "Pedigrees and notices of various families of the South-East of Ireland;" "Records and Notes relative to the principal Monasteries and Ecclesiastical Houses, Churches, &c., of the South-East of Ireland;" "Records and Notes relative to the principal Castles of the same district;" inquisitions relating to lands, &c. &c.

Mrs. Ellen K., wife of W. E. Channing, Esq., died in Boston on Monday, 22d ult., at the residence of Dr. Walter Channing, at the age of 36 years. The deceased was a daughter of the late Hon. Timothy Fuller, and a sister of Margaret Fuller. She was a lady of rare accomplishments, and was very highly esteemed by a wide circle of friends.

Our readers may not be aware that the laws, or rather the custom of law in Denmark, gives perpetuity to copyright. On a late occasion, the children of Gelenschagez, who has been called the Shakspeare of Denmark, addressed to the Minister of the Interior of that State a petition for a grant of the copyright, for a hundred years, of their father's works. The reply of the minister informed them that in the opinion of the Procurer General, there was no occasion for any grant of the sort, and that by the law of the land, there was no doubt of the right possessed by the heirs of a deceased author to the exclusive right for ever of publishing themselves, or assigning to others, the right of publishing.

A Selection, in three volumes, of the Correspondence of Herder, is in course of publication, and from the interest and importance of the contents, is expected to command considerable attention. Professor Duntzer is the editor of the work, which will contain letters from Goethe, Schiller, Klopstock, Jean Paul Richter, Lavater, Jacobi, &c.

A curious collection of letters, relating to Wallenstein and the Thirty Years' War, has been discovered among the records of the Collalto family, in their castle at Pirnitz. These interesting documents are published by Herr von Chlumezka, Keeper of the Records at Brunn.

M. de Lamartine, who for some time has been in Macon, France, where he is suffering from rheumatism, has received from the Emperor of Brazil one hundred thousand francs as payment of five thousand subscriptions to the Familiar Course of Literature.

"The Street," is the title of Schillaber's new lecture-poem, for delivery before lyceums and literary societies. It is said to be full of "good things." Shillaber is widely known as the veritable Mrs. Partington.

Miss Harriet Martineau has published a selection of her articles from the Daily News. Strange that some of the best and most "spicy" leaders of the day should be written by an old lady.

The Illustrated Monday News is the title of a new periodical announced to be published at the office of the Klatteradatska (the German Punch), at Berlin.

The fourth portion of the Dutch translation of Macaulay's England has just been published by the house of H. C. S. Ery, at the Hague.

REMINISCENCES OF THE IRISH REBELLION—DEATH OF A '98 VICTIM.

(From the Dublin Telegraph.)

The October of life is fast carrying down the stream of time the few flickering leaves that clung for a while to their native stem: all are passing off in their turn to the deep vale of eternity. It is not long since I heard of the demise of one of the truest and bravest of the Wicklow insurgents of '98, and one of the few who could not be persuaded to take advantage of the amnesty act of a faithless Government, but preferred a subsultry or guerilla warfare. The subject of this brief sketch was James Doyle, of Athgo, county Dublin, near Rathcoole. His father was a wealthy farmer of the parish of Rathdrum. James was born in the townland of Ballinacor, where of first stood the castle of the famous chief, the unbending Teagh M'Hugh O'Byrne, and many were the tales of bravery and indomitable daring, of the repulse and defeat, did he hear in his boyhood from his father's workmen as they ploughed and harrowed up the ancient demesne around the old ruins of the lordly O'Byrne. In '97, when the squireen magistrates of that county were riding rough shod over a gallant people, he became an United Irishman, being then twenty-five years of age; and his associates soon raised him to the rank of captain. He was one of a deputation of twenty-four captains who met in the latter end of that year to elect an adjutant-general for the county, when, with acclamation, they appointed Garret Byrne, Esq., Ballymanus, to that important dignity; and they had no cause to regret it. If antiquity can claim respectability, he was of a first and noble family in the county Wicklow.

Doyle commanded his company, with a high reputation, at Mount Pleasant, Tubberneering, Gorey, Arklow, Kilcoven, and Vinegar Hill. After their defeat there he joined the southern division of the Wexford army, and was the first man to enter the town of Castlecomer, and set fire to the first house to distract the garrison; but after this division had to disperse he made his way by night to the northern division lying at White Heaps, and was at Carnew, Ballyellis, Ballygullin, and marched with that division under their two gallant Generals, Edward Fitzgerald of Wexford, and Garret Byrne of Wicklow.

On their defeat at the unlucky Boyne, and not succeeding in drawing out to action the northern counties, he returned, and, with the most daring of the remaining few, encamped in Glenmalure, where he continued with O'Dwyer till the end of the year and came off unscathed through all the skirmishes they had with the royal troops. It was he who first met with H. Downes and his party of King's County deserters, and conducted them to the encampment of Glenmalure, always actively engaged, and still protecting, when an occasion required it, the defence of his Protestant neighbors. And some of them afterwards gave him a generous return. One morning, at the dawn, as he and a companion of his name Kinshela, were descending a steep side of Lug-na-Coille, both going to their fathers, they perceived some persons advancing at no great distance, for there was an intense fog. They soon perceived them to be in military uniform. Unperceived by the soldiers they lay down in a deep chasm cut by the mountain torrents. The intruders were advancing in a direct line to the place where Doyle and his friend lay. It was impossible to escape, for there were nine of them. They had recourse to a stratagem that was practised before with some success. One wore a hat and the other a helmet of one of the fallen Britons. They placed both on the edge of the water-cut so as to appear as the heads of men, and, from a few yards distance, they addressed them in the military phrase:—

"Who comes there? Surrender this moment or you die; you are in the middle of our forces; escape is impossible; lay down your arms this moment, and advance one by one; we give you quarter." This bold address, coming from a quarter where they could perceive nothing but, as it were, two heads, astounded them not a little, and they stood for a moment. The soldiers now began to suspect that all was right on the other side. "Advance," said Doyle, "one at a time; pile your arms and leave them there, or you fall this moment." The arms were piled, they took off their caps and cheered, and then advanced to meet their concealed friends whom they sought. They had deserted from Arklow, and were going in quest of O'Dwyer. Gen. Sir John Moore was at this time encamped at the Glen of Imael, county Wicklow, and his second in command was the gallant Marquis of Huntly. It was grousing season, and a party of the officers proposed a day's shooting. It was to be a glorious day on the Wicklow Highlands. All was bustle; double guns were in requisition, a leash or two of the best trained spaniels were obtained from Dublin, it was a lovely morning, the zephyrs played lightly across the purple heath-bells. Some powerful spell should have been over the man that could have withstood that morning's invitation. At the appointed hour there were but two veterans ready to start for the mountain tops. They were both captains. They would have no postponement, and with two soldiers, and a native guide to act as marksman, after ascending they got on a flat, carpeted with a promising crop of young heath, a covey of grouse sprung up, and off went three or four shots in succession, and the well-known cry of "Mark!" rang through the rocks and chasms of the lordly Lug-na-Coille. Their fowling-pieces had been scarcely lowered when a dozen outlaws stood before them, with brazen and wide-mouthed blunderbusses pointed to their breasts, and with terrific and menacing voice called on them to surrender or die. "Stir not a finger or foot or you are down." The sportsmen stood petrified at the almost magical scene. "Ground your arms!" was again vociferated, "for you are in the centre of us." The order was obeyed, and Captain —— stepped forward to deliver up his gun. "No, no, gentlemen," said Doyle, "you are here as sportsmen, not as enemies, and on that score we war not with you, and will not compel you to surrender your arms." Delight beamed in the eye of the gallant soldier when he heard that magnanimous expression fall from the lips of the peasant outlaw. "Enjoy your sport," continued Doyle, "we will give you no further interruption." The canteen was uncorked, and Captain ——— filled a measure of the mountain drops," and said in homely phrase: "Here's your health. You are a noble set of fellows." He then filled a measure for each, and in return they toasted his health, as they filed off to a distant part of the mountain. At the time the shots were fired, the outlaws were lying asleep on a bed of heath in one of the deep ravines that was cut by the mountain flood, and were only awoke by the shots just fired over their heads. A night or two after, Doyle and his young friend Kinshela went to the home of the latter to get some refreshment and repose.

On arriving, they were brought to a tent where the general, the Marquis of Huntly, and some other officers were sitting. Lord Huntly had just been bantering the officers on being surprised by the outlaws. When Captain ———, who was present, turned quickly to Doyle. "What," said he—"it is not long since you and I met before. A prisoner now, and two days ago you were the victor." And turning to the general and marquis, he said, "General, this is the man I was telling you of; and I never can forget his noble generosity." The general and his lordship started up from their seats, and closely reguarded the prisoners. "So," said Lord Huntly, "the other day you captured some of our officers, and now are captured yourselves." "It is all the chance of war," said Doyle. The general and Lord Huntly entered into conversation with them, and offered them protection. They thanked them for their kindness, but said that a protection was of little use—that it would not stop a yeoman's ball. General Moore looked seriously at Lord Huntly; for, some short time before that, a yeoman named Finton, met a young man in the vicinity of General Moore's camp, demanded who he was, and asked why he dared to be there without a protection? "I have one," said he, and while drawing it from his pocket, Finton shot him dead. And although General Moore offered £100 from his own purse for his apprehension, he was never arrested. And another person was shot at the head of Glenmalure, by the Rathdrum yeomen, with the Marquis of Huntly's protection in his hand, and only a few miles from the camp. Lord Huntly ordered refreshments for the prisoners, and gave each of them a piece of money, and insisted on their taking General Moore's and his protection, promising them that the yeomen should be restrained. They now endeavored to stay at home, but the spirit of party was too high, and some young yeomen, and old ones too, with whom he had been on terms of friendship, had now become his deadly enemies, and yet had no charge of cruelty against him; for unless in battle, he was all on the side of mercy. Such was the case between him and a young man of the Rathdrum Cavalry, whose residence was near him. He heard that Doyle used to be coming home to his brother's at night, and retiring to some other place of secresy before day; and many an hour's rest his quondam friend lost in watching to shoot him. Doyle was apprised of this, and paid a similar attention to the other's movements. But the unlucky moment did not present itself to either. Matthew Davis, his own neighbor, and one of his own company, swore against him. This Davis was one of the gang that swore away the life of that ever to be lamented young gentleman, William Byrne, Esq., of Ballymanus. To avoid the dangers that surrounded him, he went to Dublin. Here again James Doyle had the spy on his back, and his lofty spirit had to bend to the protection of a British man-of-war, where he remained nearly four years in the Channel fleet, on board the London, (98,) where he had to endure the insulting epithets of "Irish Papist," "Croppy and Rebel," from his brother tars. Paid off after the peace of Amiens, he returned home in the spring of 1803. His father had removed from the county Wicklow, and settled on the farm of Athgo, ten miles S. W. of Dublin, at which place some of the outstanding men of '98 used to visit, and received the generous hospitality of the family. Arthur Devlin, one of his old companions in arms and relative, and the well known agent of Robert Emmet, paid him several visits, and endeavored to draw him into that conspiracy. He even called on him on the morning of the 23d of July, but failed in drawing him out, although his soul was with them. Still the hospitality of the family was extended to the proscribed.

After O'Dwyer had made his terms of surrender with Government in the December of 1803, one of the men, John Mernagh, Glenmalure, refused all accommodation with the Government. He left his native mountains in Wicklow and went to Doyle's, where he was kindly received. But the faithless demon pointed him out, and a troop of the Green Horse, a company of Foot, and some of the Newcastle Yeomen under Captain Church, of Pearmount, on the night of the 12th of February, 1804, surrounded the house, and after a dreadful resistance Mernagh was taken. Doyle's aged father and three sons, and likewise Larry Cullen, the tailor, were captured, and, as a reward for their hospitality, were honored with twelve or fourteen months' confinement within far-famed Kilmainham, as state prisoners.

Doyle himself escaped from bed, naked, through a window, and after a mile and a-half's run, took shelter among Lord Cloncurry's plantations, where he remained without shoe or stocking, or any covering but his shirt, the ground covered with snow, until the succeeding night threw its shades on his pathway, when, unobserved, he endeavored to get to a friend's place. All he suffered in the rebellion in fighting, marching, countermarching, and insults on board the man of-war, were, in fact, as nothing in comparison to what he endured during the twenty-one hours that he remained in this pitiable condition under the elements. The incarceration of his father and brothers seemed to have satisfied the misanthropic humor of Tom King of Rathdrum, and Doyle was no more the object of a hunt. Some years after this his old friend of the Rathdrum cavalry also removed to the neighborhood of Athgo, and still resides there. The asperity created in '98 had subsided, and they became as warm friends as ever. Indeed J. W. has been through life a generous warm-hearted fellow, and often over a tumbler of punch the two old friends (and enemies in turn) while away the evening hour over some tale of the past, disclosing to each other the stratagems for arrest, informations lodged, plans of defeat, and escape.

A truer patriot, or a more courageous man, did not exist than James Doyle of Athgo. He is gone! and may his soul rest in Abraham's bosom.

EFFECTS OF LAGER-BIER.

Doctor Dixon, in his Quarterly Scalpel, thus analyses lager bier and its effects both mentally and physically upon those who constantly indulge in its use:—

"There can be little doubt that by retarding the decomposition of the tissues in the human organism, lager-bier causes an unnatural deposit of fat all over the system in persons of sedentary habits, for we find that they suffer more from its injurious effects than those who by active exercise accelerate its conversion into its elements, carbonic acid and water. As an instance of this, compare the effects of lager-bier on our clerks and young men about town, and the German Turners, and the difference of its effect, or rather the effect of the counteracting influences which are working against it, will be immediately perceived.

"In women who take little exercise, lagar-bier acts as swill does on stable cows: it accelerates the secretion of milk, but furnishes it with no caseine or other nitrogenized substances, by which alone the infant can be sustained. The child will, consequently, have a watery and soft appearance, and be destitute of healthy color; it will be liable to effusion of water on the brain, and die readily from croup or scarlet fever. In such cases we have frequently observed the child improve by being weaned, even if fed upon the ordinary heterogenous compound called milk. We believe the taste of lager-bier is naturally disagreeable, and that it is destructive to beauty. Women preserve unimpaired their natural tastes for a longer period than men; in fact, they seldom become as vitiated in their tastes as men. I have observed that they seldom drink beer. In all the saloons you generally see some other drink before them. We know that by women in Europe it is considered vulgar to drink beer, although we never were informed why.

"It is little wonder that the German nation should remain subject to the rule of thirty six petty tyrants, when in fact beer, by its properties, destroys all fine distinctions, and its habitual use grinds the edge from our critical faculties. The beer-drinking portion of the nations of Europe will furnish us with an example. * * * * * *

"Its effects upon the external form, and upon the action of man, is already beginning to awaken attention. The depressed and broad heads; the flat though wide shoulders and breast; the straight back, and cow-like tread of its victims, is already known to keen observers.

"A great change takes place in the eye, when lager-bier is habitually drank. It has invariably a turbid and sleepy look, while its muscles are so much relaxed as to make it, as it were, hang in a defenseless state.

The effects of lager-bier in other respects are marked. The diameter of the head between the ears appears enlarged, and with it the back part of the jaws, giving to the countenance a three-cornered look, so characteristic of the Low Dutch face; the neck becomes thick, often hanging over the shirt-collar in wrinkles, in the region where phrenologists locate the organ of amativeness; the skin becomes red, with a blown-up, spongy surface, from which large quantities of fatty matter of an offensive odor are produced, giving the whole surface a greasy and disagreeable aspect. The habitual imbibers of this beverage are generally obliged to hold their cigars to their mouths, which being used chiefly as funnels for their favorite drink, seem incapable of muscular tenacity.

* * * * * *

The effect of lager-beir on the voice is very marked; and the rapid decay in the voices of the tenor singers of the German glee clubs, who lose not only the quality of the tone but the high range, produces in such societies always a great want of tenors; it has become a by-word among them to call a harsh, drawing voice a beer-barrel voice. This fact is well known to opera signers. * * * * * The offspring of such fathers [beer-drinkers] are all inferior in stature, and stinted in intellect, whilst those who marry later in life are often childless.

"Those whose souls appear to be the tail end of their appetite, say that lager-bier produces a good appetite; but we are reliaby informed that, although it may do so, it vitiates the taste."

At the October fair of Belfast sheep was again a short supply. Those forward sold from 6d. to 6½d. per lb. Springers sold at very high prices. Store pigs sold at 6d to 7d per lb.; suckers, at from 16s to 22s each. In the horse fair there was a very lean turn-out, bone being more evident than flesh. At Mr. Robinson's bazaar, Chichester-street, there was a large number of good farm horses disposed of by auction, rating in price from 20*l*. downwards. There was also a number of first-class horses disposed of by private sale, at the same place, at prices running from 20*l*. to 60*l*. The total number offered for sale amounted to 213 horses; 759 black cattle, 785' pigs, 233 ship, 3 calves, and 8 goats. Total number of stock, 2,001.

Michael Dundon, and several others, convicted at Ennis assizes, for attempts at assassination and burglaries and sentenced to transportation for life, have just returned from Bermuda to their native country, under what are called tickets-of-leave.

MILITARY NEWS.

On Tuesday, the 14th ult., the "Guyon Cadets," Capt. Thomas Murphy, went on their annual target excursion, to Hamilton Park, accompanied by Shelton's Brass Band. They looked well in their new over-coats, and presented a very creditable appearance. The array of female beauty, eighteen valuable prizes, and a pleasant entertainment, rendered the occasion one long to be remembered. Prizes were received from Capt. Phelan, Capt. Murphy, Lieut. Halpin, Lieut. Glynn, Messrs. Maher, Commerford, Berry, Kane, Connor, Tyrrell, Dean, Barry, Tully, Lynch, and some fair friends, whose names they do not desire to see in print. A letter of apology was received from T. F. Meagher, Esq. Capt. Lyons delivered the prizes to the sharp-shooters, after which several quadrilles, polkas, &c., were gone through in a manner which showed how well all were pleased with their day's enjoyment. The Company numbered thirty-five muskets, and the arrangements were complete, no expense being spared to make the occasion as pleasant as circumstances would permit.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, James T. Turner, of Silverton, Devonshire, to Olivia Anna, daughter of the late Francis William Hamilton.

At Taney church, Frank White, of Loughborough, to Sarah, daughter of John Barton, of Stonehouse, Donnybrook.

In Kilkenny, Richard Burnham, to Olympia, second daughter of Thomas Prim.

At Monkstown, Edward, son of the late Jeffrey Browning, of Caras Court, county Limerick, to Eliza, daughter of the late R. T. Mahony, of Blessington street.

In Dublin, Richard S. Mahony, J. P., D. I., Dromore Castle, county Kerry, to Mary Harriet, daughter of the late John Walker, of Shannon Grove, county Limerick.

At Brentingby, Leicestershire, James Fletcher Corbett, of Rock House, Gloucestershire, to Clarissa, daughter of the late St. George Gregg, of Dublin.

At Ennistymon, Wm. Francis, to Isabella Mary, daughter of the late B. Moran, of Lahensy House, county Clare.

At Kilbeggan, Henry Lynch Talbot, Captain in the Royal Artillery, to Henrietta Sophia, daughter of the Rev. E. Wilson.

At Cheltenham, A. Manera, of the 96th Regiment, to Marianne, youngest daughter of P. Thompson, of Cheltenham.

At Amiens, Ernest Charles de Witasse de Fontaine, to Charlotte, daughter of P. M. Murphy, Q. C., Dublin.

At Askeaton church, Alexander Henry Murray, Captain Royal Artillery, to Martha Frances Vincent, daughter of Thomas E. Davenport, J. P., of Ballinacourty House, county Limerick.

At Bray church, the Rev. Ferdinand Cotter Spiller, eldest son of William Spiller, Esq., of Uplands, Bandon, to the Hon. Anna Maria Bingham, daughter of the late Lord Clanmorris.

In London, Alfred Howse, Surgeon, L.R.C.S.L., and L.A.C., to Lucy Elizabeth, daughter of John Conroy, A.B., T.C.D., of Annesley Cottage, North Strand, Dublin, Solicitor.

At Waterford, George F. Hare, to Ella, daughter of St. George Freeman, of Waterford.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, Gerrard Tyrrell, of Dalkey, to Kate, daughter of the late Captain Atkins, of Cooladangan, county Wicklow.

At St. Mark's Church, William P. Grimshaw, of White House, Belfast, to Maria Julia, daughter of the Rev. Charles Campbell, Rector of Ardglass, county Down.

In Kilkenny, Anthony Creaven, of the South Mall, Cork, to Annie, daughter of the late Louis Rourke, of Kilkenny.

At the Chapel, Sandyford, William Nolan, of Flora Ville, county Kildare, to Jane, daughter of John Elliot, of Ludford Park, county Dublin.

At Templetuohy church, county Tipperary, William Leake Clarke, of Melbourne, Australia, to Anne Jane, daughter of Minchin Rudd, of Templemore.

At St. Michan's Church, William D. Love, of Oakfield, county Kildare, to Rosanna, daughter of the late Edward Burgess, of Dublin.

At St. Peter's Church, Dublin, William Henry, son of the Rev. William Herbert, of Dundalk, to Margaret Sophia, daughter of the Rev. Dawson Dean Heather, D.D., of 8 Eagle terrace, Upper Leeson street, Dublin.

At St. George's, Hanover square, London, Alexander R. Johnston, son of the late Right Hon. Sir Alexander Johnston, of Carnsalloch, to Frances Ellen, daughter of the late Richard Bury Palliser, of Castlewarden, county Kildare.

IRISH DEATHS.

In Dublin, the wife of Captain Lewin, of Cloghane House, county Mayo.

In Galway, Mr. Chatfield, Comptroller of Customs.

In Anne street, Dublin, Oliver M'Manus, for over fifty years a servant in the employment of Dr. Gibson, J. P.

B. E. Quadling, R. N., Inspecting Officer of Coast Guards, Achill, aged 65 years.

At Laughtilube, county Londonderry, Michael Kane.

At Lower Mount street, Dublin, aged 86 years, Joseph Gabbett.

At Athenry, county Galway, William Robinson.

At Brussels, Commander Hamilton Fitzgerald.

W. Owen Jackson, Barrister-at-law, of the Inner Temple, aged 56 years.

At Winkfield, Berks, the Hon. and Rev. Richard Fitzgerald King, son of Robert, second Earl of Kingston, in his 78th year.

At 116 Grafton street, Dublin, Edward Ponsonby.

Anne, wife of Richard W. Harrison, of Belfield, Raheny.

In Cork, Sophia Elizabeth, daughter of the late Charles Rousseau Burney, of Bath, and niece to Madame O'Arbiay, in the 78th year of her age.

In Cork, Anastatia, eldest daughter of Richard Walsh, M. D.

In Derry, Jane, daughter of J. Henderson, of Lisdillen.

In Wicklow street, Dublin, Elizabeth Flanagan, aged 62 years.

At Sirmount, county Cork, aged 95 years, S. M'Carthy.

At 49 Middle Abbey street, Patrick Francis, son of John Dennan.

At Tamlagh Rectory, the Rev. M. Carpendale.

At 28 Richmond street, Dublin, Phillip Dwyer.

At Castellmare, near Naples, the Hon. Mrs. Massy Dawson.

In Dundalk, Robert Macan Johnston.

At South King street, Kate, wife of Wm. Ward.

At Irishtown, county Meath, Jane, daughter of the late Patrick Russell, of Davidstown.

Of scarlet fever, Mary, daughter of Miles Jackson Mason.

At 5 Parliament street, Dublin, Mrs. Rebecca M'Lean, aged 79 years.

At Ardee, Catherine, daughter of the late Dr. Speer.

In Dublin, Andrew George Malcolm, M. D.

At Gosden, near Guildford, aged 47 years, Colonel Frederick George Shewell, C. B., 8th Hussars, and late Brigadier General of the Light Cavalry Brigade in the Crimea.

At Toulouse, Richard, second son of the late Peter, Count D'Alton, of Greenan's town, county Tipperary.

At Hollybrook, Donegal, Richard Coote, M. D., son of Sir Charles Coote, Bart.

At Henry street, Henrietta, daughter of the late James Drabble.

At Windsor, John Siddall, veterinary surgeon of the Royal Horse Guards, (Blue), after a service of 52 years in that Regiment, of which he was the last remaining member present at Waterloo.

On board H. M. S. Espiegle, aged 31 years, at sea, on the 18th of August last, off the Island of Cuba, George Henry Edwards, M. D., Acting Surgeon of the same ship, youngest son of the late Captain John Edwards, formerly of the 20th Light Dragoons.

At Gowran, county Kilkenny, William Shortall.

In Dublin, Mary, relict of George Dean Holmes, aged 76 years.

At Enderby Hall, Leicestershire, Joanna Maria, daughter of John Edmond Roach, of Kilvare, county Dublin.

Margaret, relict of James Nugent, of Streamstown House, county Westmeath.

In Dublin, William M. Phillips, late of Tullamore.

Special Notices.

PRICES REDUCED.

Fine Black Cloth Frock Coats	$ 6
Fine Black Dress Coats	$ 6
Fine Brown Frock Coats	$ 6
Fall Raglans	$ 6
Cassimere Business Coats	$3 50 to $ 6
Black Cassimere Pants	$2 50 to $ 5
Fancy Cassimere Pants	$1 50 to $ 5
Rich Moire-Antique Silk Vests	$ 6
Zephyr Cassimere suits	$ 6
Complete genteel Black Cloth suits	$12

Evans' Extensive Clothing Warehouse,
oct25 2mos Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton street.

Musical.—A young lady lately connected with the profession in Europe, where she studied under the first and best masters, is desirous of giving a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who may kindly favor her with a trial, may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trener, 90 South Eighth street, Brooklyn, E. D.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring, by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

The Hacking Cough and Soreness of the Chest of the season are immediately relieved by one of DR. ALLCOCK'S India Rubber Porous Plasters. Those who have used them affirm them to be the excelsior of plasters. For local pains of the back, chest or side, caused by a bruise or sprain, they are unrivalled. Sold at 25 cents, at 43 Canal street, Dr. Allcock's wholesale and retail office. oct18 3t

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

☞ PostOffice.—Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer Hermann, via Southampton and Bremen, will close at this office on Saturday, the 1st day of November, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

American News.

We learn from the Memphis papers that there is great excitement in Union county, Arkansas, on account of the discovery of a plot among the negroes to rise in rebellion on the 15th of this month. Fortunately, the plot was discovered in time to prevent one of the most bloody massacres in the whole annals of insurrection. The plot was very extensive, and the negroes who were taken up and made to confess, implicated others twenty miles off. Some of the negroes say the rising was to take place the day of the Presidential election. The men all being from home on that day, the plot was to murder the women and children first, and then attack the unarmed men at the polls. Several white men have been implicated, and notified to leave the country in a given time, or be hung. The letter states that on the Colorado the excitement is intense, and that several negroes have been hung. The plot seems to have been very extensive, reaching as far as Texas.

The seven o'clock morning train from Philadelphia to New-York, Thursday, made a very narrow escape from a terrible accident, near Uniontown, N. J. It appears that a team of oxen were drawing a large log in advance of the approaching train, which was going at the rate of forty miles an hour. The conductor and engineer both seeing the impending danger, endeavored to slacken the speed of the engine, after which they jumped from the cars. One of the engineers, in jumping off, seriously injured himself, sustaining severe bruises about the head. The engine struck the log and ran on the track with it for a quarter of a mile, and thus a serious accident was fortunately prevented.

From the west coast of Africa we have advices dated at Old Calabar 29th and Fernando Po 30th of August, Bonny 3d, Lagos 6th, Accra 8th, Cape Coast 9th, Liberia 13th, and Sierra Leone 18th of September. At Old Calabar trade was brisk. In consequence of the ill-treatment of a ship's master by the natives, the Europeans had sent to Fernando Po a vessel of war, to make inquiries. Fernando Po, Cameroons, Bonny, Accra, and Cape Coast Castle, were healthy. Much rain had fallen at Liberia, Sierra Leone, and Bathurst, but those colonies were healthy.

We have dates from Buenos Ayres to the 15th of August. It was anticipated that the coming season, in a business point of view, would be the most favorable ever known. The revolution in the province of Santa Fe had been attended with no important results. General Orono had been arrested and imprisoned at Rosario. At Montevideo political affairs were in an unsettled state. Colonel Battle had been appointed Minister of Finance, in place of Lecoq, who had been compelled to retire.

There was a new feature at the Agricultural fair held at Cleveland, Ohio; a show of fish raised artificially. They were chiefly spotted brook trout, from six months to two years old, and were in a large tank with glass sides, supplied with a running stream of water. Drs. Garlich and Arckley, who furnish the exhibition, have quite a "fish raising" about two miles from Cleveland. In the pond are thousands of fish, principally trout, all raised by artificial means.

An important arrest, says the Syracuse Standard, was made in this city on Tuesday afternoon. The prisoners are the captain and his wife and hired hands of the canal boat Cornelia, of the Western Transportation Company, who are charged with pilfering goods from the boat while on the trips between Albany and Buffalo. The business of stealing and selling goods by boatmen has become so extensive that the company feel the necessity of making examples of the guilty parties.

Robert Selleridge's cotton and woollen factory, in Philadelphia, was totally destroyed by fire, on Thursday. The loss is estimated at $80,000. Insured for $40,000. Nearly 400 hands are thrown out of employment by this fire.

A very destructive fire occurred in the flourishing little town of Tuskegee, Ala., on the night of the 9th inst., by which nearly an entire block of the town was destroyed. The office of the Republican, together with all the materials, was destroyed.

The schooner Kalos, from St. Martin's, laden with salt for Philadelphia, went ashore, on Wednesday last, at Currituck Beach, and is a total loss. Captain Child and four of his crew were lost.

A new machine has been invented that will manufacture, out of cold lead, 200 bullets of four different kinds, in one minute.

Wolves are committing ravages in several portions of Canada West. Two women have been recently devoured by them in the township of Mornington.

On the 15th instant a grand banquet was given by the French residents at Montreal to M. Desplace, the friend and representative of M. de Lamartine in this country.

Senator Clayton is now ill in Delaware, and his physician entertains fears for his perfect recovery.

City News.

Celts and Anglo-Saxons.

The floor of the Tabernacle was completely occupied on Thursday night, to listen to a demonstration from Dr. McEleheran on "The physiognomy of the American race." Upwards of one hundred large cartoons of the human head and face were cleverly used in support of his position that the strongly marked Yankee physiognomy is absolutely and purely Celtic. Great interest and laughter was excited. A sketch of a Paddy with a short pipe and battered hat was unmistakeable. The Doctor removed his pipe, clapped on him a goatee, and, presto, he was a Frenchman. Away with the beard and his military cap, and there stood revealed the noble features and brow of Washington. So the resemblance of Heny Clay was made out of a drawing of an old Irishman—the long oval head of Napoleon the third, of Palmerston and Russell were similarly elicited, and an undoubted old Welshman started up into a Southern planter. Some hideous Anglo-Saxon faces were drawn from the colliery districts in England; correct, certainly. He showed that there never was an Anglo-Saxon who had a head and face that could be mistaken for that of the Celtic Emmet or Daniel O'Connell. He maintained that the Virginians are all Celts, not Saxons; that their progenitors came from the South and West of England, the neighborhood of Wales. The Anglo-Saxon head and face, said he, are those of the North-American Indian, bating the color; and the resemblance between the lower-class peasantry of the mining districts and the Indian physiognomy is certainly striking. He observed, that climate alters some things, but not the type. The lecture gave great satisfaction.

Little do the ladies think, dream or imagine, when they put on the skirts that enable them to take up so much room in the world, that the poor creatures who manufacture the embellishments, do it on the verge of starvation! Little do our fair partners know of the eager eyes, the parched throats, the hollow cheeks, the feeble cries of infant hunger, and the stifled groans of famished maternity, that surrounded every thread of the garment as it passed through the loom intent on the adornment of beauty or the gratification of a little personal pride! The skirt-weavers of our city are now on a "strike against the attempt of their employers to reduce their wages from the poor pittance of eighty-seven cents per day to the still more miserable pittance of seventy-four cents! We deeply sympathise with the weavers in their unfortunate position, and trust that public opinion may assist them in the ultimate acquisition of their natural right to a comfortable subsistence for themselves and their families.

The P. Smith Guard, a splendid body of men, commanded by Captain John Mullahy, passed through Fulton street, Monday last, on a target excursion. They did us the honor of saluting the Irish News office, by presenting arms and giving three enthusiastic cheers. They numbered about sixty muskets and appeared to have been carefully and efficiently drilled.

This will be the last week, at Buckley's, of "Il Trovatore," which is one of the best burlesques, musically as well as funnily considered, the Buckleys do. Negro minstrelsy will be given, as an accompaniment, every night. A week from to-morrow night "Dred" will be produced, with G. S. Buckley as old Tiff.

A very heavy and daring burglary was committed in Broadway early on Saturday evening. The store of Messrs. Martin & Lawson, No. 364 Broadway, corner of Franklin-street (east side, Sixth Ward,) was robbed of over $7,000 worth of silks and velvets.

A. C. Peabody, Esq., has accepted the appointment of Justice of the Supreme Court, tendered him by Governor Clark.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellectual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

Mr. Wallack will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," Miss Agnes Robertson, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	50 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7¾.

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL

OF THE

EMMET LIFE GUARD.

ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,

At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.

Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the Guard and at this office.

☞ The Life Guard pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by by them to produce the best Ball of the season.

Capt. T. Lynch, Chairman.

A. O'Toole, Sec'y.
James Watson, Treasurer. oct11

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,

Opposite Niblo's Garden,

From the great success and most flattering reception of the burlesque opera of

TROVATORE,

It will be repeated all this week, together with

NEGRO MINSTRELSY,

of a superior order.

DRED; OR, THE DISMAL SWAMP,

Will be produced on Monday evening, Nov. 3, with a great caste—the celebrated G. Swaine Buckley in the character of Tiff.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 1-2 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

LECTURE

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE CAPT. KERRIGAN

BY

THOS. FRANCIS MEAGHER.

SUBJECT:

The Rock of Cashel—Its Kings, Priests and Soldiers—Its Poetry, Calamities and Glory!

At the Tabernacle on Monday Evening, November 17.

Tickets 50 cents.

FIFTH ANNUAL BALL

OF THE

Barry Benevolent Society,

At the Apollo Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, November 12th, 1856. The Committee has spared no trouble to make this one of the finest Balls of the Season.

John McMahon, President.
Michael Kirwin, Secretary.
2t no1 John Powers, Treasurer.

Special Notices.

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says: "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say, that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
sept18 3mos 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, Sept. 22d, 1856.

To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York:

Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the General Election to be held in this State on the TUESDAY succeeding the FIRST MONDAY OF NOVEMBER NEXT, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Police Justice for the Third Judicial District of the City of New York, composed of the Eighth and Ninth Wards of said city, in the place of Abraham Bogert, Jr., removed.

Also, a Counsel to the Corporation, in the place of Lorenzo B. Shepard, deceased.

Yours respectfully.
N. P. STANTON, Jr., Dep. Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 20th, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET,
o25 Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—To deplete the system by bleeding and violent purging, is to deprive life's machinery of its motive power. These great remedies disinfect the blood and the secretions, and cure external and internal complaints, by destroying their seeds in the vital fluids. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62c., and $1 per box or pot.

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any orders left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

☞ Removal.—DR. J. M. CARNOCHAN, has removed his office to No. 45 Lafayette Place, near Astor Place. oct18 4t

Political.

7TH WARD.—TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATS AND CITIZENS GENERALLY OF THE SEVENTH WARD.—Awake to your rights and put down the frauds and violence of primary elections.

The committee appointed by the Democratic Electors of the Seventh Ward, opposed to the present corrupt and demoralizing scenes perpetrated at our primary elections, present the following ticket for the suffrages of the Democratic Electors of the Ward, at the election to be held on the 4th of November, 1856; and in thus doing, we call upon you to sustain this ticket composed of gentlemen respected alike for ther integrity as citizens, and well qualified to discharge with honor and ability the duties of the offices for which they have been respectively nominated, and who condemn the present mode of conducting our primary elections, which but express the voice of ballot-box stuffers and not the wishes of the people.

SEVENTH WARD NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

FOR ASSEMBLY,
THOMAS H. FARRAN.
FOR ALDERMAN,
SAMUEL HURLEY.
FOR ASSESSOR,
RICHARD O. GRADY.
FOURTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT,
PETER ZEGLIO.
FIFTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
JAMES L. JOHNSON.
SIXTEENTH COUNCIL DISTRICT.
ABRAHAM BROWER.
SCHOOL COMMISSIONER,
GEORGE W. FARLEY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN MURPHY.
TRUSTEE,
JOHN WAGONER.
INSPECTOR,
OWEN McCABE.
CONSTABLES,
CHRISTOPHER F. KLENCK, MICHAEL SHANDLEY.

M. T. Runyan, Secretary. M. Dougherty, Chairman.
October 18. 3t.

FIRST WARD

Democratic Republican Regular Nomination.

FOR ALDERMAN,
oct18 WILLIAM WILSON. 3t

Daguerreotypes.

Mark the Facts!—J. Gurney's establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. Gurney was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. Gurney has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. Gurney has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. Gurney has still in his employ the best of his old artists. Gurney has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. Gurney's colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. Gurney's plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. Gurney's Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. Gurney has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. Gurney received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, Gurney stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. Gurney has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. Gurney has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. Gurney attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. Gurney will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

FACTS

THAT NEED NO MARKING.

Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. Fredricks, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of sevcral of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. Gurney, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After succeesfully fellowing his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

Charles D. Fredricks, late Gurney & Fredricks, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

Facts which are Known.—Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of businees, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhiited. Those desiring Photograps, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M.

Charles D. Fredricks,
Late Gurney & Fredricks, No. 585 Broadway
oct11 3mos opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall."
R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street.
FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms."
EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn.
GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y.
RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y.
P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y.
JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall."
Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street.
M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms.
T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory.
WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms."
JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms."
JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue.
J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at the Eagle Rooms.
EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y.
M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn.
MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street.
JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa.
MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue.
JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City.
—— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia.
P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia.
Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Bawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me.
JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill.
CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond.
P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston.
GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta.
EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo.
D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati.
THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati.
JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y21june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of the Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

Improved Billiard Tables and Cushions.

MICHAEL PHELAN'S

MODEL TABLES AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

(Patented February 19, 1856,)

CORRECT in principle and perfect in action—so constructed as to insure mathematical correctness of angles when played upon, and warranted to possess the requisite elasticity in all seasons, having been tested by the best players in this country, and by them pronounced the most perfect of any hitherto constructed—are offered to the public as cheap as the ordinary tables of the day. Orders promptly attended to for fitting up private or public Billiard Rooms; new Cushions put on old Tables, &c.

Saloon and Salesroom No. 39 Chambers street, up stairs.

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

HATS, Caps, Ornaments and Flags made to order. Galvanic Plating Hotel and Express Letters, Dog Collars, Jobbing for Hardware Merchants, Firemen and Target Companies supplied. Orders for the improved Lightning Rod.

☞ California and Australia Goods in time for the Steamers.

J. Parkes, No. 198 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

ATTENTION!

To Military Companies.

BEAUTIFUL EMBLEMATIC WREATHS AND BOUQUFTS,

For Target Excursions, constantly on sale, or made to order at the shortest notice, and at any price.

Ladies about making a presentation to their military friends are most respectfully invited to make a visit to the old established bookstore, 366 Bowery, one door above Fourth street.

Robert Coddington, Proprietor.

N. B.—Always on sale, a fine assortment of Invitation Note Paper and Envelopes, Books on Military Tactics, Works on Ireland.

The IRISH NEWS for sale, as soon as published, every week. oct11 4t

State of New-York, Secretary's Office, Albany, August 12 1856.—To the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York:—Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the general election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to-wit:—

A Governor, in the place of Myron H. Clark.
A Lieutenant-Governor, in the place of Henry J. Raymond.
A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Cornelius Gardiner.
An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Thomas Kirkpatrick.
A Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Benjamin F. Harwood, deceased.

All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.

Thirty-five Electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

A Representative in the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States for the Third Congressional district, composed of the First, Second, Third, Fifth and Eighth wards in the city and county of New-York.

Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fourth Congressional district, composed of the Fourth, Sixth, Tenth and Fourteenth wards of the said city and county.

Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Fifth Congressional district, composed of the Seventh and Thirteenth wards of the said city and county, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth wards in the city of Brooklyn, in the county of King's.

Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Sixth Congressional district, composed of the Eleventh, Fifteenth and Seventeeth wards of the city of New-York.

Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Seventh Congressional district, composed of the Ninth, Sixteenth and Twentieth wards of the city of New-York.

Also, a Representative in the said Congress for the Eighth Congressional district, composed of the Twelfth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second wards of the city of New-York.

City and county officers are also to be elected:—

A Mayor, in the place of Fernando Wood.
A City Judge, in the place of Elisha S. Capron.
Two Governors of the Almshouse, in the places of Isaac Bell, jr., and Simeon Draper.
Also, sixteen members of Assembly for said city and county.

All whose terms of office will expire on the last day of December next.

Your's respectfully, N. P. STANTON, Jr.,
Deputy Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, New-York, August 20, 1856.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the statute in such case made and provided.

JAMES C. WILLET, Sheriff of the City and County of New-York.

All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, chap 6, title 3, article 3, part 1, page 140.
Aug30

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicines.

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

DRS. GILBERT AND KENNEDY,

TREAT

CANCERS, TUMORS, ULCERS, &c.,

WITHOUT SURGICAL OPERATIONS.

OFFICE 746 BROADWAY, COR. ASTOR PLACE, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES FROM

Ex Gov. T. M. Tucker.	Hon. T. Butler King.	Judge Alex. Walker
Judge F. W. Hugling.	Gen. Narcisso Lopez.	Col. Maunsel White.
Capt. Isaiah Sellers.	Capt. Wm. Leathers.	Thos. E. Bond, M. D.
A. S. Baldwin, M. D.	W. P. Allison, M. D.	J. S. Peacocke, M. D.

PERMISSION TO REFER TO

Ex Gov. James C. Jones. Hon. Frederick B. Stanton.
B. F. Palmer, Inventor of "Palmer's Artificial Leg."
Francis Grice, Naval Constructor, Navy Yard, Philadelphia.
Proprietors of the Girard House, Philadelphia.

☞ Send for a Pamphlet! oct18 4t

Special Notices.

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.
JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept18

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until every thing has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 18 tf

Business Directory.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING eurered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

---

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months.

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHS,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. Jul25m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK.

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York, between William and Gold streets.

ap26tf

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

Dr. Shanahan,

SURGEON AND ACCOUCHEUR,

Can be consulted at his office, No. 169 West 38th street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, New-York. oc11 4t

---

Wm. Irwin,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN BOOTS & SHOES,

No. 174 Bowery, opposite Delancey street, New-York.

Quick Sales and Small Profits. oc11m3

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING,) New-York.

my31y

Business Directory.

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, Broche and Woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, Woollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c.

ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street, and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

oct4 8mos

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions :

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)

ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

Men's Furnishing Goods.

84 William Street, corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

GEORGE M. TRACY,

HAS now on hand a choice stock of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, nearly all of which are made under his own inspection, of the choicest fabrics and newest styles. Merchants will find this a desirable place to make their selections. Annexed is a catalogue of some of the articles :

Hosiery and Gloves	Improved Napoleon Ties
Silk Beaufort Ties	Stocks, in great variety
Linen Collars	Silk and Linen Handkerchiefs
Silk Albert Ties	Dressing Robes
Fine Shirts	Travelling Shawls
Cravats and Stocks	Silk Under Shirts and Drawers
Suspenders	Silk and Gingham Umbrellas

His shirts are of superior make and quality, and warranted to fit. Persons wishing goods for their own use will be served at retail as well as wholesale, at the lowest prices. oc4m2

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

Which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to his customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city. Gentlemen's furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and single counting-room desks, from 3 to 6 feet long. Office desks from 3 to 6 feet, of Mahogany, Black Walnut, and Oak ; cases for books and pigeon holes. Office-chairs, cushions, lounges, and office tables of every description. my17tf

---

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on libberal terms. jly5 y

---

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW-YORK,

Special Notices.

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

Wines and Liquors.

THOMAS RUSSELL,

209 Fulton Street, between Church and Greenwich streets, and across town at 111 Attorney street, corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to imform the public, that he has opened the abovee stablishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &c.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call the attention of buyers to his stock, consisting in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, vintage 1823 and 1842.

Otard, Dupuy & Co., vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

Imported by the subscriber, to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a select supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders, with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Conner, Wall street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 86th street, and 6th Avenue : T. Russell & Co., corner 4th street and 6th avenue, and at the corners of 18th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English Pickles, Sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 3m16au

---

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those who are in need of nourishment ; and it is undoubtedly the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days, adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert, that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three huudred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the Elizabethan Ale most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome, (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oc4m3

STUYVESANT SHADES,

No. 12 Stuyvesant Street,

Junction of 9th street, near Third Avenue, New-York.

Wines and Segars, of the best brands, always on hand.

oc25m3 F. Fitzsimons, Proprietor.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,
at 333 Broadway,
tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. yjly26

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH & BURTON ALES,

PHILADELPHIA PORTER, ALE, CHAMPAIGNE CIDER AND SODA WATER.

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS.
Publication Office, 99 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1856. NO. 31.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXXI.

Editorial.

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN—THE UNION VICTORIOUS.
OLD IRELAND.
MORE POWER TO WALKER!
AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.
FINANCIAL FRAUDS AND HEROES.
FAIR AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.
GOD PRESERVE THE UNION! (a song.)

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part VI.—By Garland O'Halloran.—Our Sanctum—Fresh Fiction—The Beard—Magazines—Reviews, &c.

Poetry.

The Day-Dreamers, by Eoul.

Correspondence.

Letters—from Kilkenny, by "St. Canice,"—On the Grattan Outrage, by B. O. R.—On a Mr. Deady, by a Member of the Swift Club,—From Smith O'Brien.

Miscellaneous.

An Irish Patriot and Rebel of '98—Northern Toadydom—Russia playing the Bag-Pipes—Slaves Feasting Slaves—the Malakoff—the Armament of the Merrimac—the Fulton Guard—Dinner Service of the Adriatic—Latest news from every corner of the Globe.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient - - - - - - - - - - - - $1
Monthly - - - - - - - - - - - - $2
Quarterly - - - - - - - - - - - - $5
Yearly - - - - - - - - - - - - $16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Now Ready!

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET,

By DR. R. R. MADDEN,

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil.

AND A MEMOIR OF

Thomas Addis Emmet.

with a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo., cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF CLONCURRY.
MADDEN'S UNITED IRISHMEN.
SAVAGE'S '98 AND '48.
GILBERT'S STREETS OF DUBLIN.
FITZPATRICK'S LIFE OF CLONCURRY.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.
LIFE OF O'DWYER THE OUTLAW.
MOORE'S LETTERS TO MACKENZIE.
LIFE OF ROBERT HOLMES. By Savage.
LIFE OF CORBETT.
B. P. BINNS' LETTERS.
GRATTAN'S LIFE. By his Son.
PHILLIPS' RECOLLECTIONS OF CURRAN.
JOHN BINN'S LIFE.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
MACNEVIN'S PIECES OF IRISH HISTORY.
MAGOON'S AMERICAN ORATORS.
CURRAN'S LIFE. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1858.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.
oct18 tf

Special Notices.

AGENCY OF NICARAGUA, NO. 347 BROADWAY.—The undersigned having been appointed by the Government of Nicaragua GENERAL EMIGRANT AGENT in the United States, has established a permanent Agency at 347 Broadway, Room No. 2, up stairs. All persons desirous of obtaining information of any kind concerning Nicaragua, will receive prompt attention by addressing the undersigned, personally or by letter, at the office of the Agent.

The price of passage to Emigrants has been fixed at a very low figure; and for those without means, arrangements have been made with the Nicaragua Emigration Company to advance the price of passage, upon the transfer of a part of the land granted to each emigrant by the government of Nicaragua. This secures to Emigrants a large grant of land and a free passage to Nicaragua.

Alexander C. Lawrence, Gen'l. Emigration Agent
oct25 tf of Nicaragua for the United States.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 18, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with goed horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856. aug28 10t

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX, is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities of the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its general appearance, as well as to the chasteness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

The work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,
Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

Daguerreotypes.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY'S establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY'S colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. GURNEY'S plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY'S Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

FACTS

THAT NEED NO MARKING.

Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. FREDRICKS, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of several of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. GURNEY, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After successfully following his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

FACTS WHICH ARE KNOWN.—PHOTOGRAPHS DAGUERREOTYPES, AMBROTYPES, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of business, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhibited. Those desiring Photographs, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M.

CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, oct11 3mos Late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, No. 585 Broadway opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $825. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
88 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 28 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 18th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr.,	Manhattan,
Great Western,	Neptune,
Harvest Queen,	Columbia,
Isaac Webb,	Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright,	Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 28 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $80; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my8 1y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 185, 187 and 188 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tf

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.

Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

---

Only $1 50 for a fine Fashionable Hat.—What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50, when you can buy a better Hat for ONLY ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? Call on SMITH, and he will fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put on your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. No. 81 PARK ROW, under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman street.

N. B.—Also on hand a large assortment of Drab Beavers, Pearl and Cassimere Hats, from $1 50 to $2.

sept6 3mos Conklin Smith.

European News.

By the arrival of the Atlantic at this port, on Tuesday evening, we have dates from Europe to the 15th ult.

The Asia arrived at Liverpool, 8 A. M., Monday the 13th. The steamer Khersonese had not arrived.

The important intelligence comes from Madrid the 12th, of the fall of O'Donnell and restoration of Narvaez to power.—O'Donnell has resigned and with him all his colleagues. The Queen has accepted their resignation. Narvaez is appointed President of the Council, and has already provided himself with thirteen associates. He has allotted the principal offices as follows: Pidal, Foreign Affairs; Seijas, Finance; Nocedal, Interior; Arrazela, Justice; Urbistondo, War; Lersundi, Marine. General Sanz is appointed Captain General of Madrid and General Pezuela Directory of the Cavalry.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times gives the following sketch of the new Spanish ministry:—M. Pidal, who is now for the second time Minister for Foreign Affairs, is, with his brother-in-law, M. Mon, an ardent partizan of Maria Christina. He was Minister of the Interior in 1845–6. He is an ardent and somewhat violent partisan, as becomes a member of the Moderado party. He more than once so forgot himself in full parliament as to speak of Lord Palmerston as the principal object of his hatred. Against his personal probity I have never heard anything said. He was made a Marquis, I believe, for the support he gave to the Spanish marriages. He is an advocate by profession. Seijas Lozano is also a member of the bar, of considerable learning, though of narrow mind. He is also a Moderado, and figured in various Cabinets. Nocedai, or as he was more familiarly termed Nocedalite, was at one time an ardent, almost a revolutinary Liberal. He modified his opinions as the chances of place opened to him, and became attached in 1847 to the Puritans or Tiers Parti, at whose head was M. Pacheco. He is an advocate of no great professional reputation. Abrazela, also a member of the same learned profession, has filled the high office of President of the Tribunal of Justice. He has been Minister of Grace and Justice in several Cabinets at Moderado-Christino, and is personally honest. Urbistondo was a general officer in the Carlist army until 1840; he deserted the cause of the pretender when it was in its decline, passed over to the Christino camp, and took advantage of the treaty of Bergara. He resided on half-pay in San Sebastian, and was implicated in the O'Donnell plot in 1841. Private papers belonging to him, and abstracted by a servant while he was living near Bayonne in 1842–3, showed that he was engaged with others in preparing the insurrection which in the latter year overthrew Espartero. He was not long after named Captain-General of the Philippine Islands, but was recalled after the revolution of of 1854. He is supposed not to have entirely forgotten his Carlist tendencies. General Lersundi figured as Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Bravo-Murillo ministry, and was one of those who was preparing the coup d'etat previous to the formation of the Sartorius or San Luis ministry. He was implicated in the Diego Leon insurrection in Madrid in 1841, when the project was to take off the Queen to France or to the Basque provinces. He succeeded in escaping to France, where he resided till the fall of Espartero in 1843. He is a native of Guipuzcoa; served as a private volunteer in the Chapelgorris, in the beginning of the war; was the protege of the Conchas, and was by them advanced to the superior ranks. He was made a Brigadier after the military insurrection in Madrid in 1848. He is a gallant soldier, but nothing more. General Sanz, Captain-General of Madrid, was Minister of War in the Cabinet that made the Spanish marriages in 1846, and was a member of the Senate. He was always a moderado. He has never been much distinguished in any way either as a general politician, or speaker. General Pezuela, a reactionist, is brother to the Marquis of Viluma, who is rather an absolutist in politics, after having been a revolutionist in 1819. General Pezula, a man of gentlemanly manner, has not been much distinguished for military talents. He has filled the post of Captain-General of Puerto Rico. His tastes are more literary than political, and some of his translations into Spanish verse from the Italian are of merit.

The Paris Journal des Debats contains the announcement: "That the pretensions raised by Russia with regard to the Isle of Serpents have been abandoned. Russia has given way, and the island will again become a possession of Turkey. The Belgrade difficulty remains as before."

The Neapolitan affair remains as before—all but settled.

Russia is said to have made the formal proposal for convocation of the (second) Plenipotentiaries to the Congress of Paris, France and Prussia have adhered, and the consent of England is alone waited for, but is with certainty anticipated.

The reported seizure of Galatz, by four thousand Austrians, was not true. Affairs in the Turkish settlement, are progressing slowly, but, on the whole, satisfactorily.

Denmark is reported to have consented to a reduction of the transit duties on goods passing through Holstein and Lunemburg, from five pence per cwt. to one penny.

Great Britain.—Government, that is to say, Lord Palmerston—has granted a pension of £100 per annum to the widow of the late Gilbert Abbott A'Beckett, and has contributed £100 towards the maintenance of Angus Reach, who is insane.

A burst of correspondence has taken place in the London papers, on the subject of Kansas. The letters are mostly mere expressions of opinion, with the exception of one from a Mr. Gladstone of Surry, who recently made a tour to Kansas, and gives rather a graphic sketch, in the anti-slavery interest, of what he saw there.

A new line of screw steamers is about to be established between London and Valparaiso. The first ship, the Chili, of 1,000 tons, will sail on November 20. She will proceed from Valparaiso to Coquimbo and Caldera, and will also forward passengers to the principal ports of Peru.

It is rumored that Lord Palmerston, without consulting the Queen, appointed Rev. Mr. French to the Bishopric of Durham, but the Queen, on reading the appointment in the papers, sent for Palmerston, "snubbed" him soundly, and cancelled the appointment.

The advices from Bombay, of date September 12, are filled with accounts of the preparations made by the Indian and British Governments to invade Persia. The reason of this invasion is the reported occupation of Herat by the Persian troops. A fleet is to be sent to the Persian gulf, with certain demands, which it is not expected the Shah will accede to, whereupon an invading force is to be sent to take possession of Kavrack, and Bushire as a basis of operations against Teheran.

Six regiments of infantry and three of cavalry, with field and siege trains, are already detailed for land service. The fleet will number twenty-two steamers with a large number of gunboats. In addition to the preparations large quantities of ammunition are being sent up the Indus to the direct assistance of Dost Mahomed and the Affghan party in Herat. It is expected that Persia will fight, but that she must speedily fall before the British force.

France.—Letters from Paris on the subject of the financial crisis are less unfavorable. The bullion of the bank is said to be increasing, both in Paris and at the branches, and it is added that some of the dealers who have lately drawn five franc pieces from the provinces for the purpose of melting, are depositing the bars at the bank for an advance of notes upon them. The police measures to prevent the purchase of coin at a premium, are also stated to have temporarily succeeded.

The French fleet destined to act against Naples, remained at Toulon on the 10th.

Gen. D'Orgoni, (a Frenchman) is in Paris, with a suite, as special envoy from the King of Ava to the Emperor Napoleon.

A camp of 40,000 men is to be established soon at Chalons-sur-Marne.

M. Gervais, Russian Councillor of State, passed through Berlin a few days since on his way to Paris, bearing the definitive resolution of Russia to the Emperor Napoleon, as to the assembling in Paris of the Diplomatic Congress to settle the affairs of the East, Naples, Greece and Neufchatel.

The following placard has been secretly posted in various quarters of Paris:

TO THE ITALIAN PEOPLE! INSURRECTION IS THE HOLIEST OF DUTIES!!

JULY 14, AUGUST 10, FEBRUARY 24, JANUARY 12, MARCH 22, FEBRUARY 9.

Brothers and Friends: Honor to you who have not been crushed by your many oppressors, who have not been discouraged by the most cruel deception! It is now centuries since the spirit of evil fell upon Italy, as the noblest prey it could devour, clutching you in its two talons—Papacy and Empire. For centuries this spirit has sucked your blood, and striven to poison your soul with its pestiferous breath. But your soul is immortal. That priest who returned to Rome, through a smoking breach—that Bourbon, in whose bosom beats the heart of Fiberius—those Austrian ravens that croak upon the harmonious banks of the Adige, all know and feel, and turn at the knowledge that intelligence and life have not abandoned their victim.

They all feel that the soil of Italy quivers under their accursed feet, and that there are there undaunted giants, such as were found formerly in the mountains of heroic Sicily. The blood of martyrs has fertilized your soil. You possess courage, intelligence and constancy, and you have that experience which is bought by long misfortune. You want but one thing—arms! You shall have them. You must have them. Already you have appealed to the true children of Italy. Every one of them has offered his mite, so that those who shall first have the honor to proclaim your emancipation may find ready to their hands the instruments wherewith to carry on the holy war.

Our hearts have leaped with joy as the news come to us across the Alps, that you are secretly storing up your first muskets, while waiting for the day of your deliverance. We also desire to come to your aid, and take part in your paternal union. Receive, brothers and friends, the produce of the French subscription; receive it not only as a proof of sympathy, but also as an offering of gratitude, for you are setting a great and useful example, that of extreme constancy under the weight of extreme oppression, and it is perhaps from you that the spark will proceed which is destined to re-animate the world. No nation has suffered more than Italy, and none, if there be justice upon earth, will have a prouder place among regenerate nations.

For the people and students of Paris,

The Committee.

Spain.—The Spanish Financial Commissioners have advertised an auction of the foreign redeemable debt, to take place October 31, for which purpose 385,000 reals have been assigned.

Gen. Breckendorff left Paris on the 9th for Madrid, to present an autograph letter from the Emperor of Russia to Queen Isabella.

Political offenders are not in future to be transported to the Phillippines or West Indies, but to the Ladrones or Mariana Islands, in the North Pacific Ocean.

Marshal Narvaez had arrived in Madrid, and had an interview with the Queen. Espartero is preparing for publication a manifesto concerning recent events.

According to official returns, the sale of national property, to the 30th September, had produced 786,138,000 reals.

Austria.—According to the Milan Gazette, the Emperor and Empress of Austria will visit Milan in January, 1857.

Orders have been given to build three ships of the line, immediately, at Pola.

The Verona official Gazette, of the 9th, in an article on the Neapolitan question, says that no serious apprehension should be entertained as to its final result, as Russia, Austria and France can have but one and the same opinion respecting the rights of an independent sovereign and the sanctity of treaties.

Italy.—From Naples we learn nothing of interest, excepting that preparations for defence continued. The statement in the German papers that the King of Naples had addressed autograph letters to Queen Victoria and to the Emperor of the French, asking to be admitted to the Paris Conference, is denied by the Neapolitan Embassy in Paris.

Gen. Martini arrived at Naples Sept. 28.

Advices from Ajaccio of the 8th, mention the arrival there of part of the English fleet, namely, ships-of-the-line Duke of Wellington and Conqueror, two steam-frigates, and two corvettes. Other ships were expected from Malta. The American ship Supply was at Naples.

Arrival of the Asia.—By the arrival of the Asia, we have three lays later intelligence from Europe. The news, however, is unimportant. The difficulties of the Paris Bank had not been overcome. Everything wears a gloomy and unsettled appearance in political circles. There has been a slight demonstration of rowdyism in the Spanish capitol. "General Narvaez has assaulted Senor Guel y Rente, the husband of the Infant Josefa. Narvaez met him at the house of General Aleson, the new Captain General of the Phillippine Islands, and on ascertaining who he was, he cried out, in the presence of the lady of the house and several visitors: "Ah! you rascal! you coward! clear out. You lied respecting me in the Cortes. Take this; and this; and this!" suiting the action to the word, and striking him repeatedly. Guel did not return the blows, but merely tried to avoid them, calling out—"For heaven's sake, Duke, what do you mean?" The persons present interfered, and put an end to the affair. Guel subsequently sent a challenge to Narvarez to fight him with small swords, which Narvaez accepted. The Queen, hearing of it, sent for Narvaez, and forbade him to fight. Guel has been ordered to retire immediately to San Sebastian, where his wife resides.

California News.

The Illinois, bringing California mails of October the 6th, 393 passengers, and $1,681,957 in freight, arrived at this port on Tuesday evening. The Alta Californian of the 6th furnishes a summary of the news since the sailing of the last steamer, from which we make the following resume:

A pumpkin has been raised near Marysville, which weighed more than two hundred pounds, and girths seven feet and four inches.

Mr. Osenberg, a merchant of Jackson, Amador county, committed suicide by shooting himself.

John Roberts, who was sentenced to be hung, has had his sentence commuted to imprisonment for life.

About 15,000 head of cattle are recruiting in Carson Valley. These have all come across the Plains this year, and it is estimated that 25,000 persons and 30,000 head of cattle will arrive during the season.

Two Digger Indians fought a duel, a few days since, at Volcano, with bows and arrows; both were wounded.

Hugh C. Murray, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who was elected to that position by the American party, has withdrawn from that party and joined the Democracy. Judge Terry has done the same.

Four women, in company with several men, made the ascent of Mount Shasta, being the first that ever reached its towering summit.

A man named Chips was shot, a few days since, and killed, at San Juan, by one Hargrave.

The total amount of treasure shipped from California during the month of September, was $4,570,371 18.

Dr. John Marsh, for twenty-five years a resident of California, was found murdered, a few days since, on his farm, near Martinez.

A grizzly bear, weighing 1,250 lbs., was recently lassoed, near Sonoma.

Dr. Armstrong was murdered a few days since, at San Andres, by a man named C. Colebrook. Colebrook was taken by the people and hung.

About $100,000 are being expended in Grass Valley, in the erection of quartz mills.

It is said that $10,000,000 a year is derived from the sale of water, for mining purposes, in Mariposa county.

A. A. Cohen, late receiver of Adams & Co., has been discharged from confinement, by order of the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court has recently decided a suit in favor of Mesick vs. Sunderland, by which the former gets a title to one third of the city of Sacramento, worth $3,000,000.

Jeptha R. Marsh, sentenced to be hung on Friday last, has been reprieved till an application can be heard for a new trial.

Three hundred and fifteen bushels of barley were raised this season, on three acres of land, in Napa Valley.

William Stephens was killed a few days since at Vallecito, by the Postmaster, McMurray.

There have been a number of highway robberies in the interior. A fight was had a few days since, near Auburn, with Tom Bell's gang, in which one of the latter was killed.

Madame Lola Montes has been drawing crowded houses at Sacramento.

San Francisco is still reposing, but there are indications of an approaching restlessness, which will probably culminate at or about election day.

The streets are nightly becoming more noisy, and we believe that many are delighted with the adjournment of the Vigilance Committee.

On the 19th, the Russian Consul's residence was entered, and robbed of jewelry, plate, and other valuables.

On the 20th, a son was born to Mrs. Julia Dean Hayne, the celebrated actress. She will play another engagement at the Metropolitan.

On the 27th, an old State Prison convict, named Frank Dumas, who was being sentenced, in the Court of Sessions, on a new conviction for larceny, cut his throat, but survived. He subsequently tried to hang himself, but did not succeed.

Mining accounts are favorable.

The proprietorship of the San Francisco Globe has passed into the hands of George H. Simonton & Co., who claim for it a large and rapidly-increasing circulation. Mr. Simonton, the Editorial Manager, is a native of this city.

OREGON.

Governor Stevens was at last accounts in the Walla-Walla country, endeavoring to treat with the Indians, but only the Nez Perces showed a willingness to come to the council.

From the general demeanor of the savages, there does not seem to be a very good prospect of a speedy peace.

A telegraph is being constructed from Portland to Corvallis.

The honey bee, it has been ascertained, will do well in the country. Excellent water has been found in Polk county for making salt.

A woollen factory has been erected at Salem, and the growing of this staple is likely soon to be greatly increased in the Territory.

A large amount of property used in the Indian war was soon to be sold.

Captain Bowman of the U. S. A., had become insane, and escaped from his friends while they were taking him to Dalles. His body was afterwards found nearly consumed by wild beasts.

Reliable information had been received from the Colville mines, stating that additional gold discoveries had been made; on the strength of which many were going in from the north to try their luck in those diggings.

The latest intelligence from Governor Stevens was to the effect that he had held an interview with nearly all the hostile chiefs, and that they were more friendly, and disposed to enter into a general treaty of peace.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

There was great hostility towards the whites at Vancouvers. The trouble was occasioned by the English executing an Indian, who had murdered another, in order to possess himself of a fascinating squaw.

NEW GRANADA.

The news from New Granada is unimportant. A return of the votes taken for President of the republic shows that Ospina (conservative) had received, so far, 88,955, and that General

Mosquera (national) had 23,073 votes, but the result was not officially decided.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The news from the South Pacific is interesting. In Chile, President Moutt was to be inaugurated on 18th of September, when the celebration of the anniversary of independence would also come off. The republic was progressing in commerce, in mining interests, exhibitions of products of native industry, and the spread of savings banks. Her exports of breadstuffs to Australia during this year were very large.

In Peru the liberty of the press was entirely destroyed, and President Castilla had advised foreign merchants that in case of another outbreak he could not protect them. Bolivia appeared tranquil, but a revolution was dreaded. Ecaudor was peaceful.

The Kingston (Jamaica) Colonial Standard of the 28th inst. says :—"It was reported shortly after the arrival of the Parana yesterday, that a revolution had broken out in Hayti, against the Emperor Solouque, which was likely to result in the latter's deposition."

AUSTRALIA.

By way of San Francisco we have later Australian and China news. The price of gold remained at £7 3s. 10d. Very heavy rains had retarded mining operations for a brief period, but hopeful accounts had been sent in from the mines, and many persons had started for the diggings. The gold shipped from Melbourne during the year amounted to 1,693,173 ounces. Trade was quite active at both places. The Fourth of July was celebrated at Balarat with great eclat.

There is much said about devising some method for checking the large influx of Chinese into the colonies.

The weather during July had been cold and inclement, with much sickness.

Flour had improved, fine being worth £24 per ton ; seconds, £22 ; wheat 8s. 9d. per bushel.

CHINA.

So far as anything definite can be learned in regard to the rebellion, success seems rather to incline to the side of the insurgents ; out the whole country is in a miserable condition, with no very flattering prospect of early improvement.

In view of the disturbed state of affairs, the British populations petitioned Admiral SEYMOUR for adequate protection, and had received assurance that they should be suitably defended from the attacks of the contending factions.

An army of 30,000 rebels had defeated 4000 Imperialists, killing a large number, including their Chief.

IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA—BATTLES OF MASSAYA AND GRANADA.

The news which supplies the following deeply important and interesting narrative of events in Nicaragua, is supplied by the New-Orleans papers of the 23d and 24th ult., to which it was furnished by the arrival of the steamer Tennessee.

On the advance of the army of the League towards Massaya, General Walker, for the further purpose of alluring them to the place, knowing it was an easier prey than Leon, withdrew his small forces from it. The League with a force of men occupied the town on the 11th Oct., upon the knowledge of which Gen. Walker leaving a small force in Granada, marched with 1,000 men. As he approached the town on the morning of the 12th, the enemy in full force sallied out. They were immediately repulsed, and driven through the town, Walker's men literally paving the way with the dead bodies of the League. Flying before the Americans, the enemy occupied the plazas and the houses in the chief points, from which however, during the day General Walker drove them to the main plaza, which he himself gained by eleven o'clock at night. Cutting his way through the walls of the houses and dragging his howitzers along. After these brilliant successes, and while waiting for day-break, news arrived that the enemy to the number of 1400 were besieging Granada. The brave fellows, who had fought from early morn until midnight, were hot foot for Granada, with their intrepid and decisive leader. Arriving about ten o'clock next morning, (13th,) he found the city barricaded by the whole force of the invaders. Giving the word to charge, the victors of Massaya seemed to have acquired fresh vigor—they dashed upon the enemy, drove them from post to post through the city, with great slaughter, capturing their field-pieces and commanders, and not leaving a vestige of them. The enemy lost at Granada 400 killed, and at Massaya 400 killed and 300 wounded, making in all, 1,100 men. General Walker's loss, in both engagements, was only 16 killed and 28 wounded—none of the wounded mortally.

The Daily Times of the 31st ult. was permitted to copy the following letter from General Walker, written immediately after the late battle at Granada, Nicaragua, which gives some figures differing from those furnished to the papers.

GRANADA, Monday, Oct. 13, 1856.

Dear Sir : Since you left, we have had several encounters with the enemy. After being delayed several days by the failure to arrive of the howitzer carriages and other apparatus, I marched for Massaya on the 11th, with upwards of 800 men. Early in the morning of the 12th, we attacked the enemy, getting possession of the small Plaza of Massaya and driving them all into the main Plaza, when early this morning, (about ten o'clock,) I received the news that some 600 or 700 of the enemy had attacked this place. I immediately marched hither, and the enemy were driven away and dispersed with small loss on our part. Altogether the loss on our part has been very small, for the number of men engaged. The enemy have suffered severely, not only in their killed and wounded, but also from desertions. The force driven from Granada to-day, was made up of Guatemalans and Chamorristas—the relics, these last, of the party at San Jacinto. Many of them were killed. The guard-house is filled with wounded and prisoners, and the whole force was dispersed. Their Guatemalan allies will never do the enemy any more service.

Your obedient servant,

WM. WALKER.

The following account by Captain R. L. William's of the Nicaragua army is exceedingly interesting :

About the 1st of October, the order was given for the out garrisons at San Carlos, Rivas, Tipitapa and Managua to concentrate on Granada. Shortly afterwards the advanced guard at Massaya was ordered to fall back also upon the capital. It at once became evident that Gen. Walker had determined to draw the enemy on, and choose his own ground for the battle.

On the evening of the 11th he left Granada with 1,100 men for Massaya. This is a town situated some fifteen miles from Granada, containing about 7,000 inhabitants. Nature has endowed it with many advantages. It has two plazas ; in the centre of the principal one stands a large church, on either side a few shops. The houses are principally built of adobe. It was there that Gen. Walker had determined to meet the force of the Allies. The troops marched nearly all night over a very muddy and slippery road, and before the morning of the 12th were before the town which were in possession of the enemy, who were said to be about 4,000 strong.

Being advised of the approach of General Walker, they had advanced on the road from the town with a strong body of troops. Either side of the road was lined with high bushes and cactus. At daybreak General Walker formed his men in column, and ordered a charge at once. The rush was made, and the enemy broke and fled before the head of the column could reach them. The Americans kept on and followed the enemy into the town, where they were strongly posted in the plazas and streets. After a gallant fight which had lasted all through the day and evening, General Walker was in position at 11 P. M., with his howitzers before the main plaza, ready to open upon the enemy in the morning. The artillery had been brought within the walls of the houses, which were cut for that purpose. The troops were ordered at this hour to sleep on their arms. They had fought hard, and they slept well.

About 12 1-2 A. M., an express from Granada arrived, advising Gen. Walker that that city had been attacked at noon of the day before, by a force of nearly 1,400 men. These were from the Hacienda of San Jacinto, and had been joined by bodies of troops from San Salvador and Guatemala, with a few Chamorristas. They had advanced upon Granada by a different road from that leading to Massaya, and had surrounded the city, attacking it on all sides. There were very few troops, which, with the American citizens left in the city, did not amount to over 150 men. These took possession of the ordnance department, guard-house, hospital and principal church, all on the main plaza, and the ladies took refuge in the house of the American Minister, and some of the foreign Consulates, this handfull of men defended the plaza successfully for 22 hours.

The enemy ransacked every house in seach of Americans and money. Mr. Lawless, Rev. Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Ferguson and son were dragged into the streets and murdered. General Walker's residence was pillaged, and his papers scattered over the floor in the wild hunt for plunder. About 10 A. M., of the 13th, the gallant band in the plaza had the first intimation that succor was at hand in the booming of the howitzers and the rattle of the musketry in the attack of General Walker on the enemy at Jalteba Church, about three-quarters of a mile immediately behind tne Ordnance Department.

Immediately on receiving the news brought to Massaya by the express, General Walker evacuated that town with all his troops and commenced a forced march for Granada. At 10 A. M. he attacked the enemy, who were posted in force on the height of the Jalteba Church, and charging at once, captured two field pieces and drove them at the point of the bayonet into and through the city. The route commenced almost without a second's struggle, and the enemy dispersed in every direction. But on all sides they were met by parties that General Walker had ordered to make a detour round the city, and their dispersion was complete.

It was estimated that about 400 of the allies were killed at Massaya, and an equal number at Granada. Nearly every house, on the evening of the evening of the 13th, when our informant left, was filled with their wounded. The loss of the Americans in both engagements was only sixteen killed and 35 wounded. We have not been able to learn the names of any of the killed. Among the wounded are Captain Bell, Dr. Scott, Capt. Hardy, Mr. Tabor, editor of the Nicaraguense, Captain Green, Harbor Master, Captain Pickersgill and Major Gilles.

The enemy were reported to be retreating from Massaya, and Gen. Walker would advance northward as soon as his troops had had some little rest.

Captain Williams informs us that his baggage was packed ready to start when the attack took place. He was rifled of everything by the enemy, in the assault on Granada. In his trunk were nearly two hundred letters, for persons in the United States, but he was able to gather up only a few of them, and many of these without their envelopes, after the rout of the enemy. Those he saved have been mailed here.

A company of Gen. Walker's troops are stationed on the San Juan river, at the mouth of the Serapiqui, and about 100 recruits arrived at Greytown, in the Tennessee. They would proceed to Granada at once.

Captain W. informs us that he learned from one of the men who returned from the battle of San Jacinto, that Mr. Callahan, our late esteemed correspondent, was last seen wounded and nearly exhausted, pursued by some cavalry, and endeavoring to get into the bush. In this he did not succeed, as the horses were nearly upon him at that time.

It was reported that General Mendez was the second in command of the enemy at Massaya, and was shot dead.

At the time the steamer left, Gen. Walker was to march the following day to Massaya and Leon. His troops were in the highest spirits, and eager for the march.

Of the wars between the present members of the "Western Alliance"—Messrs. Bull and Crapeau, the following is a clear index :—1141, one year. 1161, twenty-five years. 1211, fifteen years. 1224, nine years. 1294, five years. 1339, twenty-one years. 1368, forty-two years. 1422, forty-nine years. 1492, one month. 1512, two years. 1521, six years. 1549, one year. 1557, two years. 1562, two years. 1627, two years. 1666, one year. 1689, ten years. 1702, eleven years. 1744, four years. 1756, seven years. 1776, seven years. 1793, nine years. 1803, eleven years. And, lastly, 1815, when this calculation was made, and the war then subsisting, fourteen years, making within a period of 700 of years, 266 years of desolating war !

Here is a method by which every man can have his Almanac on hand. By counting the knuckles on the hand, with the spaces between them, all the months with thirty-one days or less, will come in the spaces. January, first knuckle ; February, first space ; March, second knuckle ; April, second space ; May, third knuckle ; June, third space ; July, fourth knuckle ; August, first knuckle ; September, first space ; October, second knuckle ; November, second space ; December, third knuckle.

On the evening of the 9th ult., a number of robbers effected an entrance into the church of Rathronan, near Clonmel, for the purpose of plunder. The only portable article which they could discover was a poker, which they carried to the nearest farmer's house, and having managed to get to the other side of the door, they left in exchange for a new suit of clothes belonging to the owner of the mansion. Another party of robbers attempted to force an entry into Mrs. Cahill's, Bagwell st,. but upon an alarm being given they fled.

Irish News.

A LETTER FROM SMITH O'BRIEN—HIS GOLD CUP.

The following letter has been addressed by Smith O'Brien to the editor of the Nation, in reference to the refusal of the British Government to admit free of duty the gold cup presented to him in Australia :

Cahirmoyle, October 13, 1856.

SIR : Having seen in your publication of the 11th an extract from a Liverpool newspaper, in which it is stated that the gold cup which was presented to me in Australia remains in Belgium, because I decline to pay a duty which will become receivable by the Belgium exchequer in case it leaves that country, I beg to inform you that such is not the fact. The circumstances under which it remains in the hands of my friend Mr. Corr Vander-Maeren, of Brusselles, (son of one of the Irish refugees of 1798), are these. When I was in Melbourne, it was arranged that the cup should be sent to London to the care of my banker for transmission to Ireland. Upon its arrival in London, the officers of the customs refused to allow it to be introduced into England, except upon payment of 10 per cent on the value (£800), together with 17s. an ounce upon the weight. I did not learn the exact sum demanded, but as nearly as I can compute, they required payment of above £180 for duty on this cup. I was informed however that it might be re-exported, and the Finance Minister of Belgium kindly offered to allow it to be imported into Belgium free of duty, under bond for its re-exportation, with an understanding that this bond might be renewed from year to year, until it suited my convenience to remove it. Accordingly a friend was prepared to carry it to Brusselles, free of cost to me, but he was informed at the Custom house in London, that it must be re-shipped in a formal manner, under invoice, &c., in consequence of which formalities, its conveyance to Brusselles cost me nearly eight pounds. It now remains in the hands of my friend Mr. Corr Vander-Maeren, and will be removed to its eventual home in Ireland as soon as circumstances will permit. I may observe that I have been informed, upon the highest authority, that it has been customary in London to admit free of duty pieces of plate presented to individuals in consideration of public services. I believe also that similar indulgence has been extended to the case of plate presented in consideration of private friendship or of other motives. Even as an object of art, its introduction at the Custom House free of duty might legally, I am informed, be permitted by the authorities. To me its marketable value is of little account, but as a memorial of Irish feeling it is inestimable, and I regard it rather as a national monument than as personal property. It is somewhat singular that the British government, which professes to set an example to all other nations of liberality in regard to its fiscal regulations, should impose a duty of nearly twenty-five per cent. upon the manufactures of its own colonies. I trust that this feature of the English Custom house Tariff will not escape the notice of the English Free Trade Congress, which is now sitting at Brusselles. I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

WM. S. O'BRIEN.

To the Editor of the Nation.

The Clonmel Chronicle reports a series of attacks made upon soldiers of the 47th depot stationed at Fethart, and attributes them to the ex-militia men. About eight o'clock on Sunday evening last, a pane of glass was broken in the house adjoining the barracks, occupied by Lieutenant Colonel Sankey, commanding the depot of the 47th regiment quartered at Fethered, in this county, by some persons unknown, who threw a stone through the window. On the same evening, about 9 p. m., as Corporal Skudamore of the 47th, was about entering the barrack gate he was jostled by four men unknown. On the corporal stepping aside a stone was thrown at him, but fortunately it missed him and struck the gateway. At half past six o'clock on the same evening, as Private John Consedine, 47th, was walking along the Killenaule road in the direction of Fethard, he was met close to the fair green by a laborer with a spade on his shoulder. He was coming towards him in a military double quick pace. On seeing Consedine the man bawled out, "Here I am, a North Tip ; where is the b———y soldier that could say a word to me?" He collared the soldier, but passed on without commttting any further act of molestation. As Private Wm. Higgins, of the same regiment, was walking by the Green, he was met by two men, one of whom shouted, and said —"You red ———, it was you who struck my brother." This man gave Higgins a blow of his fist and knocked off his cap. About seven o'clock, as Corporal Joseph Plunket, of the 47th, was passing along the road from Clonmel, he was met about half a mile from Fethard by a large body of laborers—about 100 in number—coming in detached parties from the direction of that town. They all passed him on the road without molesting him, except a party of five men, who appeared the "worst of liquor," and were singing and shouting as they approached him. One of them said — "You b——y soldier, I'll knock your brains out." This man drew his spade to strike the corporal, who passed by without any injury. Private Joseph White was met about the same place by another party of laborers, one of whom caught him by the breast and asked him "if he had been at the Nenagh battle?" The soldier replied he was not there, upon which his assailant begged his pardon, saying that he was not the man he wanted.

A correspondent of the Dublin Nation, writing from Ballintubleen, near Westport, says : I have received within the last few days a letter written by a wounded soldier in Chelsea General Hospital to his poor aged father, inclosing a small remittance of money. In this letter he states, on recovering from the effects of his wounds, he would return to Westport. But with a heavy heart he regrets being forced to say, that he cannot call it a home. In the beginning of the bad times, the father's humble dwelling was razed to the ground—the father himself obliged to seek relief in the workhouse, and his two sons forced by due necessity to join the ranks of the gallant Connaught Rangers. One of them fell by a Russian bullet in Sebastopol, and the other, the writer, returns to England disabled for life ; and, more poignant to the poor fellow's feelings than all, is the galling thought that, on returning to his native country, there remains for him no home nor rooftree to shelter him. What a commentary is this one case alone on the inadequacy of the proposed public banquet to honor the gallant services of the Crimean soldiers as they deserve ! And how powerfully does it illustrate the wisdom, humanity, and patriotism of the views taken by his Grace of Tuam, with his accustomed ability, in his reply to the Secretary of the Crimean Banquet !

The Limerick Observer reports the death in that city of Mayor E. N. Finley, from the effects of wounds received before Sebastopol,

A row of very serious nature, and which resulted in the death of a herdsman, took place at Ballinasloe fair. It appears that the deceased, who was only about nineteen or twenty years old, was one of the herdsmen of Mr. Carr, of Ahascragh, and that he was assisting in getting a lot of sheep, belonging to a nephew of Mr. Carr, at the Brackna Gap, where, at the same time, some of Mr. Tully's men were also trying to get out a lot of that gentleman's sheep. In the confusion consequent on the enormous quantity getting out at the gap, some of the two lots got mingled, which led to a row between the two factions, in the course of which the unfortunate deceased got a blow of a sheep crook on the head, which completely fractured his skull, and from the effects of which he died in about three or four hours after. The man who actually struck the blow has not been discovered, nor is it at all probable that he will be able to be identified.

An accident took place on 7th ult. at Camas, two miles from Cashel. A number of persons were attending an auction held at Camas, and they adjourned to a loft, which was too weak to bear so many, for on a sudden they were precipitated with boards and rubbish, when the confusion and struggles for extrication were appalling. After much difficulty, the unfortunate parties were rescued from the debris, with few injuries of a serious nature. Some had their ribs or limbs fractured, and others sustained severe contusions, but none were so injured as to endanger their lives.

The late storm in Ireland did considerable damage in the neighborhood of Cavan, to whatever of the grain crops remained in the field, and deluged the country, so that what were one day green plains became vast lakes. From Creehan upwards of £100 worth of turf, in clamp, were carried away, with planks, haycocks, &c. The railway was so flooded at Tunnymore that the train was obliged to stop for three days at Crenard, and coaches, cars, and other vehicles had to be sent out to bring in passengers and goods from thence.

Thomas Kinch, sub-constable and orderly to William Caldwell, County Inspector, Limerick, was brought up at the Police Court on 10th ult., on charge of stealing a £10 note and silver pencil case. It appeared in evidence that Mr. Caldwell, on going his official tour of inspection, left prisoner in charge of his lodgings, having left in his desk a £10 note, a silver pencil case, and a gold watch. On his return he found the gold watch much injured as if endeavoring to open it; the £10 note and silver pencil-case gone, and his desk ransacked.

Patrick Jordan, a slater, while employed in repairing the roof of the house of Mr. Ryan, pawnbroker, Quay Lane, Limerick, missed his footing, while climbing round a chimney, and fell from about the height of fifty feet into a backyard attached to the premises. He received awful injuries, and was immediately conveyed to Barrington's Hospital, but died before he reached that institution.

Mr. Arthur Moore, late Assistant-Secretary of the Poor Law Commission in Ireland, has succeeded Mr. Muggeridge in the secretaryship of the Wicklow Railway, the latter gentleman having assumed the duties of a parliamentary agent. The directors of the company, at a recent special meeting of their board, passed a complimentary resolution to their late secretary.

A letter from Tralee mentions that a portion of the property of the late Mr. Spotswood, situated in the barony of Iveragh, in the county of Kerry, which in 1851 was sold to a Mr. Lindsey, of Cork, for 1,200*l*, was resold in Killarney by Mr. Justin M'Carthy, auctioneer, for 3,700*l*., the purchaser the Rev. John Chute, son of Mr. Arthur Chute.

The new Catholic Church of Louisburg, Mayo, the foundation-stone of which was recently laid by his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam, though simple and inexpensive in an architectural point of view, yet promises to be one of the most beautiful structures for religious worship in the archdiocese. The probable cost of the edifice, with tower and spire complete, will be about £2,500. The style adopted by the architect is the early decorated Gothic.

While England has been helping the Turks with Irish soldiers to resist the aggressions of Russia, the tyranny practised by her in Ireland for some centuries has obtained for her the following charming result: A late census return shows that 5 per cent. of the people are unable to speak English, and not one-fourth of the whole can speak or understand their native tongue.

A Belfast paper reports that Mr. Charles Longtre while proceeding in a gig to his residence, Fortwilliam, was thrown out of the vehicle, and received a rather severe injury on the head. When lifted from the ground he was insensible. He is now recovering.

The Rev. Dr. Duhig, C.C., Thomondgate, a most respectable, talented, and pious young clergyman, has been directed by the Lord Bishop of Limerick to proceed to Australia, for the purpose of receiving the contributions of the Catholic people in that distant region, towards the new cathedral of St. John's.

At the Waterford October Fair, milch cows brought from £12 to £16; three year old heifers, £8 to £10; two year olds £6 to £8; yearlings £4 to £5 10s.; bacon pigs, 14s.; store pigs in great number, and all sold. There was a large show of horses of inferior quality.

A fierce opposition in steam communication between Liverpool and Waterford has just commenced—the contending parties having lowered their freights to one-half the established rates; and it reports be true, are still resolved to submit to further serious deduction.

The Catholic cathedral of Kilkenny will, we learn, be consecrated about the end of October or in November. This splendid cathedral is a good pile, being the most prominent object in the city. The tower of the new cathedral may be seen at a long distance from the city.

The order for discontinuing the services of the general and staff of the Kilkenny district has at length been received, after the true circumlocutory fashion in which business is done in lord Panmure's office.

Miss Margaret Purcell, daughter of the late Thomas Purcell, Esq., of Kilkenny, received the black veil on the 8th ult., at Loretto Abbey, Rathfarnham. Ten other ladies were professed on the same occasion.

On the 8th ult., the Catholic Bishop of Waterford administered the sacrament of confirmation to 600 children, in the parish of Trinity Without.

The Very Rev. Dean Gorman, V.G., has subscribed £50, and Mr. Sergeant Shee, M.P., £20, for the new Catholic cathedral of Ossory.

The Protestant Bishop of Limerick (Dr. Griffin) has contributed £5 to the Sisters of Charity of that city. The Lord Lieutenant gave £2.

We have observed, with much satisfaction, says the Freeman's Journal, that all the Liberal journalists of the North have expressed their sympathy with the efforts now being made by the Liberals of Carrickfergus to open their borough and free it from the odium of being a mere appendage to a lordly larder. Mr. Macdonough, Q.C., who is so well known for his rare forensic powers, has been unanimously chosen by the Liberal party of the town as the person to lead the struggle for freedom of election, and we rejoice to find that they have had the wisdom to select for a leader in such a fight a man who, for ability and tact, stands second to no man at the Irish Bar. Mr. Macdonough does not come up quite to our standard of popular politics; but we nevertheless wish him every success in his contest with the odious system of nomination, because we believe his triumph will be a triumph of Liberal views, and that his accession to the house will be a great addition to the practical power and intellect of that assembly.

A game-keeper, named William Cumberland, in the service of A. U. Gledstanes, Esq., J.P., was recently shot by poachers on the Ballymacan mountain. He died in about three hours after receiving the wounds. It appeared that the deceased, seeing a party of five men, armed with guns and accompanied by three terriers and a greyhound, poaching on the mountain, proceeded in pursuit of them, along with seven men, but having only two guns in the party. When close on the poachers, one of them warned Cumberland to return, or he would shoot him; but this deceased refused to do, and followed a short distance till he secured the greyhound. One of the men then turned and shot Cumberland in the arm and legs, lacerating both severely with slugs. He fell on his knee, when another miscreant ran up and lodged the contents of his gun in the poor fellow's breast. Another of Cumberland's party seized the dog, when the poachers fired three shots, wounding two of the men in the face and another in the breast. One of the pursuing party then snapped a flint-gun at a poacher, which missed fire; but Thomas Cairns, deceased's son-in-law, fired and struck one of the fellows, who fell. He rose and fell again, but succeeded in getting off, owing to the confusion created by Cumberland's wounds.

An adjourned meeting of the principal landowners and proprietors anxious to extend railway accommodation through Tuam to Castlebar, and from Athenry to Longhrea, was held at Gill's Hotel, Fort. There were present the Marquis of Clanricards, Sir Thomas Burke, Stephen Roche, Esq., High Sheriff of Galway; Lord Clanmorris, Thomas Seymour, Esq., D.L., Monivea; Denis Kirwan, Esq., D.L.; G. D. Hearne, Esq., Kirkaldy; Courtney Kenny, Esq., James Smith, Esq., Loughrea; Thomas Tully, Esq., Rofarn; Robert D'Arcy, Esq., J. H. Cowan, Esq., James Dillon Meldon, Esq., Robert Power, Esq., &c. &c. The meeting, which was a private one, was held for the purpose of "considering the expediency of offering a guarantee not exceeding 5 per cent. interest on an outlay of not more than £6,000 a mile to any company which may construct a line from Loughrea to Tuam, with an intention of further extending the line to Gort and Ennis." A requisition in accordance with the above, was unanimously adopted and numerously signed, calling on the High Sheriff to hold a public meeting of the country for the purpose. In pursuance of the requisition, the High Sheriff appointed the 18th ult., for a public meeting in the Court House, Galway.

The Freeman says:—"Mr. C. M. Ormsby, the intelligent officer of the Incumbered Estates Court, has compiled and issued his seventh annual report of the proceedings of the court, from the filing of the first petition to the concluding day of the seventh session of the commission on the 31st August, in the present year. It is unnecessary to say anything of a document so interesting and useful. It shows at a glance the enormous changes in the distribution of landed property which have been silently effected in Ireland through the operation of the Incumbered Estates Court. We may just mention that the gross sum obtained by the various sales, public and private, amounted to £18,299,350 14s. 9d., of which English, Sotch, and foreign purchasers paid £2,510.306, or little more than one-ninth of the whole. So far as relates to the operation of the Incumbered Estates Court, Ireland emphatically belongs to the Irish."

The Mayo Constitution reports the death of B. E. Quadling, Esq., R.N., Inspector Officer of Coast Guards, Achill, aged 65, on the 27th of September. The deceased officer served fifty-four years, having entered the navy in 1803, at the age of 11. He was present at the battle of Trafalgar, in the Hydra, Capt. (now Admiral) Mundy, and took part in many of the brilliant engagements, under Lord Cothrane, during the war, for which he received the war medal. He was also awarded a gold and silver medal for saving life. After the close of the war, he entered the Coast Guard, in which service he was actively engaged for 36 years, and distinguished himself by taking an armed smuggling cutter with his galley.

On the 10th ult., at the Mayor's Office, Clonmel, Thos. Ryan, on the Cashel Road, stated that on the previous night six men knocked loudly at his door demanding admittance, stating that they were the police. He and his wife got out of bed, and opened the door. He saw that they wore caps and had red stripes down their trowsers, and believing from their representations that their intentions were not friendly he attempted to close the door; they resisted, but he succeeded in so doing, though not till his wife received a severe contusion. They began to batter the door, but his loud cries for assistance frightened them, and they decamped.

The annual show of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland will next year be held at Waterford, and promises to be a most successful one. The Mayor of Waterford is at present in Paris, where he proceeded for the purpose of inducing the French government to suggest to the landed proprietors, stock-breeders, implement-makers, &c., to send over their contributions to the Exhibition. The Chevalier de Mornar has promised, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, that the Imperial government would give every assistance to the Exhibition, and would forward the contributions from France at their own expense.

A company, independent of all other companies at present in existence, and formed by parties in the county Wexford, is about to construct a line of railway from Wexford to Enniscorthy, at an estimated cost of £100,000, for a landing wharf, at the south side of Wexford river, as also for laying down a tram-road on the bridge now being constructed over the Slaney, to be continued along the quays, and to the lime quarries at Drinagh.

Rev. Vladimir Petcherine, a distinguished native of Russia, and now of the order of the Redemptorist Fathers, delivered a sermon in the Catholic Cathedral of Waterford, in aid of the funds for the support of the Sisters of Charity. The great and splendid church was crowded in every part. The sum of £170 was realised.

The riches of the Irish sea, says the Dublin Tablet, are well known, and the Dutch and Americans, who are thought good judges how to employ their capital to advantage, have either paid large sums for leave to fish on the Irish coast, or have offered to employ a large capital in the fishing trade there. As far back as the reign of Charles I., Captain Symonds informs us, the Dutch paid £30,000 for leave to form a fishing station on the island of Innisboffin, off the coast of Mayo, and about the year 1800, the Americans offered to employ a capital of £100,000 on the Irish fisheries, but were refused permission to do so. All evidence concurs to show that the fish in those seas are not only abundant, but of superior quality.

The Banner of Ulster, reports that the number of damask looms set up in the houses of country weavers, has been nearly doubled within the last few years, and at present immense quantities of this class of goods are produced. The demand is great, and will be so for a short time. The scutch mills which were kept back for want of water, are now in full work, and large quantities of the new crop of flax may be expected at the coming market. Rates are 6s. to 7s., and 7s. 6d. to 8s., as in quality, for hand-scutched, and 7s. to 7s. 6d. for milled.

The Lord Lieutenant recently paid a visit to the Marchioness of Downshire, at Garron Tower. As his Excellency was driving from the Ulster Railway terminus, a slight accident occurred. The leading horses of his carriage turned rather undignifiedly and eccentrically round a lamp-post, and smashed the people; but no other injury was done.

On the 10th ult. a fire took place in Gowron, Kilkenny, at Mr. Jones Tobin's. One of the servants brought a lighted candle into the stable, and incautiously stuck it against the wall. While he was engaged at his work, some wood became ignited, and the whole stable was soon in a flame. The adjoining barn, containing a quantity of hay and straw, was also burned down.

In recognition of the zealous labors of the Christian Brothers, in diffusing the benefits of a sound and religious education in this town, Mr. Bianconi, J.P., Longfield, has sent a donation of £10 to the Very Rev. Dr. Burke, toward the funds for aiding the Brothers in their efforts, which have been extended with increased expense during the past year.

The Earl of Portarlington recently gave a harvest-home to his tenants and laborers. Covers were laid for one hundred. That's the way to do it. Give them one banquet in the year, rob them of the fruits of their labor, and let them starve until next harvest-home day.

In Carlow a woman named Cleary and four of her children had retired to rest, in a room on the second floor, and in about half an hour afterwards the walls fell in, burying its inmates in the debris. Fortunately, in the fall of the rubbish, two of the rafters alighted on the head of the bed, and forming an angle, thus protected the mother and her children from being crushed to death.

The "British Princess" (485 tons register), of Belfast, M'Arthur, master, with timber, from Mirimichi, last from Valencia, where she ran ashore waterlogged, arrived in the Shannon on the 11th inst., in tow of the "Black Eagle" and "Telegraph" steamers, not being able to carry canvas. She was bound round with chains to keep her together.

A man named Nash, a native of Newton, in the Queen's County, was accidently drowned in the river Barrow, on the night of the 11th ult. The unfortunate man after passing over Graigue Bridge, which connects Carlow with the Queen's County, about nine o'clock, missed his way, fell into the water, and was immediately drowned.

The Limerick Reporter states that orders have been issued to several militiamen to hold themselves in readiness, as it is not unlikely that their services may be demanded speedily. Many persons employed at industrial pursuits are not pleased that they should be thus warned to be in readiness.

Wm. Emerson, Esq., has been promoted from the appointment of accountant, which he had so ably held in the Belfast Branch of the Provincial Bank, to the responsible post of manager of the Drogheda Branch.

The forms and cooking utensils of the North Dublin Union have been placed at the service of the Crimean Banquet Committee and accepted. Chained spoons and tin saucepans for the army of Sebastopol!

Mr. Henry Brennen, of 8 Gardiner's Place, Dublin, has made a present of six hogsheads wine for the Crimean banquet, and four thousand pint bottles have been supplied by the Dublin Glass Company's Works to receive the vinous donation.

G. N. Harvey, Esq., Brazilian Vice-Consul, has been appointed Vice-Consul for the kingdom of Portugal, for the Port of Cork and district, in lieu of A. S. Lima, Esq., resigned.

The Seminary founded at Tralee, shortly after his elevation to the ranks of the Hierarchy, by the Right Reverend Dr. Moriarty, has been placed in connection with the Catholic University.

Baron Pennefether, of whose decease the London press put forward the announcement, recently drove through Clonmel, in the apparent enjoyment of good health.

The gentlemen of Clanmaurice and Iraghticonnor are about to seek for themseves the advantages of railway extension to Tarbert. The subject was warmly canvassed at the dinner of the Kerry Farming Society.

At the College street Police Office, Dublin, a lad named John M'Garey, aged sixteen years, appeared to answer the complaint of the Guardians of the South Dublin Union, for having neglected to support his wife and child.

It was stated at the police-office, Cork, that the prosecution of Dunning, in the case of the Blarney murder, has cost the country £3,000.

The Rev. Bernard Scott, the much-esteemed curate of Urlingford, Kilkenny, has been promoted to the parish of Windgap, vacant by the death of the Rev. Mr. Moylan, P.P.

The household furniture of James Sadleir, ex-M. P. for Tipperary, has been brought under the hammer, and sold for the benefit of the creditors of the bank.

Mr. Martin Crean, so well known in Dublin, as the agent of the Liberal party, has established himself in London, as a parliamentary agent.

C. G. Grey, Esq., of Ballykisteen, Tipperary, has been appointed agent over the estates in Limerick and Tipperary, belonging to Stafford O'Brien, Esq.

The sister of the newly created Lord Fermoy, is now the Honorable Mrs. Kelly, wife of James Kelly, Esq., late M.P. for Limerick.

Correspondence.

KILKENNY, October 15, 1856.

In this marble city, wherein we are blessed with fire without smoke and water without mud, there so seldom occurs anything beyond the dull routine of business, that I am almost constrained to cry out "I have no news!"

Yet, it usen't to be so with Kilkenny. Times there were when news and gossip were as plenty as Smithwick's Ale—as plenty as the hearty souls who, at that time, might be seen congregating round and inside the CLUB HOUSE any day on which the Fox Hounds would not be out. Aye, as plenty as the beggars who beset and perplexed every soul that ever mounted a car in Rose Inn street or Coal Market. In either of which stations, I never was at a loss to find out for a half-penny to a beggar the name of a passenger, which I otherwise could not discover. No matter whether he was ever before in Kilkenny or not, these detectives would snuff him out. Long ago, in the times of which I speak, there stood on John's Bridge the most eloquent beggar I ever heard soliciting alms. He was a blind man who, in contradistinction to a fellow-sufferer with stentorian power vociferating his appeals at the other side of the bridge, pathetically admonished each passer-by with these words—I'm saying nothing! Never did I know him to deviate from that solemn appeal save once, which occurred as I was one day passing by, eating gooseberries, when he whispered, "Arrah, master, give me a gooseberry!" But he, too, like the gossippy times, has ceased "saying nothing!"

Jenkinstown Races went off in fair style. After them the princely young proprietor gave a magnificent fete to the gentry of the County. The house was gorgeously decorated. It surpassed anything I could have imagined would there meet my gaze. Yet in the midst of all this grandeur, I could not help noticing that one thing was wanting. What was it? It was not the proud inheritor—the inheritor not alone of his ancestor's princely demesne but their royal blood—for he was there, with his lofty mien and noble brow, conspicuous to all. But where was she, who before the altar of his faith and her faith, seven or eight years ago, for better or for worse, took him as her husband? Where was she, who violated the most sacred of ties, and in the midst of all the fondness which a loving husband could bestow—fled from his halls—blasting his young bright hopes and leaving his hearth desolate? Ah! she but followed in the wake of an infamous grand-mother, whose deeds she well knew of, and whose full-length portrait—with a necklace of the jewels of the Crown which had been presented by her royal paramour—was daily before her eyes in Slane Castle before she changed her maiden name of Conyngham to that of Bryan.

These followers of Madame Vestris and Mr. Duncombe are an ignoble crew to dilate on. Yet despite this sadness which I felt in the gorgeous halls of Jenkinstown, there was one consoling fact, namely: the polluted and seducer were not Irish but Saxon.

At the old race-course of Johnstown—that renowned spot for the purest of Spa-water—there have been other races, got up of course by the laird-of-the-manor, Charles Hely, Esq., of Foulks-court. He is a good sort of man—rather eccentric—yet jogs along very fairly at home at the Petty Sessions or Board of Guardians; but he made a sorry fool of himself in a blind ambition to append an M. P. to his name some seven years ago, whereby he lost his weight in gold. He will hardly try that game again.

At our next general election, I hope to see John Greene, our present worthy Member, and George Bryan (in place of Sergeant Shea) as his colleague, triumphantly elected, as earnest lovers of Ireland and the Irish, to represent our county in the British House of Commons.

By the way, in the last Waterford Chronicle I find the editor has taken the liberty of using, without crediting from your IRISH NEWS, the commencement of your tale, entitled "Casement O'Reilly." It's a bare-faced piracy, which you should denounce. But perhaps you allow your old town's-fellows to rob with impunity.

Yet, in truth it is only second to what my friend the editor of the Kilkenny Journal has attempted. Second, mind you, I say, for in place of robbery he attempts murder. Under the editorial pen he has announced the death of Dr. Mackenzie, of New-York, while I find in your last issue to hand, you credit the said Doctor with $10, as his contribution to the Devin Reilly Testimonial. I am glad the Doctor still lives. Were it only for the jealous care he has evinced in re-producing the productions of our literary men in America, I hope he'll never die!

However, the editor of the Journal, and all others concerned, should know that they won't find a mere myth—an airy nothing—in ST. CANICE.

COST OF TRAVELLING BETWEEN ENGLAND AND IRELAND IN FORMER TIMES.

The traveller on his way to Ireland before the introduction of steam, took ship, and might be several days on the water, where there was no steward ready to supply all ordinary wants. This traveller had probably arrived at the seaport after a long journey, and the precise time for saling depended upon wind and weather. Hence the necessity of being supplied with a basket of provisions for the voyage. This was a source of considerable profit to the landlords of the inns of seaports. The charges were exorbitant. The bottle of brandy—an invariable accompaniment of each basket—was charged one guinea. A diary is preserved of a journey to Dublin from Grosvenor square, 12th June, 1787, in a coach-and-four, accompanied by a post-chaise and pair, and five outriders. The party reached Holyhead in four days at a cost of £75 11s. 3d. The state of the intercourse between this country and the sister island at this part is strikingly set forth in the following entries: Ferry at Bangor, £1 10s.; expense of the yacht hired to carry the party across the channel, £20 7s. 9d.; duty on coach, £7 13s. 4d.; boats on shore, £1 1s.; total, £114 3s. 4d. Visitors to the metropolis had much to say of the lions and their keepers, the beefeaters of the Tower. This was the London sight most famed. To show a country person the lions, or to lionise, has become a common form of expression. At length came the four-horse mails to Bristol, in 1784, and the "Quicksilver mail," to be in turn superseded by the railway locomotive. A coachman, instituting a comparison between the two modes of travelling, thus summed up: "I know that if anything goes wrong, there you are (making a sign of upsetting); but by the rail, if you meet with an accident, where are you?"

AN IRISH PATRIOT AND REBEL OF '98.

From the Dublin Telegraph.

Beneath high Heaven's azure vault,
A finer youth ne'er stood—
With him each action, word and thought,
Were useful for Ireland's good:
While virtue, liberty and truth,
Among mankind abounds,
All men will prize that Irish youth,
The famous Henry Downs.

Paddy's Resources.

Henry Duan or Dunn, Saxonised Downs, was a native of the parish of Blackditches, near Blessington, county Wicklow. He served his apprenticeship to a master boot and shoemaker in Nicholas-street, which terminated in 1797. He subsequently enlisted in the King's County Militia. I am not certain whether it was antecedent to or subsequently that he became a United Irishman. He went with his company from the camp in Loughlinstown to Bray. While in Bray, they were allowed to go to Mass, and on one Sunday while marching from the barrack to Old Connaught, outside of the town, and then a miserable thatched shed that served the double purpose of chapel and school-house, with their band playing, a person named Moore, threw himself on his knees in the dust before them, and in a vociferous manner cried out, striking his breast with violence, "Now, you craw-thumping set, you are going to thump your craws." The band separated to the left and right, and the men followed without uttering a word, with the exception of one, and he kept on his course. This extreme bigot was afflicted for years by the hand of God with a large wen on one of his cheeks, larger than a man's hand when shut. As the young soldier approached him, without speaking one word, he planted a kick with all his force on the diseased jaw of the wretched man, and for some time after his life was despaired of. That young soldier was Henry Downs, and it was wondered at that he was not tied up to the triangles or shot that evening—for Armstrong and his brother officers almost every morning entertained themselves with the drummer's dexterous application of the "cats" on the back of some unfortunate Papist soldier. The very name of Armstrong evokes everything that is base and bad in man. It was reported that evening that the Wexford popular army was approaching in great force, and the regiment was sent off to oppose their advance, and this it is thought saved the indignant Downs.

Subsequent to the defeat of the Wexford and Wicklow forces under Edward Fitzgerald, of Newpark, county Wexford, and Garret Byrne, of Ballymanus, county Wicklow, Downs and three or four of his comrades in arms, resolved to join the rebel camp in Glenmalure, and some time in the night left their quarters in Wicklow with regimentals, accoutrements, and arms. About two miles from the town, on the old road to Glanely, their footsteps were heard by a party of three or four of the local cavalry that were out on patrol. The usual challenge of "Who comes there," was given by the horsemen. "King's County" was the quick reply. "Advance King's County and give the countersign," for the horsemen supposed them to be on duty. Downs levelled his piece, and as he pressed the trigger with his finger, he said "Have at, avic." A volley was discharged, and two or three of the patrol fell. Two miles from that was the village of Glanely, an outpost to Wicklow, with a serjeant's guard in it. The fugitives called up a publican and got some refreshments, and regardless of their enemy being so near, they slept till daylight. They passed near the garrison of Rathdrum, then the head-quarters of a regiment or two, and arrived early in the camp of Glenmalure. Downs was much admired here for youth, size and fine manly appearance. There was nothing forbiding or ferocious in his countenance. Among his new friends, none of which lacked of courage or determination, he was one of the boldest and one of the first and last in all their mountain skirmishes. He marched with Holt and O'Dwyer in their attack on Blessington, halting in his own neighborhood. Convenient to it, in Baltiboys, lived Ben Eves, a harmless, good natured man—half Quaker, half Protestant—always doing good, either in screening the Government informer or allowing his house to be a temporary hospital for the wounded rebel. Indeed the latter he could not resist, and to refuse the former, he would be denounced as traitor, and free quarter or death would follow. His nearest neighbor, a Protestant named Barber, envied him. Eves was not a married man, but kept a foundling girl. Barber (though he had a very fine woman as a wife,) sighed for Ben's girl. Not being able to accomplish his design, he framed a sure plan to take away the life of his harmless neighbor. He well knew the implacable hostility that the outstanding rebels had to informers, and to brand a man with that epithet, was almost certain death. Barber went to the rebel camp and told some of the men there to beware of Eves—that he was gone to Blessington to betray them, that it was an old trick of his, and that he kept and protected the most base and profligate informer with his wife, supplying them with money to support their scandalous extravagance, while they were worming themselves into the confidence of their neighbors to betray them at the Castle. This informer, who went by the name of Smith, and occasionally by that of Johnson, was fresh in the recollection of some of the rebels, and they supposed him to be Cooper alias Morgan, an Englishman, the celebrated Wicklow informer of '97 and '98.* This was enough: poor Eves was condemned without a hearing, and Holt ordered up a party to bring him to the camp. On being brought out, he was shot, and it was said that Downs killed him. Shortly after, it was discovered that Eves was innocent of the charge imputed to him, upon which Downs was seized with remorse, and he resolved to quit the insurgents' camp. Barber had but a short triumph—the insurgents became so incensed at being imposed on, that in a few days after, they shot him. Downs changed his uniform for a suit of his native mountain frieze, and went to Dublin, where he knew another deserter from the same regiment resided.

Downs sent him word to meet him at a certain public-house, and on going there he met Kearns, a favorite companion of his. Downs had with him a young man named Barry, from Buca, near Glendalough. They all three went into a carmans' inn in one of the lanes off Francis street, where their countrymen much resorted. Kearns had just gone on a message for Downs and left him and Barry waiting, and at that moment the redoubtable Major Sirr walked in disguised as a farmer. He called for a quart of porter and sat down in the taproom, when two or his attendants shortly after came in; but none of the party recognised one another, and more of those worthies kept lounging about the door. The Major arose, took the quart in his hand, and approaching Downs with an affected gleam of generosity on his countenance as if he, through friendship, was going to drink to him, thus addressed him: "I think I know you." "How do you know me?" was the quick and abrupt reply. "Your name is Downs, and I arrest you." Downs, with the fury of a tiger, plunged a dagger at his breast, but its point was stopped in one of the links of the chain armor which he had under his disguise, and the force meeting with such resistance, snapped the dagger in two, severely wounding the hand that endeavored to send it home. The Major bent down, and Downs, thinking he was disabled, turned round to defend himself from an attack behind, and was instantly engaged with the other two. Two others rushed in and attacked Barry in the rear while he was aiding his friend. One of them seized Downs from behind round the waist, and dragged him down to the ground, assisted by three others, when he was secured, after receiving several blows on the head—

The cowardly villain forward made
Our hero to arrest;
But the Irish Casca broke his blade
Against the ruffian's breast.

Alone some time the youth withstood
'Gainst all his trained bloodhounds;
I'll fight till death for Ireland's good,
Says Erin's martyr, Downs!

Barry, who was another powerful yeoman also, stabbed one of his antagonists and got away, and escaped a grave in Bully's Acre, or in the dung-heap on Arbor Hill, for one in the city of Grand Cairo, where he died of wounds he received in the 54th Regiment fighting against the French under the gallant Sir David Baird. Downs was tried by court-martial and found guilty, and was sent, with a person named Wall from the Dublin Militia, to be hanged, to which place the King's County Militia had been sent from Wicklow, on the 22d of September. A brother of his, John Downs, a bricklayer, resided in Greek street; he was a fine-looking fellow, a courageous man, and one who loved Ireland dearly.

* At page 417 of the second vol. of the first series of Dr. Madden's "Lives of the United Irishmen," the following item in the secret service money occurs: "December 29, 1797, Ben Eves, of Blessington, what he advanced to Johnson, alias Smith, £14 4s. 4½d." This was the same Eves.

NORTHERN TOADYDOM.

From the New Orleans Delta.

Lafayette is dead. The cockades we wore to welcome him are moth-eaten, but Danvers wanted a holiday and a hero, and fortunate Danvers has found both.

Peabody, the illustrious, has been received with banquet, civic crown, and triumphal arch. Mæcenas Everett shed his light on the festival, courting the financial Augustus in his usual flow of silver rhetoric, while the posterity of the witch-burners, who must always be mad on some subject—either religion, money, or slavery—went deranged, for this occasion only, in honor of the hero banker. Now that the junketting is over, and the cannon have stopped firing, may we mildly ask—who is Peabody?

We have never dined with the banker, nor hobnobbed at his table with the waifs of English nobility; therefore we violate no hospitality in asking again—who the devil is Peabody?

Is Peabody a prophet, a poet, a philanthropist? Has he squared the circle—discovered a new star or comet—written an epic, or solved the mystery of the Northwest Passage? No! but he has done more than these. He has got riches, and—what may surprise people in this neighborhood—obtained riches without cheating corporation, city, or company.

Though long a resident in England, his rise may be dated from the period when he was established as a banker in London, by the house of Wetmore & Co., of New-York. Having no partner, and being quick in decision, as well as having a thorough knowledge of his department, he owes to his promptitude in action the possession of five millions, accumulated in less than fifteen years. When we have added that he is a man of amiable and benevolent (though not unusually benevolent) disposition—that he has given many dinners to his countrymen in London, and also thirty thousand dollars to his native town of Danvers, Massachusetts, we believe that the history of George Peabody, Esq., is written.

We have indulged in this preamble to note a marked difference between Northern and Southern society.

We have in Louisiana and the South many men of large wealth—men who feast their friends and who have given four times thirty thousand to our various Southern institutions; their names are hardly mentioned, except in private circles, but the reflection of every reader will enable him to recall them.

Yet we do not think it proper to go down on our knees and receive them with an ovation like that which the vassels of a feudal baron offered him on his return from a foray against the infidels in Palestine, or which a duke would receive from the suffragans of his Grace's closeborough, where every elector was dependent on his bounty.

But the grand public reception lately at Danvers is to us redolent of toadyism, and a disposition to adore mere wealth. Surely there is nothing astonishing in the fact that a boy of Danvers has become wealthy and is benevolent. Many men have returned home rich from foreign lands. But none, like Peabody, Esq., have become associates of noblemen, or cultivated amiable relations between America and England by eating whitebait with the titled statesmen of Albion. It is to his rank in English society that these Northern honors have been paid. An Englishman of rank in the North is received like a Pasha in Syria or Egypt.

Papas feast and mothers adore him, and daughters are prompt to quit home, country and friends, if but the chance is afforded. A French Count is received into the secret recesses of fashionable life, and with tact and energy rarely fails in compensating his tradesmen and paying for his bouquets from the fortune of the object of his adoration. On the contrary, in the South foreigners of distinction are received without surprise or effort, but as gentlemen; with easy, frank and careless courtesy, they are treated with the best our households and neighborhoods afford, and we have no apologies to offer for any differences between foreign and Southern customs, nor any idea that our mode of life is not as good and as pleasant as that of Chatsworth or Windsor Palace. Foreign gentlemen or noblemen bringing us letters establishing their characters at home, are invited to our houses and plantations; we show them our crops, greasy negroes, poor cattle and fine horses; in the sugar region we strike batteries for them, and allow them to inhale the vapor of the train, besides teaching them to wade through mud to shoot snipe and ducks in our canals and lagoons. In the cotton regions we hunt the deer and the bear, bewilder the cockneys in impassible cane-brakes, plunge them into boggy bayous, and astonish these jumpers of five-foot yielding hawthorn hedges by following full tilt on horseback the fox and the yelping pack over a single log bridging a wide deep channel. Our young women ride with them (not in buggies, thank Heaven, but on the back of a true Southern pet and production—the horse), flirt, listen with a laugh nestling in the sleeve to their "big talks," give them the mitten if they propose, and end by marrying their young neighbor, who is just beginning life with a rifle, ten negroes, four mules and a yoke of oxen, by opening a place in Isaquena, or the Tenas, or the Atchafalaya.

If our genius is not mechanically inventive, it is because we are an agricultural, not an artisan race; and strong must be the attachment of our planters to a pursuit from which not even fevers, overflows, or loans of twelve per cent., with first mortgage on land and negroes of ten times their value, have been able to drive them.

They might have got rich with ten times the ease in Iowa or Wisconsin, but they loved Southern institutions, and have adhered with patriotic perseverance to their native soil.

The same energy and patient battling for long years with disheartening difficulties would have given them twice the income from any other pursuit. But the day may soon arrive when the planter, refusing to borrow at ruinous rates, will find his bank in his cotton-bales piled high on his plantation, to be sold only at his own whim and pleasure, and the South will no longer be compelled to sacrifice her capital to pay the interest of her debt.

In this episode of Southern life, our festival at Danvers is well nigh forgotten, and the triumph of Peabody ignored.

No such man-worship as this scene at Danvers could occur in the South. The men live—or have lived—among us, who with far less wealth have contributed far more to New-Orleans and other Southern towns, but they have not therefore become heroes nor our people toadies. We know of none among us capable of such idolatry, although we are aware it is remembered how many gentle "swallows" have heretofore "but wantoned in the South, while in the North long since their nests were made,"and feathered with the down of amiable Southern geese; and when we consider the taste and patriotism that would allow our public libraries to burn down without replacing them, and then order second-hand statues of the hero of Chalmette, represented in the sublime attitude of lifting off his hat, while mounted on a chubby charger rearing in a cramped attitude, in order to enable him to balance successfully like a quadrupedal rope-dancer on his hind legs. We doubt much, however, if the good people of Danvers have gone to the expense of a dinner and parade merely from gratitude from a former benefaction. They hope for more. They have the shrewdness of their race, and make no outlay without expectation of return. They know the value of flattery, and have administered it. But one grave error has been committed. They should have remembered that Peabody has lived long in foggy England, and has forgotten the customs of his Puritan friends. Had Bordeaux and Champagne mingled their bouquet with the odors of flowers and fruit, who can tell to what magnificence of future benevolence the heart of Peabody, Esq., might not have been inspired?

THE BAGPIPES IN RUSSIA.

The correspondent of the London Daily News gives the following account of the debut of a Highland piper in the saloons of the elite at Moscow:—

For the fifth time since we arrived in Moscow Lady Granville threw open her splendid saloons to the Russian noblesse, and it would be hard to find a more distinguished company than assembled at the ball of last evening. There were the Grand Duke Constantine and his beautiful wife, the Grand Duke Nicholas, the Grand Duchess Marie, and several other members of the imperial family. There were princesses and countesses without number, and amongst the men might be recognised the most distinguished names in the military or diplomatic circles of Russia. Lady Granville danced with the Grand Duke, but his lordship was too busy all night in making his guests comfortable to join the Terpsychorean pastime. M'Allister, Lord Stafford's piper, was in attendance in the ante-room in full uniform, kilt and phillibeg, it being the intention of the noble host that, in some interval of the dance, the Russian guests should be made acquainted with the peculiar characteristics of Highland music. But the bardic soul of M'Allister was impatient of restraint. For some moments he remained standing in the ante-room, beating time to an imaginary reel, and champing like a war horse impatient of the bit, until at last, what with the strains of rival music from the band, the intoxicating influence of a thousand wax-lights reflected from the porcelain walls, and the bright forms of beauty that flitted to and fro before the gaze of the bewildered Highlander, flesh and blood could hold out no longer; the inspired Gael shouldered his pipes, and striking up a pibroch that would awaken the dead, marched, with measured tread, as if at the head of his clan, into the centre of the brilliant ring round which grand dukes and duchesses were at that moment dancing the polonaise. Loud above the puny attempts of catgut and brass rose the wild martial note of the bagpipes. The musicians threw down their instruments in despair, the company ceased dancing, and M'Allister was in a moment the centre of an admiring circle, completely absorbed in his pibroch, and beating time with as much accuracy and sang froid as if unconscious of the presence of the foremost of the world's elite. I watched the effect of this strange music on the unaccustomed ears of the Russians with great interest. They were at first evidently astounded, the officers putting their hands to their ears, and the ladies crossing their hands and gazing on the kilted Æolus in mute surprise. But soon it became evident that there was a sympathy between the warlike race on the one side and the warlike music on the other. Both ladies and gentlemen chatted, smiled, and listened; and when, shortly after, the Grand Duchess Constantine, one of the most beautiful women in Russia, retired to another apartment, she sent for M'Allister, who played "The White Cockade" in a manner that elicited her imperial highness's gracious commendation. From that moment he became the fashion, and several times in the course of the evening he played again to admiring audiences. I may mention before parting with our musical friend, that since his arrival he has been quite a lion amongst the Russians, who follow him in crowds through the streets. There is much speculation amongst the mujiks as to his real character and functions, but the most prevailing impression is that he is the chief of all the foreign ambassadors, and that, with a fastidious refinement of hateur, he prefers walking, on the ground that none of the carriages are grand enough for his notions of personal dignity.

POPULATION OF RUSSIA.

The total number of the population amounts to 63 millions, the principal elements of which give results unknown to the rest of Europe. The clergy of the Russian church stand for the enormous number of 510,000; that of the tolerated creeds, 35,000; the hereditary nobility, 155,000; the petty bourgeosie, including discharged soldiers, 425,000; foreigners residing temporarily, 40,000; different bodies of Cossacks colonised on the Oural, the Don, the Wolga, the Black Sea, the Baikal, the Baschkirs, and the irregular Kalmucks, 2,000,000; the population of the towns, the middle and lower classes, 5,000,000; the population of the country parts, 45,000,000; the wandering tribes, 500,000; the inhabitants of the trans-Caucasian possessions, 1,400,000; the kingdom of Poland, 4,200,000; the Grand Duchy of Finland, 1,400,000; and the Russian colonies in America, 71,000. At the accession of the Emperor Nicholas the census then taken only gave a population of 51,000,000.

THE CAVALRY CHARGE AT BALAKLAVA.

At a banquet lately given to the Earl of Cardigan—the Black Bottle martinet of the English Army—his Lordship enlightened the hardware gentry of Leeds upon the duties of a Cavalry General, and tried to mitigate, as much as possible, the pounding which his Hussars received in the disastrous charge at Balaklava:—

"One would really suppose," says the Earl, "that when a charge of cavalry is ordered, the general officer commanding a brigade has nothing to do but to wave his sword and gallop off, his men following him, and come into personal contact with the enemy's troops. Gentlemen, no such thing is the case. In the first place, it is his duty to keep his regiments together. Secondly, it is his duty to lead them at such a regular pace, under any fire to which they may be exposed, that when they come in contact with the enemy they may attack them with a proper and full impetus. Further, it is necessary that, under whatever fire they may be exposed during the advance, the general officer should keep the allignment of his regiment. I believe there was no person who was present—and there are many persons present who were spectators (for the hills on all sides were covered with our own troops and those of our allies)—that was no one so present who will deny, that the leading of the regiments of the light cavalry brigade into the battery, on the day of the battle of Balaklava, was a firm, satisfactory, and compact one, well and gallantly supported by the three other regiments belonging to the brigade, which came on in succession, under their respective commanding officers. It has also been suggested, and the idea has been entertained, that it is the duty of a general officer commanding cavalry, to fight the enemy with and among private soldiers, after coming into contact with them. No such thing is the case. The greatest authority we have ever had in this country is that of the late noble hussar, Lord Anglesea. Under the names of Lord Uxbridge and Lord Paget, he frequently commanded cavalry, and distinguished himself in every way, and had the reputation of being the best cavalry general that ever lived in this country. He has been known to declare that he never, during his career, raised his sword or used it against an enemy, except on one occasion, in self-defence. There is one more fallacy which at times has been suggested, with regard to the duties of a cavalry general. It is, that a general officer of cavalry, leading his first line, after getting among and attacking the enemy, is to halt and receive the second line, before bringing his brigade out of action. This is not the case. A general officer commanding the first line has nothing to do with anything but the regiments he immediately commands. Those who follow in support are under the superior officer of each.

But, even supposing such a thing was practicable in any common charge of cavalry, of one body of cavalry against another, even against infantry, can anybody living imagine that it would be possible for a general officer leading the first line of cavalry in the affair of Balaklava, attacking 18, 19, or 20 heavy guns to the front, a battery on each flank, and the hills covered with Russian riflemen—can anybody suppose that when entering such a battery, vomiting forth shells, round shot, and every missile of war, a general officer can lead his line over the battery, and after coming into combat with 5,000 Russian cavalry, which was the force stationed beyond the Russian guns, he could turn his horse round and wait for the second line? I had brought the attacking line up to that battery; they were there employed, some of them in cutting down the gunners—and it was there that the great loss of life took place. It was then, or immediately afterwards, that many a gallant spirit departed this life—it was there that such men as Hotham, and Goad, and Montgomery, of the 13th Light Dragoons—as Winter, and Webb, and Thompson, of the 17th Lancers—it was there that they met their death; it was there that White, and Morris, and Sir W. Gordon were cut to the ground; it was there that one of my aides-decamy was wounded, another taken prisoner, and then, or some time later, another met his fate like the rest—I speak of Captain Lockwood, of the 8th Hussars, than whom there never was a more gentlemanly or a more gallant young officer. This slaughter took place both among officers and men, for the men gallantly followed their officers wherever they went. At the same time, in the supporting regiments, both Packer and Fitzgibbon, of the 8th Hussars, Cornet Houghton, of the 11th Hussars, and others whose names I am afraid I can't recollect, were cut off. After this had taken place, I proceeded to Lord Raglan to report the circumstances of the charge, and his Lordship expressed to me his marked disapprobation of what had been done, stating that such an attack was totally contrary to the principles of warfare—that is, the attacking a battery in front with cavalry. I have only to say on the subject, that there never was a more uncalled-for attack, inasmuch as we had seen this Russian battery with a large body of heavy cavalry in its rear at least 20 minutes; and when this attack was ordered, they were neither advancing nor retreating.

AN INCIDENT IN THE ATTACK ON THE MALAKOFF.

Bayancourt's history of the Crimean expedition contains the following incident in the successful attack upon the Malakoff: "An event to which many thousands of men owe their safety, deserves to be mentioned. At the commencement of the attack a Russian officer had thrown himself, with about sixty men, into the Malakoff, of which there remained but the basement crenelated and sufficiently sheltered. From the embrasures of this little fortress, these soldiers maintained a murderous fire against our troops at musket's length: for the space was very confined, and the passage by which the companies pressed forward to support the attack was very narrow. Officers and men fell, decimated by this invincible fire. When the first confusion of the attack had passed over, and we were able to look about and count our numbers, General M'Mahon ordered his engineers to surround the tower with lighted fascines, so as to blind the Russians by the smoke, and to make it impossible for them to continue their fire. But the flames had scarcely surrounded the tower, already enveloping it with a circle of fire, when the general suddenly reflected that the fire might gain on the tower, and bring about an explosion of the powder magazine; he immediately ordered the fire to be quickly extinguished, and made known to the officer that the bastion belonged to us, that all resistance on his part was useless, and that to prolong it would be to uselessly expose himself and his men to death. The combat was impossible; the brave Russian officer who had so energetically resisted from the commencement of the attack, consented to surrender. The commandant of engineers had ordered earth to be thrown upon the burning fascines in order to stifle the flames. The first strokes of the pickaxes in digging up the soil, caused the discovery of an electric wire which communicated with the tower itself, which the Russians had mined. The soldiers instantly seized upon the utensils with which they could meet; shovels, bayonets, pickaxes, everything were employed; for the danger was perhaps imminent. In a few seconds, a circular trench dug around the tower brought to light two other wires, destined to blow up some very considerable powder magazines established in different parts of the work. The artillery took up on the following days from the Malakoff more than 40,000 kilos of powder."

SLAVES FEASTING SLAVES.

From the Dundalk Democrat.

The "grand banquet" to the army that was twice beaten before the Redan, is to take place on the 22d inst., in an old tobacco store beside the rat-tenanted Custom House of Dublin. There is not an old dodger in the country; there is not a sleek, slavish Whig in the land; there is not a place-hunter, or place-beggar from the Giant's Causeway to Cape Clear, who have not been pressed into the service of the Banquet Committee; and there is not a shoneen or satrap or West Briton from North to South, from East to West in this outraged and plundered country, who have not given their mite to sustain the humbug. It is an affair of which we are heartily ashamed. Had the army wielded their swords for Irish interests—had they rushed to the charge shouting "Irish Independence for ever"—or had they even in the bloody battles in which they were engaged, won honor and renown before the Russian hosts there might be some excuse for the nonsense at present tolerated in the country. But the contrary is the fact. They were late at the Alma; they were all but annihilated at Inkermann; they were slaughtered at Balaklava, and they were twice obliged to take flight from the Great Redan. There, in a few words, is the history of the English portion of the war in the Crimea. That the reader may observe that this is not our individual opinion, we shall quote a portion of an article from the Times of the 4th ultimo; an article meant to disparage the fulsome boasting of some people, who would fain persuade the world that the English army had done great things in the East. The Times remarks:—"England failed utterly in playing a great part in the late campaign. From the beginning to the end, mistakes, quarrels, short-sightedness, want of skill, want of common professional knowledge, marred the exertions of the British army. From the first reconnoisance in Bulgaria to the last attack upon the Redan there were, on the testimony of high placed officers themselves, proofs of unmistakeable incapacity and folly. The men died, the horses died, the hospitals were without store, the camp without victuals. A brigadier-general of cavalry executes a movement which the general of division declared to have impaired his forces, while the general of division orders a charge which his subordinate takes every occasion to sneer at as indicative of ignorance and worse. No such oratory as has been lately listened to should be allowed to blind the public to facts which less partial communities daily comment on. While in the eyes of both allies and enemies our army was reduced to a contingent by the incapacity of its chiefs, no provincial speeches at home can permanently raise the character of the men who thus worked its ruin, and lowered the national fame."

There is the verdict of the Times on the feats performed by the army in the east—"it worked its own ruin—and lowered the national fame!" How often have we, in the course of the war, said the very same things, while blockheads, and sycophants were lauding its prowess to the skies? And this is the beaten, ruined, blundering army which is to be feasted in the tobacco store by Irish slaves and West Britons! We are ashamed of the entire business, and we wonder how any men, no matter how depraved in mind, could bring themselves to enact such follies before the honest people of the country.

We do not deny that some of the men in the ranks showed great prowess and heroism, and we are always ready to give honor where it is due; but we look upon the army as a whole, and we say the result of its labors and toils in the Crimea is, in the words of the Times, that it "worked its own ruin, and lowered the national fame." It has done nothing for Ireland, and can claim no honors at her hands. It has not struck one blow for her interests, nor raised one arm for her glory or renown. On the contrary, it is here at present ready to strike for British tyranny, and assert her will over the fair face of our island.

If, then, this nonsensical Banquet takes place in the old tobacco store of the Dublin Custom House, let the toasts have reference to the blunders, the mismanagement and failures in the Crimea; and let not the raw coffee, the cold hospitals, or the famine, and destruction of the troops be forgotten. Let lamentation and grief be the order of the day, and let chairman and speakers honestly proclaim with the Times, "That England failed utterly in playing a great part in the war; and that her army worked its own ruin, and lowered the national fame."

ARMAMENT OF THE MERRIMAC.

The London Post thus discourses of the powerful armament of the U. S. frigate Merrimac:

We shall offend no transatlantic sentiment of national vanity by averring that the American naval authorities are trying a conclusion in the armament of the Merrimac, United States frigate, at this time lying in Southampton Water, with a truly go-ahead faith in the virtue of extremes, a quickness of adoption, to which we slower people make no pretensions, and which we have not been accustomed to consider prudent. It is our sluggish over-cautiousness, perhaps, which induces us to see the workings of a principle in other hands before adopting it ourselves, and we shall regard with more than common interest the working of the armament of the Merrimac.

Lest our remarks prove caviare to the multitude, let us briefly explain. A paragraph has been running the round of the papers respecting the American giant frigate, the Merrimac. She is enormously large and enormously strong, and carries an armament of enormous weight; finally, she has discarded solid shot altogether, and is to fight with shells alone. Her guns are curiously, and, as it seems to us, beneficially modified from the old construction, in accordance with the deductions of Dahlgren, which is, however, collateral to the main point. The gist of the thing is as follows: The Merrimac is boldly committed to the full adoption of that which has not been unaptly termed the incendiary principle, as first developed by Paixhan, and her armament is the most terrible shell armament wherewith any ship has hitherto been supplied.

Now, it is a fact to be remembered, that the shell system, as distinguished from the solid-shot system, was first devised by Paixhan with especial reference to the destruction of ships—not fortresses—and he did our navy the honor of selection for his ideal target. We have only adopted the incendiary system in our ships of war to a limited extent, and Sir Howard Douglas, our most distinguished author on naval gunnery, has in his book advanced strong objections to the adoption of whole broadsides of Paixhan's guns. The armament of the Merrimac is in opposition to these deductions; and one is naturally anxious to ascertain the reasons which have induced the American naval authorities to act, in opposition to an authority whom they hold in great esteem. One is anxious, moreover, to be made aware—and the thought evokes curious sensations—whether the authorities who committed the Merrimac so fully to the incendiary system concede the general principle that horizontal shell-firing from heavy ordnance is chiefly effective against ships? In short, the Merrimac is turned out of hand seemingly with the object of trying a system à l'outrance. It behooves us, slow-moving people, to keep all our eyes open, and profit by the experiment.

Answers to Correspondents.

We congratulate our friends in Pittsburgh, (Pa.,) on the establishment amongst them, at Masonic Hall, Fifth-street, of a branch of the enterprising publishing and wholesale forwarding house of T. R. Callender, of Philadelphia.

We have had intimate business relations with Mr. Callender for some time, and rejoice in this opportunity to give publicity to strong feelings of admiration which we entertain for his uniform urbanity and straight forward business tact.

"New-York, October 20, 1856.

"Sir—In animadverting upon Irish ingratitude to an Emmet, in your publication of the 11th instant, you state that Mr. Grattan 'was stoned upon Carlisle Bridge, close to the scene of his glories, and brought down upon his feeble knees, bleeding to the pavement.' As an eye-witness, from a window overlooking the transaction, I will describe what did occur. Messrs. Grattan and Shaw were chaired, from Green street Court House, through Capel street, Mary street and Henry street, as far as Cole's Lane, when a gang of the lowest canaille, composed of Smithfield cattle-drivers or go-boys, and Cole's Lane (market) basket boys, rushed upon the procession, throwing it into disorder, and in the melee some missile struck Mr. Grattan upon the forehead. He and Mr. Shaw were then taken by their friends from the car or chairs: Mr. Shaw's friends hurrying him down Henry street to Sackville street; and Mr. Grattan's into Preston's, an extensive cabinet-maker's, facing Cole's Lane, the immediate scene of action. Whilst they were being removed, a heroic young man, I believe named Callaghan, wrenched a leg from one of the chairs and floored more than fourteen or fifteen of the cowardly assailants, some of whom ran the car into Cole's Lane, Sampson's Lane, and an Alley way at the rear of the house in which I resided (147 Henry street). After they had fled with the car—the whole interruption not having occupied more time than I have taken to describe it—I heard a tremendous knocking at the stable door, on my opening which the rabble wheeled in, sans ceremonie, the carriage frame and left it 17 hours in my care; and afterwards sold it for £14. When taking it away, they to'd me they were in dread of the Liberty boys, an opposite faction on the south side of the city, who had taken some time before (per force) White's chair from them—it being customary in those days to let the victors retain and dispose of the same. On resuming my former position, I perceived the balcony, fronting Preston's house, filled with gentlemen—Mr. Grattan, a venerable looking old man, standing in their midst, with a bleeding gash in his forehead, and Lord Charlemont pointing to it, whilst addressing the people beneath, as to the base return for a long life spent in their service. A rush of citizens crowded to the place on the first alarm and Mounted Police and Dragoons followed. During the time the gentlemen were speechifying, Mr. Grattan got into a carriage at the rear of Preston's, in Prince street, and made for home—the people still loitering up and down, determined to give him a hearty reception.

"It is now nearly 89 years ago, and I regret that a new generation should allow a rowdy electioneering mob to represent Irish ingratitude to a Harry Grattan.

"Enclosed you have my address.—B. O. R., A Former Member of The Protestant Association for the Repeal of the Union in '47-8."

The occurrence is described in Madden's Commentaries on the Career and Character of Henry Grattan, as we related it. "After passing Carlisle Bridge," says the author, "a base and execrable gang assailed him with ferocity. His friends around him were greatly alarmed; but though Grattan was stricken in years and shattered in his constitution, he displayed his charateristic personal courage. One of the wretches was but too successful, and succeeded in giving him a fearful blow that cut open the old ma's face."

The cause of the attack was his previous vote in favor of the Insurrection Act, which greatly exasperated a large portion of the citizens who forgot the services of the Patriot in, what they considered, the supporter of the Government.

Dungarvan, Co. Waterford, Oct. 11, 1856.

Sir—I have much pleasure in handing you the enclosed Irish Bank-Note, value twenty shillings British; one dollar of which you will please appropriate towards the fund being now raised in your noble city, having for its object the two-fold purpose of erecting a monument to the memery of that high-souled, talented Irishman, T. Devin Reilly, and of ministering to the cares of his bereaved Widow and Orphan—a work worthy, no doubt, of the names of the warm-hearted, generous men who form the Committee.

You will please forward me, as usual, for the balance the Irish News for twelve months, or for whatever period it will cover, as I cannot say what number of cents the discount may be.

I perceive in No. 24 of the News, under the head of answers to correspondents, the Editor's reply to "an indignant correspondent," which I think is letting him down too softly. Yet, still it may be the better way to treat with silent contempt such Know-Nothing noodles. What a bulwark he must have thought his Club of fifty (making the unit one) would be to the Irish News.

I can imagine that correspondence such as his must tend largely towards its circulation, and I should not feel surprised if ere this that subscriptions poured in—in the ratio of fifty to one each of the indignant correspondent's half hundred Clubmen—so as to show the indignant sense of feeling entertained at such penny dictatorship, by men of free and independent minds

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

James Boland.

Richard J. Lalor, Esq., "Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, New-York."

A correspondent writes to ask us, "if General Walker in Nicaragua is not precisely in a similar position to Strongbow in Ireland, and if the army under Walker are not doing what the Anglo-Normans did in Ireland?"

Not precisely! The institutions of Ireland at the time of the Anglo-Norman invasion partook more of Republicanism than Monarchy. The elected chiefs were the Presidents of their respective clans—learning flourished—the Arts were cultivated and prosperity abounded. Strongbow was sent to Ireland at the instigation of a traitor. Walker went to Nicaragua at the request of the patriotic Democracy, whose rights were trampled upon by Serviles—who resembled more the insolent, tyrannical Hidalgos of old Spain than the citizens of a free Republic. Walker goes to Nicaragua to elevate, not to pull down—to spread and consolidate Republicanism—to free the People, not to enslave them. The English went to Ireland to extend monarchical sway, to rob, deteriorate and destroy. There can be no parallel between the volunteer soldiers who battle for the rights of the People, and the invaders who exterminate the People that a class may dominate—such a class as the Anglo-Norman aristocracy were and are.

Crescent, (Saratoga Co.) Oct. 26, 1856.

Thomas F. Meagher, Esq.

Sir,—I have no apology to give, for troubling you with the following request;—more than that, it is the desire of my countrymen in these parts. A person from Troy—a Mr. Deadee—delivered a political address in this place, on last night, for the benefit of J. C. Fremont and his party, abusing Buchanan and Democracy in such terms as "bellowing slaves," "hoodwinked fools," &c., and promising to Irishmen, a repetition in America of the drama of 46 and '47 in Ireland, "in case James Buchanan were elected." Not only his prophecies, but his fervent prayers were offered for such a soothing result. Now Irishmen could listen to all this, and smile; but in the course of his speech he stated that he "was a political refugee in '48," and that "Queen Victoria had offered three thousand pounds for his head! He boasted of his intimacy with you, and John Mitchel—that he was educated at the same school with you—using the prestige of both names to recommend his doctrines to us. I understand he is in the habit of doing this all over the country. He intimated also, I have heard, (though not in his public address,) that your opinions and Mr. Mitchel's were undergoing a change, with regard to the Democratic party, and favorable to Black Republicanism. Now, our request is, that you state in the Irish News, how much of truth there is in his assertions; and what authority he may have to speak for others? As for me and those of my kindred and acquaintance—whom I respect for truth and manhood—we look on the events and results of "'48" in Ireland, with more of shame and grief, than of triumphant material to be paraded on the stump, in order to affect the result of American elections. There could not be, in my opinion, a wiser doctrine for Irishmen, than that put forth by you, and Mr. Mitchel, of purging from American politics, all Irish, or other foreign abstract issues.

That Providence may in its mercy bring round a time, and give us the opportunity to prove to the world that we are able, and have the courage to make it what "'48" should have been, is what all true Irishmen ardently pray and look for.

I remain your friend and admirer.

Patrick Walsh,
An old member of the Swift Club.

We print this letter in full—it asks important questions, and contains serious and very grave advice. All Irishmen in America should read it, and be guided by it. The individual it alludes to, is some impudent person of the name mentioned in this letter, introduced to us in Troy, this time twelvemonth. That's all we know about him. If he has said and done what is alleged of him by our correspondent, he is an utterly truthless impostor.

The decision of the Court Martial in the case of Captain Heuston, 69th Regiment, has terminated in the acquittal of that gentleman. Next week we shall publish in full the official paper, signed by the Brigadier-General, communicating it. Being re-arrested, however, we forego any comments oe the proceedings until they are finally disposed of.

A young correspondent from Providence, sends his first effort, of which we print the first stanza:

Oh Erin! Fairest isle upon the bosom of the sea—
Why dost thou still in bondage pine—nor strike for liberty?
Why dost thou sit so lonely there, like maiden in a dream?
Awake, awake, and courage take, by wearing of the green.

"Norma."—"My own true love," commencing

"What will I do love, Without my own true love,"

is the silliest nonsense. Look out for a new love.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1856.

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN—THE UNION VICTORIOUS.

It is a cold dim morning. The yellow leaves, heavy with last night's rain, strew the pavements of our spacious avenues, and the public squares. A keen wind hurries through the skeleton trees. The horses under the drays, the stages, and more exclusive equipages, seem to labor in cold blood. It is a cold dim morning.

But all through the leaden skies a beautiful light—such a light as that which Church pours in upon his gorgeous foliage—is breaking. The spires of Trinity and St. Pauls', and the white towers of the marble churches in the newer portions of the city, glisten in the glorious light. The forest of majestic spars which girdles the city, reflects the fresh rays, and the breasts of the throbbing rivers, North and East, warm in the deepening hues of gold and crimson.

There are glad tidings—tidings of exceeding joy—uttering themselves everywhere about us, as the sunshine widens. On a thousand faces, as they hurry past our window, there is a flashing pride. Sinewy-limbed mechanics—laborers—craftsmen of every calling—students hastening to the colleges and University—merchants hastening to their marts—all look joyous, buoyant, bright, as if it were the first day of summer.

The Constitution—the Laws—the Union—have had a victory such as Jefferson would have commemorated in some immortal document, full of strength, chastity, sublimity. A victory such as Webster, from the pedestal of the mighty monument overlooking Charlestown, would have announced with all the thunders of his eloquence. A victory such as the Poets of the Revolution, and all who have since then echoed in more majestic harmonies the deeds done under Washington, would have sung in numbers pregnant with a diviner fire than that which woke into martial hymns the lyre of Tyrtæus and that of Kœrner. A victory such as the great orators of the American pulpit may well proclaim in the midst of loud anthems and hosannahs throughout the cities and the hamlets, the homesteads of the prairie, the vineyards of Ohio, and the mines of the Sacramento, richer than those of Ophir.

The black peril which overhung this country yesterday—which filled every wise and good man with the saddest forebodings—which has moved the soul of the People to its deepest deepths, and darkened it with fear, anguish, and all the emotions which precede a furious civil strife—this peril, thanks be to God! has passed away. But yesterday, and the land trembled on the verge of an unknown future. To-day, and the future into which it enters is illuminated. There are no terrors now before the People, their statesmen, and their law-givers. All is bright, disentangled, solid. The Republic is preserved. Another period, full of peace, unity, brotherhood, and all the prosperous activity of a compact and inseparable Commonwealth, opens to the historian, who, from the highest posts in the public service—the Secretaryship of the American Navy and the Mission to England—secludes himself to chronicle the struggles, labors, and splendors of his conntry.

We do not exaggerate. No false rumors stimulate us. The event we speak of, is anchored immutably in the waters of Time. The antagonists of Democracy own it. Frankly they concede it. What is more, they furnish us with the authentic statements and the deliberate convictions, from which we appeal to our readers, and with a bounding heart, bid them rejoice.

What says the Herald?

"The Presidential election, judging from the returns as far as received, appears to have gone for Buchanan. The October Pennsylvania and Indiana elections seem to have completely reversed the popular tide, which, up to that time, had been rising and swelling in favor of Fremont."

Again—

"It may be doubted whether, from their immense expenditures of money, time and labor, their game has paid for the candle; but we presume that they will consider themselves as indemnified for their outlays, exertions and troubles ten times over, in the assurance that with the aid of the Irish Catholic vote for Buchanan, the Union is safe for four years longer."

With equal candour and equanimity, the Times writes:—

"At the time we go to press our returns of yesterday's election are very incomplete. They indicate, however, the election of Buchanan. He has carried Pennsylvania and New Jersey; and unless he loses some of the Southern States, which have been generally conceded to him, his election is already more than probable."

The Tribune, not less frank, is more explicit:—

"We have lost a battle. The Bunker Hill of the new struggle for Freedom is past; the Saratoga and Yorktown are yet to be achieved. A party of yesterday, without organization, without official power, without prestige, and latterly, almost without hope, has not overborne the oldest party in the country, with its hundred thousand office holders, its eighty millions of annual expenditure, its million and a half of votes trained by the habits of a lifetime to vote without question or hesitation whatever bears its label. The Republican party called into being by the Nebraska Iniquity of 1854, having a substantive existence in but sixteen States, has beaten one of the rival parties which boasts of their compact organizations in all the States, but has failed to beat the other in its first Presidential canvass. James Buchanan is our next President, and John C. Breckinridge Vice-President."

Wherefore, let there be joy on earth and in heaven throughout this noble land! Let the young men and maidens, old men and children, rejoice! Rejoice, ye mountains and all hills, fruitful trees and cedars, and all people! Rejoice, and praise the name of the Lord, for he hath exalted the horn of His people!

Oh God! look down upon the land which Thou has loved so well,
And grant that in unbroken truth her children still may dwell;
Nor, while the grass grows on the hill, and streams flow through the vale,
May they forget their fathers' faith, or in their covenant fail!
God keep the fairest, noblest land, that lies beneath the sun;
"Our country, our whole country, and our country ever one!"

OLD IRELAND.

We receive our Irish exchanges regularly from every part of the old land—from the beautiful City of the Lee and the Madien city of the Foyle, sitting on her church-crowned hill, like a chief tain on his clan-girt Rath. From the tone of these journals we are led to infer that a perfect political calm reigns in Ireland. The turbulent waters of civil and religious strife appear to have settled down into the calm placidity of a summer lake. The Janus of agitation is closed, and no fiery orator—except at a Tenant League dinner—denounces Saxon oppression or deplores the fallen state of his country. No indignant editor throws off a fierce Philippic against foreign or local misrule. Judging from these signs, we, on this side of the Atlantic, might be induced to believe that Ireland was prosperous, happy, contented, free and independent—that there was no grievance to be complained of, no wrongs to be redressed, no sufferings to be alleviated. But amid all this apparent prosperity and quiet, we occasionally hear of an odd estate being cleared of its human occupants, by one of those new landlords manufactured in Henrietta street, and must therefore infer that the calm is only upon the surface, and that popular discontent only lacks an utterance.

It is gratifying, however, to find that since the press of Ireland has partially abandoned politics, that it is usefully employed in disentombing the historical records of the past—of reviving historical reminiscences, which had been so long neglected in the tumult and turmoil of political warfare. Biographies of men who shed lustre on the pages of Irish history, in the several walks of literature and art, are being collected and published. Men who stood upon the hill side with their tall pikes in '98—who fought at Vinegar Hill, Oulart and Arklow, and traversed the glens of Wicklow with Holt or Dwyer, are being introduced to the Irish people. Their deeds, their escapes, and their sufferings, form excellent pabulum for the young generation that is growing up in the old land. Irish scenery, whose romantic beauty and legendary associations had either been unknown, untold, or forgotten, is now made the theme of pleasant articles in many of our exchanges. This is a new feature in Irish Journalism, and cannot fail to bear golden fruit. It is the only compensation we have for the eloquent appeals which formerly greeted us, and might be thought sufficient to have aroused the dead chivalry of the land, and collected them in ghostly array against Ireland's enemies in the Golden Vale, or up on the Hill of Tara.

MORE POWER TO WALKER!

The star of Walker is in the ascendant, notwithstanding the menacing attitude of the British fleet in the waters of San Juan del Norte. His last brilliant victory has set speculation at rest respecting the future of Central America. The petty despotisms which have ruled, unchecked and unseen, over that magnificent portion of our hemisphere, and reduced its population to the most degrading level, is destined to disappear before the onward march of the "man of destiny."

Hitherto republicanism in the states of Central America was another name for the most irresponsible despotism. Henceforth it will become a reality. Modeled after the free institutions of the United States, Nicaragua will become one of the most prosperous and happy countries on this great continent. Its resources will be developed, manufactures established, and a high order of civilization introduced. For social disorder, domestic tranquillity will be established, while commerce will be forced to pour its golden treasures into the capital of the regnant state of Central America. That gallant dash upon Massaya—that furious charge upon the foe at Granada, quick as lightning and crushing as the thunder-bolt, has cleared Walker's path to future victories and further conquests.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The Canadian arrived at Quebec on Tuesday, bringing four days later news. The monetary embarrassments still continue, while the political relations of the principal Governments have not improved. The King of Naples is still determined to keep his dungeons open, and insists upon his right, as an independent Sovereign, to treat his subjects as he may see fit. He repudiates the dictation of the English and French Governments, that went to war with the Emperor of Russia for threatening the sovereign independence of the Sultan. As far as precedent is concerned, his Majesty of the two Sicilies has the best of the argument.

If Louis Napoleon has a right to drag Frenchmen from their homes in the dead hour of the night, and transport them, unheard and untried, to the pestilential swamps of Cayenne—if the Queen of England's satraps have a right to pack juries and hurry off political offenders to Bermuda, or Van Diemen's Land, and there compel them to mix aud associate with the vilest criminals—why not the King of Naples pounce upon any of his subjects who may wear a moustache, or utter the fatal word Liberty, and chain them in a loathsome dungeon twenty or thirty feet below the level of the sea, where their friends can see them—chained to be sure—once a month? The old besotted Bourbon does no more than the other despotic rulers of Europe are doing and have been doing for centuries. Oppression is the hereditary right of Royalty, and why should it be infringed upon in Naples, while it is sanctioned in Russia, in Turkey, in Prussia, in Austria, in France—wherever, in fine, a throne stands or a sceptre is raised against the liberties of the people.

Bourbon, thou reasonest well! But does it not strike your royal understanding that the People are tired of their Regal Masters—that the flash which lit up the Heavens in '48, and brought Royalty on its marrow-bones, was only the warning sign—the herald of that storm which may burst at any moment all over Europe?

It is not because Neapolitan tyranny is hated and condemned at the Courts of France and England, that diplomatic relations have been broken off, and the combined squadrons ordered to the waters of the Mediterranean, but simply because persecution has rendered kingly rule so odious in Italy, that revolution has become a political necessity. The point of endurance has been passed, and the time for armed resistance is only a matter of expediency. It is to compel reforms which will disarm resistance and prevent the breaking out of revolution, that would sweep Europe like a prairie-fire, England and France have assumed an attitude to the king of Naples which conflicts so directly with the part they have recently played in Eastern affairs. They neither intend to subvert the throne, abridge its prerogatives, nor encourage his down-trodden subjects to raise the flag of revolt, and give the sign for which millions, panting to be free, have kept a long and weary vigil. The interference of England and France is a delusion and a sham. It will neither bring the king of Naples to a sense of his danger, nor prevent the catastrophe which they dread. The king has appealed for protection to Russia, Austria and Prussia, and thus matters stand at present.

THE FAIR AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Next Monday the Ladies of New-York inaugurate a movement, the object of which is to raise a fund for the purpose of establishing in this city an hospital, to be placed under the control of the Sisters of Charity. Seldom has such genuine interest been manifested as this holy and munificent project elicits. Gentlemen of the first culture, social excellence, wealthy, brilliant as wealth and accomplishments can render them, have for weeks past devoted themselves to it.

Day and night, they have been busy gathering in those dainty and winning stores, the sale of which will go far to realize the intentions of their good hearts. The fair will last upwards of ten days. There will be music, flowers, beauty, every attraction convoked during those days under that stately dome in the sweet cause of charity.

A paper, too, will be published on the spot. It is to be called the Page of the Fair. To its crystal columns, glittering with the choicest wit and poetry and eloquence of New-York, we refer our readers for all further particulars regarding this useful, pious, and gracious work. May God bless it!

GOD PRESERVE THE UNION.

Brothers, there are times when Nations
Must, like battle-worn men,
Leave their proud, self-builded quiet
To do service once again:—
When the banners blessed by Fortune,
And by blood and brain embalmed,
Must re-throb the soul with feelings
That long happiness hath calm'd.
Thus the Democratic faith that won
The Nation, now hath need
To raise its ever stalwart arm,
And save what twice it freed.

So friends fill up
The brimming cup
In brotherly communion—
Here's blood and blow
For a foreign foe,
And God Preserve the Union.

There are factions passion-goaded,
There are turbulence and wrath,
And swarthy dogmas bellowing
Around the People's path;
There are false lights in the darkness,
There are black hearts in the light,
And hollow dwarfs are mimicking
The Jove-like People's might.
But ah! the Democratic strength
That smote an Empire's brow,
Can with its regnant virtues tame
Mere home-made factions now.

So friends let's band
For Fatherland—
In brotherly communion,
Let every mouth
Cry "North and South,"
And God Preserve the Union.

While the young Republic's bosom
Seems with rival passions torn—
Growing from the very freedom
Of the speech within it born:
Europe, in its haggard frenzy
To behold no earthly sod,
Where its white slaves may unbend them,
Or bend but to Freedom's God—
Europe madly hails the omen—
Strains its bloodshot eyes to view
A native treason toiling at
The work it strove to do.

So friends let's all
Like a rampart wall—
In granite-built communion,
Stand firmly proud,
'Gainst the kingly crowd—
And God Preserve the Union.

Since that day, when frantic people
Round the State House rose and fell,
Like an angry ocean surging
Round some rock-reared citadel—
When the Quaker City trembled
'Neath the arming People's tramp,
And the Bell proclaimed to iron men
Each house in the land a camp—
Democracy has kept that Bell
Still pealing sound on sound,
Until its potent energy
Has throbbed the wide earth round.

So let it ring,
So let it bring
Us brotherly communion;
Here's heart and hand!
For life and land!
And God Preserve the Union!

FINANCIAL FRAUDS AND HEROES.

The tremendous Presidential excitement which justly and necessarily excluded all other topics from the newspapers, was well nigh robbing four or five public characters of that notoriety which they eminently deserve, and to the attainment of which they most enthusiastically devoted their own talent and the funds of the public to an almost unlimited extent.

Such an obscurity as that which the silence of the Press confers, would probably be the most painful and heart-breaking to such persons. It is the vanity and the ambition of all criminals to be minutely, graphically and extensively reported in the papers—to divide the public gaze with the returns from Pennsylvania—to out-interest the latest news from Europe—to be talked of in the same breath with Louis Napoleon, Ferdinand of Naples, or Marshall O'Donnell. Vagabonds, swindlers, robbers, and murderers out of prison, they are very important notabilities in their cells. They are heroes. Their hands actually have been against every man, or in every other man's pocket, and society with its mighty arms has felt it necessary to cabin, crib and confine occasionally a "solitary poor devil" for its own protection.

What greater evidence of power than to inspire such fear in the community to shake up, for instance, such solid phalanxes of solid men as congregate about the solid and solemn-looking buildings in Wall street, New-York, and State street, Boston?

Such men, who have the "fatal facility" of imitating other people's names on bits of paper, and coining money in the "operation," carry ruin in their vest pockets—earthquakes in memorandum books—and wield a power of utter demolition and unlimited commercial catastrophes in a pen and ink.

There is no denying the power or the ability of such fellows, yet at the risk of making heroes of them, we must heartily agree with society in handing them over to a tender turnkey and the refreshing inquisitiveness of the city reporters.

Within the last month, a large and not unromantic addition has been made to the already plethoric and closely-printed volumes devoted to the lives and "services" of noted criminals. Patriotic pamphleteers, who analyze "astounding forgeries," and weave around them a first-class "yellow cover," have good reason to get down on their bare knees, for unto them Providence has been unduly bountiful.

It is not every month that half-a-dozen real, telling heroes turn up—good-looking, dashing vagabonds, who have figured in the best houses "up town," after figuring in the better halves of the said houses "down town"—who have on hand a series of love-scrapes, any one of which would be pith and marrow for a "thrilling tale of city love and life"—who have run through every mode of metropolitan existence, from pinched clerk to princely speculator—from the white-washed attic to the luxurious brown-stone mansion; from pavement-shattered shoes to the sweltering rugs and buffalo robes of the brilliant barouche, upon whom rascality seemed to riot in gold, and swindling but to shower success, and who, lifted by fraud into a finanical fanaticism, lived so fast that they ultimately ran away with themselves.

What facts for the used up and brain-tired penny-a-liner—for the voracious paragraphist—for the reporter, heart-sick of every-day occurrences and the eternal routine of rival politicians. Huntington, of New York, George Gomer, alias Beaumoir, alias Imbart, alias Dutton, alias Rechard, alias De Gorge, &c., &c.; Andrew Finlay, of Cincinnati, Thomas P. Wight, of New York, and Nichols, of Cleveland, Ohio, present, in the lately published statements of their alleged forgeries and frauds, a mass of ability, audacity, rascality, recklessness, and, we may add, romance unparalled.

The extraordinary nature and extent of those forgeries are only equalled by the carelessness exhibited by banking-houses, money-trafficers, and the supposed cautious, far-seeing, and sagacious potentates of the commercial world.

Huntington's affairs develop a stupendous series of frauds. It appears that he initiated his "operations" by forging the signatures of some fifty houses, all well-known, and accounted responsible firms. That he should not have been almost immediately detected, is something to startle the imaginati on, and shake the faith of outsiders in the business capacity of Wall street.

Gomer's transactions were more brilliant, though not so hazardous, or so open to immediate detection. He travelled from one end of the country to the other, forged letters from distinguished houses, introducing himself, on their strength speculated largely and successfully for some time, to the amount of nearly $100,000.

Thomas P. Wight is a very ambitious young man, who after running a flaring comet course for ninety days had at the end of that period more "stars" on his trail than follow the respected luminary alluded to. His case is decidedly romantic, and embraces a trip to Europe. Some cunning people think that "as a revelation of 'sharp practice,' Wight's little affair" throws the operations of Huntington completely into the shade. The schedule of liabilities laid at his door make a total of $75,637 and 95 cents.

After such persons our other heroes may seem somewhat diminutive, but it is not their fault if it is so. Andrew Finlay was arrested at the instigation of two well-executed forged checks on the Bank of Albany, the one for $4,000 and the other for $3,000. Nichols was arrested in this city on a requisition from the Governor of Ohio, on the charge of forgery. Sum about $15,000.

The most important of these forgers were very free in society, and lived up to almost "every cent they made." They were lavish in their expenditure, and, no doubt, allowed the traders, horse-dealers, wine-sellers, and "fast ladies," with whom they had dealings, to swindle them only less extensively than they had swindled others. The appetite for costly things and recherche fare which they assumed when "solid men," has not vanished with the Tombs. They are represented as making imprisonment "tolerable" by living like "fighting cocks."

When the cases come to be thoroughly analyzed (if ever they do), we fear that many more will have to vacate chairs in Wall and other streets of similar importance.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

CHAPTER VIII.

BEEFSTEAKS AND BRAVERY—THE DETECTIVE'S PLAN—ITS EXECUTION AND THE RESULT.

"Like mummies brought to life by chemic process
The creatures seemed, when we did lead them forth;
So wasted were they, timorous, wo-begone—
So wedded to despair, so loath to hope."

MASSINGER.

On the morning after Casement's pleasant visit to the lawyer, he was aroused at an early hour by feeling the disproportioned hand of Sergeant Bullock laid gently on his shoulder.

"Hup with you, sir," cried that distinguished individual—late an ornament of the London detective force. There was a smile of anticipated pleasure round his mouth, and he rubbed his huge hands together, as if to get rid of the superfluous electricity with which his finger-ends were charged. "The game's afoot, sir, and it's time the 'unters should be afoot as well."

Our hero did not need to be twice told; he dressed himself and seized his pistols with an alacrity which won from Mr. Bullock an approving smile.

That officer's faculties had been enlivened in this affair by the douceur of a twenty-dollar bill, and the promise of two like it, contingent on a successful issue. This liberality, joined with Mr. O'Grady's influence, was perhaps requisite to elevate the disappearance of a "mere himmigrant"—and an Irish one at that—into an importance worthy of the sergeant's official recognition. Still, Bullock was a kindly-natured fellow, in his own rough way, and a shrewd and indefatigable officer when once fairly started on a trail.

"That's right, sir," said he, as Casement removed the caps off his pistols, to see that thr powder was well up in the nipples. "It does me good, sir, to 'ave promise of a day's sport with a gentleman as hunderstands 'uman nater and percussion caps so huncommon."

The compliment was undoubtedly sincere, but its oddity provoked a smile.

The detective would not budge until his companion breakfasted. "There's no 'urry, sir," he gravely insisted. "Brand went off last night in hanother direction, which is being watched by hothers. You'll need all the henergies of a stout 'art and a beefsteak, most likely, before the day's work's done."

"Where now?" asked Casement, as, after having concluded a hasty meal, he took his seat beside the officer, in an open wagon.

"To Williamsbugh, fust," rejoined the energetic Jehu, at the same time giving his horses a cut which made them travel faster than the statute in that case made and provided would approve. "Hafter that, to the Long Highland Barons, where two of my lads are halready waiting us."

Not being much versed in suburban geography, our hero naturally enough concluded that the "Long Highland Barons" must be name of some tavern, or hotel, whose proprietor was a reminiscent Scotchman. The barrens of Long Island are almost as poor, but cannot show so old a pedigree.

"You see," explained Mr. Bullock, as the horses flew along the road over which the sisters had been driven two days before, "you see, sir, this is honly a speculation on my part. It's the toss-up of an 'apenny whether your servant hever was 'ere or not."

Having made this statement to break the force of any disappointment that might ensue, he then explained that the information upon which he acted amounted to nothing more than that Brand had recently claimed a house out in this neighborhood, his title to which seemed very questionable, though no one felt inclined to question it; and that he had insured this house the day before, for the sum of five thousand dollars, in an Insuranc Company with whose President he was on terms of reciprocal service.

"Not another company in New-York would 'ave taken it, sir, at hany premium," added Mr. Bullock, after an elaborate detail of the steps which had preceded this discovery; "for you must know, sir, that it's what the vulgar calls an 'aunted 'ouse, and the title Brand claims it hunder is little short of a traggedy."

"What tragedy do you refer to?" inquired Casement—amused by the officer's pretended contempt of a superstition, which had vidently its full weight in his mind. "What causes this particular building to be haunted, and what is the nature of the questionable title?"

"There was a hawful murder there," replied Mr. Bullock, in a solemn whisper—to gve its full effect to which he had pulled up his horses, and now permitted them to move forward at an easy walk. "The man that built or howned the 'ouse—I don't know rightly which—got jealous of a gentleman who was in the 'abit of visiting a lady that should 'ave been the howner's wife; but whether she was or not is nothing to the story. The howner was a Henglishman, the lady French—and them is two ingrediente that you may boil and boil, but they'll never rightly mix. One day the visitor was found dead in the woods, a short distance from the 'ouse; and on searching for the lady," continued the sergeant, here bringing his team to a full stop, "she was found at the bottom of a thirty fathom well that 'ad been digged hin the rear of the premises."

"And what became of the murderer, may I ask?" said Casement, whose curiosity was excited by an evident reserve of meaning in the sergeant's manner.

"There! I knew it—I knew it!" shouted Bullock, giving his horses the rein again, and whipping them once more into an English gallop. "Hevery one that 'ears it hasks, what became of the murderer? Now to my mind it was never clear—though people say it's my prejudice because Mowbray was a Henglishman—but to my mind it was never clear that the man was guilty, and that's what makes the tragedy more hawful still."

"Then, by what title does Brand claim it?" interrupted his companion, who began to feel a vague and yet vivid interest in these disclosures.

We must talk that over some hother time," replied the officer, resuming once more his air of official mystery. "It's henough wen a man like Brand hinsures a place, we may nat'rally look out for mischief. The buildings 'e hinsures are bound to go within a week. But here are my lads, you see," he added, pulling rein abruptly at the spot where the carriage with the sisters and their reverend guide had diverged from the main road. "What luck, boys?" he cheerfully shouted to the men who emerged from a coppice, on seeing him approach. "'Ave you come on hanything that looks like business?"

The men addressed were to all appearance two country bumpkins, as verdant as ever furnished food to Peter Funk. If they had walked up Chatham street, every Israelite in that new Jerusalem, would have rushed forth to share in plucking the apparent rustics.

In a few concise words, which proved them men of a very different stamp, they summed up the result of their reconnoiterings and pointed to the wheel marks, still fresh in the swampy soil.

"Great care will be needed," said the most simple looking of the two in conclusion. "As I approached the farm-house through the brushwood in the rear, I heard or thought I heard the sound of a woman washing clothes. Crouching down and pressing forward very cautiously, I saw an old woman at work over a tub of linen. A branch no thicker than a knitting-needle broke, but it was enough to alarm her. She started for the back door, screaming at the top of her voice, and before she reached it, out rushed a villainous Negro with a pistol in each hand, followed by an old Irishman similarly armed, who appeared to be the woman's husband. To stir might have spoiled our scheme. I therefore lay quiet while they looked round the yard, and presently they went in again, cursing the old woman's folly."

The detective's plan was quickly formed: it was simple in detail, as are all really great strategic movements. The second-class tactician embarrasses his mind with a whole host of complications, the failure of any one of which must inevitably disorganize the whole. The man of genius in these matters moves straight to his point, and makes up by perfection of execution for the lack of minuter embellishments.

"Good boy!" said Bullock, patting the last speaker on the shoulder, "I couldn't 'ave done better myself. 'Ow far may it be, think you, from here to the farm-'ouse by this bridle road?"

"Three quarters of a mile, I should reckon," answered the patted man.

"Now, set your watch by mine," said Mr. Bullock, pulling out a clumsy chronometer, that might have been considered a beauty in Queen Anne's reign—"for heverything will depend on punctuality to the 'alf quarter of a second. 'Ow long would it take, think you to get from the place you hoccupied this morning wen the old 'ooman 'eard you, to the back door hout of which the nigger came?"

"Wall, I reckon it could be done at a pinch in half a minute sharp," answered the other, as he compared watches and set his own to match.

"Hall right, then," replied Bullock, with an approving smile. "Hit's nine o'clock precisely now. You can get there in 'alf an 'our, I suppose, making due hallowances for caution?"

"In shorter time if you need it," answered both the officers.

"Never be in a 'urry, my boys," continued the detective, gravely. "Be in that place at 'alf a minute before 'alf past nine, and henter the back door at 'alf past nine precisely, when you will 'ave the pleasure of seeing me a-hentering by the front."

Not another word was said. The men started forward with full confidence that whatever Bullock plotted he must surely succeed in accomplishing, and that faith was already nearly as good as victory.

Waiting about a quarter of an hour to give his men the needful start, the detective then resumed his seat, beckoning Casement to get in beside him. "It'll take me five minutes to talk to 'em and survey the place," he muttered. "I must be there in less than ten minutes at the farthest."

"'Ouse, ho!" he cried, as he drew up opposite the opening at the back of which the farm house stood. "'Ouse! 'ouse!" he repeated in still louder tones, as his appeal remained unanswered.

Nothing could be more decorous or innocent than his appearance as he handed the reins to Casement, and rolled himself down to the ground with an unwieldiness very foreign to his nature. He saw—though his companion did not—that he was watched by two pair of suspicious eyes from a slit in one of the parlor shutters.

Having walked half way towards the front door, he then turned back as if irresolute.

"Surely," he cried, as if addressing Casement, but quite loud enough to be overheard by those inside, "Surely this cannot be the 'ouse Mr. Brand was a speaking hof. A man so respectable as 'im could never want to put five thousand on such an 'ouse as this!"

"It's the only one to be seen," replied Casement, who had been given his cue. "If it be not the right one, perhaps they could direct you where to go."

"I don't like the looks of the place hany 'ow," retorted the timid Mr. Bullock, making as if he would retreat to the carriage. "It's a hugly place at best, and who knows but there may be mad dogs or Hirish people living hinside of it?"

Seeing him completely disheartened and about to turn back, our hero jumped down and began to remonstrate. Half-persuading, half-dragging the old man after him, he began to approach the door at which the negro and the old hag now made their appearance conjointly.

"Do you know where a Mr. Brand resides in this neighborhood?" asked Casement, in his most ingenuous tone. "He wishes to effect an insurance of five thousand dollars on some house he has here; and my uncle [pointing to Bullock] has come down to survey the premises."

"It's no sort of 'ouse," retorted Bullock, tearing himself away from the other's grasp and again beginning his retreat towards the wagon. "If that be the 'ouse, it haint worth five 'undred, much less five thousand, and much as I'd like to hoblige Mr. Brand, it can't be given."

"But it may be better than it looks," urged the nephew, again drawing his uncle backward towards the door. "Just step into the hall to say you've been inside it, and then you can swear with a clear conscience. You needn't go further than the hall, and you know what a man Brand is, if you disappoint him."

The ruse was completely successful. Brand had spoken of the insurance, and so this important part of the pretence was corroborated by the negro's evidence. The reluctance of the old gentleman to go inside, had also a per centra effect—for had he seemed eager to do so, the negro would have stopped him with a leaden messenger.

"Well, as Brand's such a friend of your's, Tom," said the old gentleman, somewhat softening, "I don't mind if I do strain a point to hoblige 'im; and if these good people in the door way 'ave no objection, I'll just step hinside, to satisfy my conscience."

"We're willin' massa," grinned the negro, drawing back a step into the hall, but still keeping his right hand inside his waistcoat, on what both Casement and the detective knew was the end of a pistol. "We have no 'jection massa, provided you come no furder dan de hall."

"Bad luck to the fut they should place inside of it, if I had my will!" exclaimed the old woman, bitterly. "Yis! yis! ye'se may mock me an' make fun o' me, for how I was frightened in the back yard this mornin'; but its another kind o' tale that ye'll have to tell some o' these fine days out here, afore it's long."

"Well, if I must, I must," said Mr. Bullock, with fear and reluctance admirably feigned. "God bless my soul," he continued, pulling out his watch, "it now honly wants twenty-nine minutes to ten, and we have need to be back in Wall-street before heleven."

In pulling out his watch, a large roll of bills had likewise been drawn from his fob-pocket, and fell, apparently unnoticed, at his feet.

"Walk in, Massa," said the negro, making as he spoke, a dart forward, to secure the booty unperceived. He dropped his hat over the money, and the old Irishman and his wife were eagerly watching him, when suddenly they found themselves pushed out of the house by Casement and the officer, who had now gained the inside of the hall.

Pitching headlong over the black, all three lay in confusion for a moment; but the surprise was brief. The two assistants flung themselves on the old man and woman, and had them handcuffed handsomely before they knew it. The negro gained his feet, and regardless of the revolver which Bullock had levelled at his head, took steady aim at O'Reilly, whom he intuitively looked upon as the chief of his assailants.

For once, the faithful weapon failed; mildew and the damp of that swampy atmosphere having destroyed the caps. Dashing the useless weapon into Bullock's face, the black made a rush for the house, resolving to overturn and set fire to the spirits. Had he gained the front parlor as much as a quarter of a minute before his pursuers, no living soul (the negro's self excepted) would ever have re-issued from the burning pile.

But Casement's turn to fire had come at last, and his right hand had not forgot its cunning. The miscreant fell, with a shattered ankle, just inside the door, and in another moment Mr. Bullock, with the aid of his subordinates—for the ruffian was most powerful—had disarmed him of his remaining weapon, and left him powerless on the ground, with his wrists tied behind his back.

Leaving the negro lying apparently helpless, in the hall, and the other officers outside to take care of the old couple—who still struggled fiercely with teeth and tongue—the detective and Casement rushed rapidly through the cobwebbed and fungus-covered rooms, and came to a full pause in front of the central door on the top-landing—that leading to the windowless chamber in which the sisters had been imprisoned.

"Within there, ho!" cried Casement, beating with his clenched fist against the iron-bolted panels. "Within there, Ned! Ned Morgan, I say, if you're a live man, answer me!"

Both listened for upwards of a minute, but nothing could be heard, save the shrieks and imprecations of the old couple ascending from the floor below.

Had the sisters been removed, then, to some other of Brand's numerous dens? Or had the negro, as threatened, already carpeted a way for them from the foot of the fatal stair-case to the mouth of that deep dismal well?

"It is I—it is Casement O'Reilly, come to help you," shouted the young man passionately, redoubling his clamors against the door. "Answer me Ned, for God's sake, if you are within!"

There was no response.

Meantime Mr. Bullock had been busy with a turnscrew and other carpenter's tools, which he drew from a side-pocket, unfastening the various bolts and padlocks with which the door was made fast.

"Break it open with a hatchet," cried O'Reilly, now nearly mad with anxiety and terror.

TO BE CONTINUED.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

THE DAY-DREAMERS.

The gifted of this earth, do they not seem,
Pursuing still an echo and a dream,
That to the dim intangible Ideal,
Offers a sacrifice the present Real?
That potent present which surrounding them,
Points to no visionary diadem,
But to the dark brown furrows of the soil,
Which yield the mellow harvest of their toil—
Shows them the rough plain road their feet must climb,
With strength and patience, to no height sublime;
But to the white-walled cities and the towers
That they shall rule with labor—wrested powers—
Until the vineyard and the olive trees
Shall bless the long calm evening of their ease.
Ah, haughty Genius spurns these gifts away—
He claims the sceptre of a prouder sway.
The boundless ether and the untraversed stars—
The planets white and silent in their cars;
And wide and wildest realm, man's restless soul,
This—this he burns to conquer and control—
To kindle all its depths with his own fire,
As sways the master's hand the shaken lyre.
Oh! rapt star-gazer, sometimes from thy throne
Must thou descend and find thyself alone.
The twilight deepens on the purple hills,
The upward curling mist the valley fills;
Among the trees the lights begin to shine,
And groups are dancing 'neath the trellised vine.
Here, where your pallid wreaths of flowers you bind,
Their careless laughter comes upon the wind.
Hard-handed Labor, pleased his task is done,
Goes whistling past thee in the setting sun.
Why pour your thoughts that breathe and words that burn
Unto the careless winds that ne'er return;
That, sweeping far upon their sounding wing,
Drown in their own hoarse chant the strains you sing.
Along the mournful margin of the seas
The golden fruit of your Hesperides?
You toss where, with the sea-sand and the wrack,
The climbing tide flingeth them scornful back.
Will they e'er blossom on the barren crags,
Where the lone Pine trees wave like tattered flags,
And all the night the white and hurrying feet
Of the quick waves upon the white shore beat?
And yet 'tis well that every age hath brought
These wild-eyed, pale enthusiasts of thought—
These Priests of Nature, isolated, lone,
Rapt worshippers forever by her throne.
Only for them the trampling crowd would press
On through the green earth's unmarked loveliness,
And see no glory in the silent sky,
Nor hear the waters glide in music by—
Like Esau, for his pottage, cast away
The empyrean fire that vivifies their clay.
Though on the dark cold bosom of the years
The seed is sown, still, still it re-appears:
Beautiful and ever various comes it back,
Springing in flowers along life's dusty track.
The wearied traveller of the after day
Blesses the bloom that cheers him on his way,
And flings him there, upon the moss to rest,
And lays their fragrant clusters on his breast,
Full often bending with a thirsting lip
Into the fountains they have found to dip.
Among the barren crags some wandering youth,
Dreaming the golden dreams of love and truth,
Shall find the fruit upon the dinted sand,
And lift it, rapt and wondering, in his hand,
To see its glorious beauty shining through
The clinging seaweed and the soiling dew,
The rust of time mpatient off he flings,
And brings it glittering to the court of kings,
Where it doth grow, a wonder and a name,
A new-born light, a late arisen fame.
Though fame should never come, the glowing soul
Hath found a voice, hath won its wished-for goal—
Hath given its hidden treasures lavish out,
Flinging their golden lustre all about—
Hath felt the kindling rapture few may know,
As forth its rushing thoughts in music flow—
Hath finished grandly its allotted task—
What more from Earth can e'er the spirit ask?

ENUL.

FRESH FICTION.

THREE PER CENT A MONTH, or the Perils of Fast Living. By CHARLES BURDETT; author of "Never too Late," &c. E. D. Long.

LORIMER LITTLEGOOD, Esq. A young gentleman who wished to see life, and saw it accordingly. By FRANK E. SMEDLEY, Esq. Author of "Frank Farleigh," "Lewis Arundel," &c. E. D. Long.

DAISY'S NECKLACE: and what came of it. (A Literary Episcode.) By T. B. ALDRICH. Derby & Jackson.

This book narrowly escaped being an excessively clever one. While the author is to be commended for eschewing those improbable intricacies and eccentricities of plot which most of our popular novelists apparently only live to create, he may probably be censured for going on the other extreme and not giving us plot enough. The leading interest settles on the young merchant Robert Arnold, whose reckless ascent into fashionable pre-eminence at Newport, Saratoga, and New-York, and descent into the hands of the note-shavers of Wall street—into "three per cent. a month," and much worse terms, and ultimately into forgery, to stave off the impending crash, forms the thread on which the narrative is wound. From the commercial basis of the story, the details—however necessary—become tedious, and are barely relieved by the other characters who are introduced as a moral set-off against the fast man's de withstanding the absence of a murder, a mistress, or a single mysterious disappearance, and that the old merchants are good, kind gentlemen, still the work has a deep interest, exhibits a minute knowledge of Wall street nature, and a thorough acquaintance with the commercial skeleton which, padded with fictitious paper, is supposed to give a tone to society, and is worshipped, toadied, and "eaten out of house and home," by those well-dressed people who, while they aid to make the bankrupt, privately condemn the extravagance they partake of, laugh at the vain fast man—who thinks he is society—for a fool, and with much arithmetical jocosity count up how long such a state of things can exist. These disinterested astrologers can predict the "smash up" almost to a day.

Mr. Burdett follows the course of Arnold with a power chiefly derived from the simplicity of the narrative. He tells the tale as an actual chapter of commercial life, and, in the main, does not strain after effect; he leaves that to his hero. In the case of some of the minor actors, where an effect is sought, the pathetic is sometimes carried to the brink of the nonsensical, and in a couple of instances mars otherwise deeply affecting and naturally wrought scenes. Considered in its entirety, the book is a good one, calculated to effect good, and ought to be widely read. If anything were wanting to add an interest to its pages, and ratify the identity of its recitals with real life, the startling cases of fast-living, forgery, and financial fraud exhibited in the operations charged on George Gomer, Huntington, T. P. Wight, and Andrew Finlay, to say nothing of Carpentier, Grelet, and the French railway robbery, would be more than sufficient to direct attention to Mr. Burdett's minute pages.

"Lorimer Littlegood" is one of those novels of London life which the unfledged scholars of Mr. Dickens' school so delight in quilting together. Not devoid of talent, humor, and a certain theatric aptitude for getting his characters into situations from which he does not satisfactorily extricate them, the author lacks the combinative and analytic faculty, as well as the consciousness of fidelity to nature, or that catching grace of diction with which Dickens makes a book character, when he lacks a real one. Nearly all of Mr. Smedley's "people" are entertaining to a certain point in their history, after which they are tiresome; chiefly, we imagine, from the giving out of the historian's energy, or capacity to follow them. The story, like the foregoing, is one of money-getting and money-spending, the turning point of which, as in the famous Branch and Matsell case, in our city, is the abstraction of an important page from a public register. By the non-appearance of this piece of paper, Lorimer Littlegood—a clever, good-natured fellow, who had been left a fortune by his father, to the spending of which he is specially devoted, in London—is suddenly cut short in his frolics. One Bennoch, the drunken husband of a washerwoman, is established as the rightful heir. He sets up a fine house and lives a life of wretchedness in luxury, infinitely worse than that which surrounded him in his obscure alley. Bennoch is incorrigible. Good luck does not raise his morals. He pines beneath the chains of decency, and giving a "blow out" to his companions of the gutter, falls dead-drunk into eternity.

The raising of the Bennochs was brought about by the craft and villainy of one Weasel, a lawyer, who hoped, "in virtue" of Bennoch's drunkenness and inability to manage his monetary affairs, to get the cash into his own hands. This is prevented by Mrs. Bennoch, who, on the death of her husband, makes another lawyer, one Falcon, guardian to young Bennoch. Falcon, almost another Weasel, has visions of fingering the cash, when lo! Bennoch junior comes to a sudden death by being flung from a carriage. Falcon, not to be disappointed, makes love to Miss Bennoch, who marries him, in the idea that he is going to restore the money to Littlegood, who had been excessively kind to her in her days of poverty. Mrs. Shaddles, an ill-used housekeeper to Weasel, finds out the stolen page from the register which deprived Littlegood of his patrimony, and in revenge denounces Weasel, who, however, has the old woman sent to jail, and thus we are left without a "happy denouement," a "virtue rewarded," or a "villainy exposed." Mr. Smedley evidently has not a spark of "poetic justice" about him.

If Mr. Smedley's labors evince a horror of "poetic justice," Mr. Aldrich's little volume displays a due and dutiful homage to the goddess who "goes it blind," to have justice done in all sorts of novel ways. "Daisy's Necklace" is very daintily gotten up, and the publisher has aided the author to the heart's content of both to literally make a book. We have a couple of blank pages between the chapters, some of which occupy but two pages, while the average is not more than ten or twelve. This arrangement looks neat and gives quite an airy and light character to the production, not altogether, however, in keeping with the story, the chief, and almost only, fault of which is that the two opening chapters are unmitigated twaddle. They are devoted to the sayings and doings of two children, the oldest being ten years. There is neither beauty nor sentiment about them, they are so extravagantly unnatural. There appears to be a morbid desire on the part of writers now-a-days to create philosophical hop-o'-my-thumbs. Little Dombey who died, because Dickens could not keep him alive, has been the sickly progenitor of a whole gallery of weazened minded babies; who have taken the place in English Literature so admirably occupied in German Romance, by the elfish dwarfs and filagree fiends of Teutonic imagination. Your little Dombeys, little Evas, little Katies, little Belles, little Mortimers, and such little devils generally, are tedious extravaganzas on the innocence, beauty, and simplicity of childhood.

There is much pretty writing in the chapters we allude to; and the germ of a sweet and abiding interest, which, with more reliance on nature and less on ambition, might have been a touching opening to the narrative.

For the tale itself, it is good, creating an anxiety on the part of the reader which he little expects to be demanded of him. The style is very crisp and refreshing, and we might cull some exquisite passags as evidence of the author's originality of expression, as revealing an appreciative eye for dramatic effect, a quaint sympathy with the humorous and the picturesque, and a poetic feeling of a distinct and suggestive character. There is unmistakeable power in Mr. Aldrich, but there is also, an affectation, and an eccentric attempt at ease, under the difficulty of hard straining for effect, which young authors are too prone to encourage in themselves. It were a pity to allow such things to pass unnoticed, especially in the case of a writer of such exceeding promise as Mr. Aldrich. He does not need stilts. The firmer he keeps his feet on the ground, the surer is his literary footing.

OUR SANCTUM.

Extract from a letter to an inquisitive acquaintance in Ireland.

We are at the corner of Ann and Nassau-streets. We rent two rooms. The outer one is dedicated to finance. The books are kept there, bills made out, paid and posted. The papers, as they come from the press-men, are brought in there, folded up, enveloped, directed, mailed. It is the Exchange of our establishment. Generally speaking, a noisy vestibule, to which every one has the freest access. The strangest sort of people look in there. Two days ago, one of the Canadian rebels, who had been transported to Van Diemen's Land, and who had just returned from that Island of Saints, paid us a visit. He was an old man, with big shoulders, a weather-blistered face, enormous hands, and blue white-spotted kerchief loosely rolled round his throat. He wanted a dollar. A wandering Jew—recently converted—and just landed from Ireland—made a call for a similar purpose. Dressed as a clergyman, he undertook to expound the doctrines of Rome. Abandoning the Old Jerusalem, he aspired to the New one, and purposed—in a course of popular lectures—to indicate the golden road thereto to others. Very greasy, saucily easy and fluent, his face was intensely red. His nose was just as striking. It was a prize carrot. The outline of his black cloth gaiter-boots was very broken and bulbous. He was troubled with corns. He troubled everybody else with his uncontrolable tongue. It was the tongue of a Chameleon. Ample as his ruby mouth was, it was inadequate to restrain it. He was not only fluent, but copious. Not only copious, but exhaustless. He had been a Repealer, but abandoned politics when O'Connell—his political Moses—died. His fathers had called him Abraham by name, but he desired to be esteemed a true son of St. Patrick in heart. Saying this, he slipped his hand towards the pocket of his trowsers. It was empty. He smiled. Becoming a bore, we abruptly cut him adrift. The other day, he turned up in Wisconsin. To give you a full and complete list of the various gentlemen who visit us—almost every one of them on business utterly disconnected with the paper, and interesting only to themselves—to give you such a list, would be altogether out of the question. The labor would take days. Some other time you shall have it. But, for the present, I have written quite enough about the profane part of our establishment. For the present, then, I shut the door upon it, mentioning hurriedly to you merely that an inventory of its furniture and other appurtenances, are of the most modest, though miscellaneous description. There's a fire-proof safe—every safe is fire-proof. There's a counter—something very like, in architectural design, what they have in our populous bar-rooms here—behind which a brisk boy, who clatters instead of talks—his name is Milestone—perpetually writes out addresses on brown paper envelopes, and with a sedate, genteel, mild face, and a tranquil manner, hands out single copies of the News to detached and desultory customers.

There's a dust-broom, also. There's a mahogany desk—such a one as you seldom meet in a banker's establishment—full of pens, ink, correspondence, and loose change—over which an excellent gentleman, of the most astute sagacity and imperturbable assiduity, presides—rather, I should say, bolt up against which he sits whilst the office is open. That is, from the cool of the morning, to the first dusk of the evening. He's as patient as a martyr tied to a stake. Heaven knows! he requires all the patience Heaven has sent him. Innumerable posters and woodcuts disturb the monotony of the walls, in an angle of which, enthroned on a spectral cane-bottomed stool, he is for the best part of the twenty-four hours laboriously detained. There are a couple of other young gentlemen connected with that bustling department outside. Active, intelligent, good-humored and frank, they flash merry anecdotes and repartees over the more cumbersome business of the office, and with the volatile magic of boyish spirits convert the stupidest labor into genial exercise, poetry, and pleasure. The door, excluding them from the sanctuary we inhabit, exhibits a wood-cut of Edwin Landseer's noble painting of the Monarch of the Glen. For it we are indebted to the liberal and splendid enterprise of Frank Leslie. It covers the upper panels of the door, and allegorically intimates to all visitors—Israelites, Canadians, Patagonians, and everybody else under the sun—that we are, and have been, for Buchanan. So much for the vestibule. Now for the Sanctum.

The Sanctum is a small room—very small room—sixteen feet by ten, and twelve in height. It is lighted by a solitary window. Furnished with a muslin shade or blind—a skimpy piece of drapery of a yellow complexion and plentifully spotted with fly-stains—it enables us, whenever we have a mind—to see all that is passing through the cramped streets—the pitiful lanes—of which the building we hail from constitutes the corner-stone. We see drays, buggies, express-wagons, carriages, dust-carts—each drawn by a pair of panting dogs and a remorseless lazy man—a native of the Netherlands invariably—and every other kind of vehicle on wheels, ceaselessly winding, with more or less agility, their tortuous way right under our solitary window. By-the-bye, we can never get this window dusted. An old black man—we call him Kansas—pretends to sweep out the place every morning, but I've never yet detected him doing any thing in that line. It seems to me he performs two functions only in life. He sneezes perpetually, and chews tobacco as unremittingly. Opposite us, we have the work-shop and sales-room of a distinguished Alderman of the city. Boot and shoe maker by trade, his time is equally divided between public and domestic interests. In a spacious cellar under him, there is a Lager-Bier restaurant. A German tailor, Schneider by name, plys his bright needle and crunching shears in the next shop to the worthy Alderman, whose patronymic is Hely. The proprietors of the Lager-Bier cellar are M. & C. T. Ducker. A suggestive and instructive name. For one has to duck into their subterranean saloon for a drink. A periodical depot comes next after Schneider's establishment. Cheap knowledge of every description is to be had there. On the second floor of the same house, a Lithographer, named Faust, turns stone into bread. St. Kevin had another knack. Meeting a stingy old woman near Glendalough, one day, the Saint asked her for a bit of one of the loaves she was carrying. She said she hadn't a bit to give. "The divil take the bit," she said. Now this was the devil's own lie, for the old woman had three quartern loaves under her cloak. So, to punish her, St. Kevin turned her bread on the spot into quartz. Over Alderman Hely is one Townsend, a prodigious printer. His sign-board runs several feet across the face of the building. The name, in gilt letters, protrudes from a background of brick-dust. At the corner diagonally opposite us, a devout member of the Synagogue dispenses warm clothing gratuitously to the needy and the seedy of the neighborhood all round. A canvas awning, winter and summer, stretching over the side-walk, partially obscures the soft goods and splendors of this benevolent bazaar. Next door to which we have the office of the Daily News—the unswerving champion of the unterrified Democracy. Every hour of the day, groups of anxious Democrats darken its portals—like Lord Brougham's Sybil at the door of the House of Lords—and by their mysterious winks and nods intimate to all the world, as it pours through Nassau street, that within those portals the secrets of the American future are written upon something less fugitive than Cumæan leaves. Strong, the publisher, laughs and grows fat over his Yankee Notions, and other comic publications, next door to the Daily News. Then follows Rogers' mammoth Tailoring Emporium, within the golden walls of which breeches for the whole of Scotland are piled up. Of these, however, and of Ackerman's banners—though they hang on the outer wall—we can only catch a glimpse. So, too, with the Mirror office, and O'Connor & Collender—the famous billiard-table and patent combination cushion manufacturers—whose modest little white sign-board is a mere speck of snow in the dusky vista of Ann street. That's enough about the outside. Now for the inside of the Sanctum.

Of this holy seclusion I have given you the dimensions. The furniture and decorations remain to be spoken of. I must first tell you, however, that the walls which enclose us, are of the thinnest boards (mere shavings, in point of fact, as Micawber would say) over which has been pasted the most melancholy description of paper representing showers of blue milk. Three port-holes in these wooden walls admit the smoke and noise of the contiguous tenants of the building. Mrs. Partington, if she only knew them, would have called them "contagious." The noise they make is fearful. I allude especially to those who occupy the apartment next our's on the Nassau street side of this bewildering Babel. Who they are, or what they are, or whence they came from, I have not been as yet able to discover. I have never seen them. But Heavens! I have heard them. From morning till night, the shrieks which proceed from that quarter would have been enough to drive Job mad from his dung-hill. From morning till night, the most agonizing concussion of hammers goes on, mingled with the clanking of chains, the rattling of sheet-iron, the stunning reverberation of some huge metal wheel, which is ever and ever going round and round, creaking, groaning and grunting, like a thousand of hogs on board a Waterford and Bristol steamer. And then we have uproarious clashing of cymbals, and beating of terrible triangles. What they are, it is impossible to conjecture. Sometimes I have fancied they must be a company of colossal comedians, rehearsing the Castle Spectre, or some thundering tragedy founded on the fable of the Cyclops. I would not believe they were mortals, were it not that, occasionally, I catch a rumbling articulation of names, which strikes me as if some one were reading out the Post-office directory from the first to the last letter of the alphabet. And then, again, I find that about dinner-hour, there is a partial cessation of the metallic uproar, though even then an excrutiating buzz continues, as if a swarm of wasps with brazen lungs had their nest in there. Every day, with an aching ear and a breaking heart I pray for the hastening of that hour, and in this prayer my brother editors fervently unite. The port-holes I have mentioned, are for the purpose of facilitating through funnels the escape of the smoke which rises from our stove. Of course, we can only use one of them at a time. But we can pleasantly shift our stove from one side to another as we please. It strikes me it would be a good plan to smoke our Cyclopean neighbors out, for one of the port-holes happily opens into their resounding cavern. 'Twould be a fair return for the agonies they have caused us, and the damage they have done. Damage—I repeat the word emphatically—for our writing-desks have been so incessantly shaken with their hammering, grinding, and sawing, that now they can hardly stand upon their legs, whilst the wooden walls have been splintered to the most woeful and freezing extent. The gaps and crevices, ravines and chasms running all through them from the ceiling to the carpetting, are enough (the very sight of them) to shiver the warmest spirit to death. Having mentioned writing-desks, I am happy to inform you we possess three. There are three of us here—one for each desk. Monaghan, Dublin, and Waterford—like the leaves of the shamrock—unite in one stem in this beseiged corner. The division of labor between us is delightfully equable. Monaghan has the births—Dublin the marriages—Waterford the deaths. Those three events, you know, constitue the history of the world, and we turn out a small edition of that history once a week. Over Monaghan's desk—right in front of him—hangs a vast map of the United States. Three pioneers, fully accoutred, could easily conceal themselves under it, lying at full length. Over Dublin's desk, the calm and noble face of Thomas Addis Emmet—as Aubrey, the painter, saw it in Paris, in 1803—looks out benignly. Over Dublin's left shoulder, the plain emotionless features of General Walker admonish the little brotherhood of the Sanctum to be decorous, silent, industrious and resolute. I recollect that Chateaubriand in his Memoirs says that America achieved her liberty in silence. Walker instructs, governs, wins his victories after the same grand fashion. A profusion of long scraps and cuttings from foreign and other newspapers are pinned against the wall right under General Walker At first sight, a visitor might take Dublin for a tailor. Those long shreds of paper are suggestive of the patterns and measures used by the profession, of which a roast goose couchant on a horse-shoe forms the ancient crest. A capacious basket of open work yawns on the right of Dublin, into which, as literary editor, he showers the faded flowers stolen by intruders into the groves and gardens of the Pierides. It is a fatal basket. Not less so than that which received the heads of the the decayed Nobility in the days of the Jacobins. Falling from a black moulding, a beautiful perfect map of South America, on a large scale, confronts and delights the eye of Waterford. Delights him, for it ever recalls his days in Pernambuco—the first he breathed in freedom since the gates of Kilmainham shut with a clank upon him. On one side—the left side facing Waterford—Robert Emmet stands in the dock of Newgate with folded arms, bent brow and defiant eye. It is the engraving which Haverty, of Fulton street, has given us in his valuable edition of the life of the noble young martyr, and that of his brother, whose monument, with the solid simplicity of his character, overlooks the graves of St. Paul's in Broadway, and the tumultuous life that rushes through that unrivalled thoroughfare. A breathing likeness of James Buchanan is pinned to the pasteboard partition immediately below the engraving by Kimberly, representing the signing of the Declaration of Independence. A sprawling daub, professing to be a Political Map of the United States, occupies two square feet of the wall next to the book-shelves, along which are discordantly gathered the choicest selections, with and without binding, of ancient and modern geography, rhetoric, theology, romance and social philosophy; together with a pair of wrinkled boots (on the lower shelf), Congressional Reports of the Troubles in Kansas, a cotton umbrella with two broken ribs, and a bundle of Parliamentary Blue-books on Prison Discipline and Australian Gold-fields. A broad table, covered three inches deep with American exchanges, completes the furniture and wealth of our establishment. The Irish exchanges occupy an enormous arm-chair on the right of Monahan. A light summer coat of Dublin's gracefully dangles from a nail in the door-frame. Mentioning which, I have divulged to you all the secrets of our Sanctum.

ON BEARDS.

The Knickerbocker for the present month contains a capital chapter on Beards and their political importance past and present. In these days of palatial shampoo shops, of esthetic tongs and exquisitely granulated hair-combs, when dead-heads are dyed into new life, and bald-heads, red-heads, block-heads and dunderheads are rubbed, scrubbed, twizzled and frizzled into "glossy jet," warranted to wash or the "money returned"—when old gray-headed Benedicks have recourse to "Batchelor's hair-dye," and fortunes are spent in advertising unguents, restoratives, and other liquid and greasy promoters of hair "in every style," it is not without a twinge that we contrast the importance of the hair and beard in olden times with the barbarously mercantile position into which the progress of civilization has dragged those heretofore suggestive appendages.

Formerly the profusion, or want, of hair was the distinctive badge of heroes, like the long-haired Spartans, the flowing-bearded Romans who held out against Brennus and "his long-haired and long-moustachoed" Gauls, the long-locked Britons who met Cæsar, and who, following the fashion of the beardless Romans, bared their chins, and were in turn whipped into the mountains of Wales by the bearded Saxons. The nobility of the Franks lay in their lengthy curls, and "scant hair met scant courtesy," until the closely-cropped Cromwellians put their trust in God, kept their powder dry, and to all intents and purposes lathered the profusely-curled and daintily-bearded Cavaliers of Charles at Marston Moor and Naseby. Hair to a great extent has lost its political significances, at least in this country. In Europe, the Republicans cultivate the beard. Here every second man one meets is only some hair-dresser's advertisement.

In the Knickerbocker's notes the author does not forget the hair-history of Ireland. We make the following extracts:

"In the sister kingdom (Cinderella?) of Ireland, the ultra-Irish always have been and are still somewhat distinguished from the English by the cut of their hair.

"Here is an extract from an Act passed in the reign of Henry VI., (1422, 1461:)

"'Wherefore it is ordained and agreed that no manner of man that will be taken for an Englishman shall have no beard above his mouth, that is to say that he have no hairs upon his upper lip, so that the said lip be once, at least, shaven every fortnight, or of equal growth with the nether lip; and if any man be found amongst the English contrary hereunto, that then it shall be lawful to every man to take them and their goods as Irish enemies, and to ransom them as Irish enemies.'

"An Act of Edward IV. ordains that 'the Irishmen dwelling in the counties of Dublin, Myeth, Wrial and Kildare, shall go apparelled like Englishmen, and wear beards after the English fashion, swear allegiance and take English surnames.'

"In the reign of Henry VIII. an Act was passed ordaining, 'that no person or persons, the King's subjects within this land, (Ireland,) being, or hereafter to be, from and after the first day of May, which shall be in the year of our Lord God 1539, shall be shorn or shaven above the ears, or use the wearing of haire upon their heads like unto long locks called glibbes, or have or use any haire growing on their upper lippes, called or named a crommeal.'

"The poet Spenser is also very bitter against these glibbes in his pamphlet about Ireland; but alas for poor human nature, those three thousand and twenty-eight acres of plundered Irish land which he received sadly mystified his mental vision, and made those whose paternal acres he so much enjoyed seem black as midnight to his eyes. He says:

"'They have another custom from the Scythians, that is, the wearing of mantles and long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes and monstrously disguising them, which are both very bad and hurtful.'

"And elsewhere:

"'But for the Irish glibbes, they are as fit masks as a mantle is for a thief; for whensoever he hath run himself into that peril of law that he will not be known, he either cutteth off his glibb quite, by which he becometh nothing like himself, or pulleth it so low down over his eyes that it is very hard to discern his thievish countenance.'

"In the reign of James I., May 20, 1615, Lord Deputy Chichester instructed the Lord President and Council of Munster 'to expel and cut off all glibbes.'

"'For some years this statute was rigorously enforced, but Charles I., in the tenth year of his reign, caused an act to be passed at Dublin repealing this and other statutes, and allowing the Irish to wear mustaches and glibbes as well as their national dress.'

"The distinction between the cuilleen and the glibbes may have been that the former were ear-locks, and the latter a mass of hair covering the forehead. In fact, I have a vague recollection of having heard some such explanation given of the cuilleen, and after reading and hearing about them often noticed precisely the same style of wearing of the hair among the newly-arrived Irish on our wharves and in our streets; that is, cutting it very short behind and on the crown, but leaving long ear-locks, with sometimes a sort of curling fringe along the top of the forehead.

"The Orangemen have for many years designated their opponents of the native Irish party from this time-honored custom, 'Croppies,' and one of their means of 'getting up a faction fight' was and is to march in procession behind music, playing 'Croppies lie down,' 'The Battle of the Boyne,' and other such tunes, until the opposite party can endure it no longer. It is indeed but some three or four years since, that some Orangemen got up a procession here in New-York, and played these very tunes along the streets, but happily without the result they wished for."

In Hardiman's History of Galway, under date 1522, we find a bye-law of the corporation thus: "That no man be made fre unless he can speke the English tonge and shave his upper lippe weekly, sub pœna 20s."

In 1536 Henry VIII. sent over to Galway certain instructions—"Gyvyn at our manor of Greenwych, the 28th day of April, in the 28th year of our reign"—one of which runs thus:

"Item, that everie inhabitant, as well within the said towne, as the suburbs of the same, do shave theire over lipps, called crompeaulis, and suffer the haire of there hedds to growe, till it cover their eares, and that every of them weare English capps."

The writer in the Knickerbocker, whose historical research is commendable, is erroneous in his allusions to the Coolans or Glibbs, They were not "ear-locks." The Irish took as much pride in their mantling locks as the Spartans, and Gauls, and Danes, and most of the ancient warlike nations. It is told of a Danish warrior, that being about to be executed, he begged "That his hair might not be touched by a slave, or stained with his blood." In Walker's Historical Essay on the Dress and Customs of the Ancient and Modern Irish," we have the following, which (with what we have already given) will add to the preceding writer's notes on the subject:

"Amongst the early Irish, he says the Beard was cherished with as much solicitude as formerly amongst the Orientals. Nor did they restrain the growth of the hair on the head, but throwing it back from the forehead, allowed it to flow about the neck, calling those suspended locks Colums or Glibbs, and taking an honest pride in them. On the capital of a pillar, found amongst the ruins of Glendalough, in the county of Wicklow, is exhibited a youthful head with the genuine Irish Glibb. The statute of Henry the Eighth, which obliged the Irish to cut off their Coluns, gave occasion to a song, of which the air is now universally admired."

The researches of Dr. Mac Dermott, as shown in his profuse and interesting Commentaries on the "Annals of the Four Masters," also prove that the Coolun was not an "ear-lock." In his notes on the Statute of Kilkenny, which in A. D. 1367, inaugurated the penal laws, and the penalty of high treason against every act or mode of expression by which the Irish might be distinguished from the English of the Pale, he follows up with notices of the laws enacted under the Henrys and Edwards, which as before cited, ordered the Irish "to cut off their Glibbs or flowing locks, and shave their upper lips at least once in a fortnight—otherwise to be punished as Irish enemies." This the Irish resisted. "They were extremely partial," continues MacDermott, "to wearing long flowing hair and beards on their upper lips, and notwithstanding these penal enactments, the Irish continued for centuries to use only their own language, manners and customs."—(Annals of Four Masters. 4to. Dublin, pp. 143, 550.)

Ware comes to the conclusion that so far from the Irish succumbing to the Statute of Kilkenny, it was quite the contrary, and that the old English settlers of the Marches adopted the Coolun. He says, (chapter 9,) "it appears by an act made in a parliament held at Trim, in 1446, by which as a mark of distinction between the English and Irish, the wearing of the beard on the upper lip alone, was prohibited, under a heavy penalty."

That the Irish—as Dr. Mac Dermott says—continued for centuries in the exercise of these ancient customs, is proved by many authorities. Shane O'Neill, the famous Ulster Chief—whose prowess excited the English hate to such an extent that by "war or diplomacy," they were determined to reduce him—visited the Court of Elizabeth in the middle of the 16th century. The chiefs > ——"gallant train, in London town appears

> With curling hair and saffron vest, with battle-axe and spears,
> And worthy lords and burghers stare to see the 'rascaille kerne.'"

And no wonder that they should stare. He flung all their statutes to the air, and appeared as a prince visiting a princess. Leland, the historian, says—"He appeared in London, attended by a guard of Gallowglasses, arrayed in the richest habiliments of their country—armed with the battle-axe—their heads bare—their hair flowing on their shoulders," &c. As another evidence of both the nature of the Coolun, and the tenacity with which the Irish held to it, we will to this mere string of facts—add another from O'Halloran, who writes—"Until about the beginning of the eighteenth century, the Irish wore the Glibb, or long flowing hair, and also the Crombeal, or beard on the upper lip."

There is a memorable latter-day illustration of the Irish-ness of the custom—thus: In one of the annual debates on the "Maynooth question," Colonel Sibthorpe as usual—he had been forty years in Parliament and never lost such an opportunity—with a brainless fury denounced the Irish, their clergy and their customs. A storm of cheers and laughter broke out as he took his seat. O'Connell immediately rose—"The gallant Colonel," said he, "should be the last man to speak disparagingly of the Irish people, for in doing so he maligns his own blood and kindred." Here there were vehement cries of "Hear, hear," wild laughter, and indiscriminate uproar. Colonel Sibthorpe's voice was the loudest of all. Tauntingly and defiantly he repelled the imputation of O'Connell. "He denies," said O'Connell," the gallant Colonel, the honorable member for Lincoln, denies that he is an Irishman." ("Hear, hear," shrieked the Colonel.") "I'll convict him of being one by act of Parliament." "Hear, hear," again cried the Colonel derisively and defiantly, and in the challenge he uttered three-fourths of the hostile House concurred.

O'Connell deliberately rose from his seat below the "gangway," walked to the library, deliberately took down one of the huge statute-books, and with it under his arm, as deliberately returned to his place. Solemnly adjusting his spectacles, coughing into his yellow handkerchief, scrupulously settling his wig, twitching it on this side and on that, he read out one of the statutes prohibiting the growth of hair on the "over-lip," under the penalty of being considered a mere Irishman, and being dealt with accordingly as such. The house shook with thunders of delight. O'Connell had completely triumphed.

To cover his retreat, Colonel Sibthorpe crossed the house, took the statute book from O'Connell, and intimating pantomimically that the "great demagogue" was wrong, and that he would prove him so, ralapsed into the library and oblivion. Any one acquainted with the celebrities of the House of Commons, as Grant, in his "Random Recollections," has given them to the world, need not be reminded that the point and force of O'Connell's quotation of this penal prohibition of the beard, lay in the fact of Colonel Sibthorpe's face being impenetrably covered with the rudest whiskers and moustache—so much so, that, according to Grant, no one would have known he had a mouth to speak.

These presents, greeting to the Knickerbocker's well-read correspondent.

MAGAZINES FOR NOVEMBER.

HARPER.—Mr. J. S. C. Abbott's penchant for French History finds vent this month in a vivid description of the St. Bartholomew massacre, what led to it, and what followed it. He gives us, in a picturesque way, the leading facts of French history, from the incursions of Ferdinand of Arragon into Navarre, then under Catherine de Foix, to the establishment of her great grandson, the famous Henry IV., (of Navarre), upon the throne of France. The period is one of intense interest, and brings us in contact with the fiend Catherine de Medicis, with Claude, Francis, and Henry, the three unfortunate Dukes de Guise, well named the Butchers, with the ruthless Charles IX., the weak Henry III., the heartless Marguerite de Valois, and a crowd of others, who under the intolerant inspiration of the period became famous, and seared their names on history with fire and sword, the poison-cup and the dagger. Mr. Abbott's statement that religious toleration is only to be met with in the United States, is somewhat reckless, to say the least, at a time when a professedly bigoted and intolerant party were strong enough to set up a candidate for the Presidency. "Up and down among the Andes," is a pleasant paper, in which the Rip Van Winkle-ism of Spanish-American life is sententiously revised. "Something about the Horse," by T. B. Thorpe, is a happy combination of extensive research and keen observation. The attraction of the subject is enhanced by the judicious and appropriate use of ancient history in its notes on horse-flesh. Mr. Thorpe must be a "fast nag," himself, for from the time he takes the horse from its post-diluvian stable in Mesopotamia, until he pulls up at Snedikers, on the Jamaica road, Long Island, he "gets along" at a pace to rival any "two-forty" on the turf. "Run for the Doctor, Joe!" is a much more suggestive paper than its comical opening promises. "Passages of Eastern Travel" continues to be very readable, and is accompanied by good illustrations, one of which, the "View from Philœ," is especially note-worthy. "Little Dorrit," some short tales, and the usual monthly record, (literary and historiaal), make up the number.

Mrs. Stephens' New Monthly is fully established as a worthy accession to our periodical literature. Each number has necessarily stamped the management as one which not only wielded great pen ability, but exhibited what is quite as necessary in such an undertaking—care, judgment, and a pains-taking desire to give a unity of interest with a variety of topics. The present issue is the best yet. Two chapters of Mrs. Stephen's novel, "Lost Jewel's," lead off with well-sustained vigor of style incident; after which we have two excellent illustrations by Strother, "Characteristic Sketches South of the Potomac." They are indeed truly characteristic, and respectively convey a pleasant life-history. They are touching and happy commentaries on the "Southern Institution." Under the head of "Firesides of the Revolution," Mrs. E. F. Ellet contributes three sketches of families of South Carolina during the period indicated. The reminiscences are deeply imbued with the chivalrous excitement of the period—full of life and startling adventure, and are written with clearness, concentration, and a vivacity congenial to the subject. The capital Illustration entitled "The Tiff," will come home to numbers of our young friends "of both sexes." Talking of illustrations, those of Delaroche are the least noteworthy in the number. Mr. Bunce continues his "Harold," and we are presented with Mrs. Stephens' vivid poem "The Convict Ship," which Miss Esmonde lately read with so much applause at the Tabernacle, and of which we have made previous notice. These, with "Things we talk about," are the leading features, and are as much as we could conscientiously read in one number. (E. Stephens.)

The Knickerbocker is unusually pleasant, being cram-full with short racy papers, chief among which are Mr. Leland's "Power of Argument on a Dutch Baker," Mace Sloper's "Observations," Paul Sragvack "Musings of a City Railroad Conductor," and the Editor's Table. "A Voice from California" is an enthusiastic pean in favor of the Freedom of the Press, which is of course correct in principle, and the eloquence of which is only marred by the author's descent to a defence of the Vigilance Committee, which inaugurated a reign of error in San Francisco. The opening paper of the number, "Souvenirs of Saunterings," devoted to clever historical resume of the political power and partisanship, exhibited in the shape of the beard and the cut of the hair we elsewhere notice more at length. (S. Hueston.)

The United States Magazine opens with a paper reviewing Inland Steam Navigation, from the earliest attempts of Fitch, Rumsey, Fulton, &c., to the moving palaces which glide over the Hudson at present. The Arts in America, biographical notices of Horace Greeley, James G. Bennett, and Col. Fremont, with a continuation of the papers on the Public Departments at Washington, and some slighter sketches, make a bright number. Nearly all the articles are well illustrated. (J. M. Emerson.)

Dr. James N. McElligott's "American Debater," published by Ivison & Phinney, is a most useful hand-book, being a perspicuous exposition of the principle and practice of Public Debate; showing the qualifications necessary to form a successful orator and indicating the means of acquiring them, with the rules to be observed in deliberative bodies, numerous questions for debate, the forms of a constitution for literary societies, and an outline of debates illustrating the points recommended by the author.

Godey's Lady's Book is radiant with patterns and designs, all of which, as far as we can judge, are admirable. There is a very handsome pattern for a slipper, printed in colors, which is worth the price of the number. We are sorry to see Mr. Cranch, the composer, making such a fool of himself as is evidenced by the words of the song entitled "The Squatters. (E. D. Long.)

Literary and Artistic News.

The origin of the device of the eagle on national and royal banners may be traced to very early times. It was the ensign of the ancient kings of Persia and Babylon. The Romans adopted many other figures on their camp standards; but Marius, A. C. 102, made the eagle alone the ensign of the legions, and confined the other figures to the cohorts. From the Romans, the French under the empire, adopted the eagle. The emperors of the Western Roman Empire, used a black eagle—those of the East, a golden one. The sign of the golden egale, met with in taverns, is in allusion to the Emperor of the East. Since the time of the Romans, almost every state that has assumed the designation of an empire, has taken the eagle for its ensign. Austria, Prussia, Russia, Poland, and France, all took the eagle. The two-headed eagle signifies a double empire. The emperors of Austria, who claim to be considered the successors of the Cæsars of Rome, use the double-headed eagle, which is the eagle of the Eastern Emperors with that of the Western, typifying the "Holy Roman Empire," of which the Emperors of Germany (now merged in the house of Austria) considered themselves as the representatives. Charlemagne was the first to use it—for when he became master of the whole of the German empire, he added the second head to the eagle, D. D. 802, to denote that the empires of Rome and Germany were united in him. As it is among birds the king, and being the emblem of a noble nature from its strength and innate power, the eagle has been universally preferred as the continental emblem of sovereignty. Of the different eagles of heraldry, the black eagle is considered the most noble, especially when blazoned on a golden shield.—Notes and Queries.

Two very interesting MSS., written by the late Chevailer O'Gorman, A.D. 1800, were presented to the Ossianic Society of Dublin for publication, by Dr. Joli, Rathmines, and the Secretary was directed to convey the thanks of the society to Dr. Joli, for his kindness in giving them those MSS. for publication. The first volume is entitled "A Memorial on the Dal Cassian Race, and on the Divisions of Thomond at the Invasion of the English, A.D. 1172; to which is annexed a short Essay on the Fenii, or Standing Militia of Ireland.' The volume contains a list of the several families of the Macnamaras, who were named from the houses or lands of inheritance they severally enjoyed; also a list of the several castles in the baronies of Bunrath and Tulla, with the names of the persons who erected them. The next volume is entitled "Remarks on some of the Laws and Customs of the Scots or Antient Irish," and both will form one of the early publications of the society.

The trade in second-hand woodcuts, says the London Leader, is considerable, the use made of them being abominable. It is not two years since a great manufacturer of cheap publications was accustomed to take a monthly expedition to Paris, where he bought the old blocks at the offices of illustrated periodicals, and returning employed his clerks to "write up to them," which was done with much educational flourish and infinite deception. Having been used in England, the wood engravings were next exported to America, and we have lately encountered them in this this third form, illustrating a third class of literature. The same building has figured as a Rock Temple in India, the interior of a Tomb in Egypt, and to the Napoleon Shrine in Paris. We have met with the same figure as Zaidee, as the heroine of a Spanish story, and as the daughter of Herodias; and we should not be surprised to behold its fourth appearance as a Princess of Oude.

One of the drollest occurrences in the annals of gallantry is related of Gibbon the historian, who was short in stature and very fat. One day being alone with the beautiful Madame Crouzas, he dropped on his knees before her and made a declaration of his love in the most passionate terms. The astonished lady rejected his suit, and requested him to rise. The abashed historian remained on his knees. "Rise, Mr. Gibbon, I beseech you, rise!" Mr. Gibbon still held his posture. "Mr. Gibbon, will you have the goodness to get up?" "Alas! madam," faltered the unlucky lover, "I cannot." He was too fat to regain his feet without assistance. Madame de Crouzas rang the bell, and said to her servant, "Lift up Mr. Gibbon."

A letter from Leipsic, of the 26th, states that the musicians of the most distinguished dilettanti of Germany have just formed, under the aupices of Duke Ernest of Saxe-Cobourg Gotha, a sosiety having for its object to render popular the compositions of Handel. The society intend to publish a carefully-revised edition of the works of the immortal composer, which will be sold at a price to bring it within the reach of all those who cultivate the science. It will appear on the 14th of August, 1859, which will be the 100th anniversary of the death of Handel.

Ex-Judge Haliburton, author of Sam Slick, the Clock Pedler, has taken a final farewell of Nova Scotia as a place of residence. Clifton, his beautiful seat at Windsor, was sold a few weeks since, and the old Judge has taken his passage for Liverpool, to make his home in Great Britain for the remainder of his days.

An old satirist thus lampoons the ladies of his day:

"What is the reason—can you guess—
Why men are poor, and women thinner?
So much do they for dinner dress,
That nothing's left to dress for dinner."

An exhibition will be opened in the National Gallery, Edinburgh, about the middle of December, by the Art Manufacture Association—a society just established in Scotland, under the presidency of the Duke of Hamilton, for the purpose of encouraging the application of arts to objects of utility and ornament.

Herr Ahorn, the sculptor, who executed the celebrated lion modelled by Thorwalsden, and carved out of solid rock, at Lucerne, died recently at Constance. He was one of the most eminent artists of the day.

Humboldt celebrated the eighty-ninth anniversary of his birth on the 14th ult.

MILITARY NEWS.

THE FULTON GUARD.

This Company, composed of a number of respectable young men, presenting a favorable type of our volunteer citizen soldiery, is rapidly completing its arrangements for a contemplated parade on the 10th of November inst. On that day, they intend to take up their line of march for Port Richmond, Staten Island, expecting to muster some sixty-two muskets, under command of Captain W. G. Cowles, there to engage in friendly rivalry for a number of beautiful prizes, which have been presented to the Company by their friends. The other officers, as far as we have learned their names, are: James Lynch, orderly sergeant; John Brosnan, treasurer; and Thomas McLorley, secretary.

We wish them a pleasant time. With respects of

JOHN O'ROURKE.

TO THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, Esq.

A terrible accident occurred in London previous to the sailing of the Canadian, on the 22d ult., for Quebec. The Rev. Mr. Sturgeon, a Baptist preacher, was speaking in Concert Hall, Surrey Gardens, when there was raised the cry of fire, and the audience rushing towards the doors, several persons were trampled to death.

At the great Leinster fair, held at Navan, Mr. Finnegan, of Allinstown, sold a lot of heifers at £11 5s each, and a lot of springers at £14 10s. Mr. Michael Maginniss, of Navan, sold a lot of springers at £12 10s, and a lot of milch cows at £13 10s. Mr. Martin, of Church, got £11 10s for a lot of bullocks, 18 in number. Mr. Richard Caffrey at Navan, sold a lot of bullocks at £10 each, and a lot of weanlings at £4. Mr. John Weild, of Dundalk bought a large lot of bollocks, for exportation, at £13 5s each. Garrett Cullen, Esq., Tara Hall, got twenty guineas each for a lot of springers. Mr. Harvey, of Tribley, sold a lot of fat heifers at a high figure. John Bolton, Esq., Cullon House, sold two lots of bullocks, the first at £13, and the second at £12 a head. James Bradley, Esq., Moortown House, sold a large lot of springers to a Newry gentleman at from £16 to £19 a head, and Mr. Richard Sullivan a lot of bullocks at £13 10s. There was a large number of weanling calves, which brought from £5 to £6 a piece, according to quality; and a good show of yearlings, which averaged £7 each, at which price Francis Elliott, Esq., of Slane, sold his lot. The sheep fair was one of the largest ever held in Leinster, and the class offered for sale better than has been seen in Navan for many years.

Among the sufferers of a recent collision on the Manchester Railway was Mr. Thomas Henry, Beragh, county Tyrone. Mr. Henry received very severe injuries; the patella of the right knee fractured, severe contusion of the left leg, a wound on his head, and severe bruises on his chest and right side.

BIRTH.

In San Francisco, California, the wife of George W. Guthrie, Esq., of a son.

CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

In consequence of the removal of the Association to their New Rooms, 889 BROADWAY, corner Thirteenth-street, the Reading-Rooms will be closed until Monday, 10th instant.

nov8 1t S. S. HAUGHY, LIBRARIAN.

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.

SMITH, No. 81 PARK ROW,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

☞ Post Office.—Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. steamer Atlantic, will close at this office on Saturday, the 8th day of November, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Post Office Notice—The Mails for California, &c., per U. S. steamer Illinois will close at this office on Wednesday, the 5th day of November, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any orders left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

☞ Removal.—DR. J. M. CARNOCHAN, has removed his office to No. 45 Lafayette Place, near Astor Place. oct18 4t

American News.

The land warrants for 160 acres of land each, for military service rendered at Baltimore in 1814, have just been issued by the Department to Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg and Emanual C. Reigart, Esq., of Lancaster, Pa. These gentlemen both served with Mr. Buchanan, in Capt. Shippen's Company of Volunteers, who marched to the defence of Baltimore in 1814, all of whom continued in the army until honorably discharged by the Government. Mr. Buchanan's name was the first enrolled in the company, and he is also entitled to a land warrant, but declines applying.

The venerable Amos Kendall, who has been claimed by the opposition as hostile to James Buchanan, published a letter in the Pennsylvanian, in which he pronounces that assertion a "preposterous fabrication." He says: "Without judging the motives of others, I have to say for myself, that I could not support Colonel Fremont without the guilt of treason upon my conscience. In my estimation, his election upon the Platform of his supporters would be a long stride towards the destructiou of our Government."

The gold mines near this city, says the Augusta Chronicle, in South Carolina, are becoming, we are pleased to learn, a most important interest, and some of them are being worked with much more energy and capital than in former years. The mines in the lower part of Abbeville district, South Carolina, worked by a New York Company known as the "Dorn Mining Company," are said to be now yielding very rich ore, from veins worked at a greater depth than formerly attained in that region. They are drained by a powerful pumping apparatus, worked by steam.

It appears that the Fremonters have letter envelopes with a portrait of their candidate engraved upon them. Some of the brethren seem to think it unnecessary to place postage stamps on such envelopes, but, singularly enough, Uncle Sam's deputies refuse to recognize Col. Fremont's phiz as good for three cents.

Late accounts say that at St. Louis the river is reported nearly at a stand, with five feet to Cairo. No change in freight rates to New-Orleans, and no immediate prospect of a rise in the upper rivers. Weather warm, and business dull on the levee.

A New Orleans paper publishes a letter from General Gadsden, which intimates that the new American Minister will not find the Government to which he is accredited in existence, and states that Alvarez and Vidaurri were both advancing on the capitol, in order to overthrow President Comonfort.

Telegraphic communication between the Vineyard and Nantucket will be opened in a day or two. The cable and wires are already extended to Chappaquiddick. The wire is not run on poles, as usual, but is buried about a foot deep in the earth.

In a case of sudden death, recently, in Warren county, Miss., a coroner's inquest was held, and the verdict was, that the deceased came to his death by the will of God, or some other disease unknown to the jury.

Ex-President Van Buren and his son Smith Van Buren, were thrown from their carriage. The ex-President had an arm broken, and his son was slightly injured.

A large and venemous copper-headed snake was killed on Hanover street, Baltimore, lately. How it got there is a mystery.

Kansas news says fever and ague is quite prevalent in those parts. It is "awful on the white-livered Yankees," who choose to lay and shake to death rather than expend five cents for medicine.

City News.

Dining Service of the "Adriatic."—At the store of Mr. E. V. Haughtwout, Nos. 561 and 563 Broadway, for several weeks past there has been on exhibition the table service, lamps and outfit for the state-rooms of the "Adriatic." The whole cost of this service, &c., is $25,000 and it embraces entire 15,000 pieces. The table-ware is of the finest quality—double thick French porcelain, and the entire of this alone consists of near six thousand pieces. The water-pitchers are ornamented with gold, with the name of the steamer inscribed upon them. The cut glass is of the finest quality, in the style of the old English hollow diamond, and consists of about two thousand pieces. The covered dishes, castors, tea sets, baskets, forks and spoons, are very rich, and comprise over two thousand pieces. The table cutlery is made of the finest steel, with ivory handles—the steamer's name on each, and consists of some 1300 pieces. The other ornaments of the table, consisting of silver and plated goods, are very beautiful. The state rooms are all furnished with French china wash-basins and toilet articles. The lamps throughout the ship are of the French Mechanical description, with suspensions and brackets of magnificent design. This superb ocean set has attracted great attention.

Gen. W. S. Harney, was in the city for a day, en route for Florida. This distinguished soldier and most successful Indian negotiator, has but just returned from the snbjugation of the warlike Sioux and Dacotahs on the frontiers of Kansas and Nebraska, and forthwith the President and Secretary of War ordered him to put a final period to the Seminole hostilities in Florida. Gen. Harney was the friend and protege of Andrew Jackson, and having had experience in Florida, there can be no doubt that within six weeks after his arrival in the land of "sun, sand and flowers," no more will be heard of Indian disturbances in that quarter.

The Texas, from this city, Oct. 25, carried out 250 men to General Walker. A Telegraph from New Orleans, dated Oct. 27, informs us that the Tennessee sailed with 350 for the same destination.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

We are pleased to learn that the more intelligent of the medical Faculty are fast approaching a true estimate of Dr. Wesley Grindle's celebrated "Magic Compound," for the treatment of all pulmonary complaints. Some of our most conservative physicians, who have the greatest dread of quackery, have been compelled by the sheer force of the evidence produced before their eyes to admit that the doctor does cure consumption, and strongly recommend the compound to their own patients when all their own remedies fail. This is at once a compliment to the discoverer of this great medicine, and an assurance to the public that this compound is indeed a "magic" compound, and that it is destined to save the lives of thousands who would otherwise go down to early graves.

Like all great scientific discoverers, Dr. Grindle had to contend with much prejudice, and encounter strong opposition. But, mighty in the consciousness of holding in his hands one of the most blessed boons to mankind, quietly, and without resort to the usual methods of trumpeting his discovery to the world, he took measures to show the excellence of his prescription by its actual working on the human lungs. Astonishment at once took possession of his enemies, as they saw the wonderful cures effected by his compound, and gradually they laid aside their prejudices and became the doctor's friends, and the advocates of his cause, placing his name in that bright galaxy of great discoveries which spans the scientific world; and he has now the satisfaction of feeling that he is an acknowledged benefactor of his race, and his medicine one of the institutions of his country.

But the intelligence of this wonderful discovery has swept over the wide waters of the Atlantic, and orders are rapidly pouring in upon Dr. Grindle from all parts of Europe, for his invaluable renovator of weakened and decayed lungs. The English physicians, never so backward as their transatlantic brethren in acknowledging merit, although it appear not in the prescribed form, at once have adopted and prescribe the "Magic Compound." In fact, it is fast becoming, both in England and America, an integral part of Materia Medica.

We do not know but we may offend the modesty of Dr. Grindle, for we know him to be averse to laudation, but we have ourself seen enough to satisfy us that measured language will not do him and his medicine justice, and we have no hesitation in recommending the compound in all cases of pulmonic affection and debility.

For the information of those who may wish to avail themsalves of this valuable medicine, we quote the Dr.'s prices as follows:

Prices.—One box, $3; three boxes ordered at one time, $8; half-dozen, $14; one dozen, or any number greater, at the rate of $2 a box.

The postage in the United States, not over 3,000 miles, is fifteen cents a box. Over 3,000 miles, fifty cents a box. In all cases where the postage must be pre-paid, the amount should be enclosed in money or stamps.

His general depots are No. 54 White street, New-York, and No. 70 South Third street, Philadelphia. All orders addressed to Dr. W. Grindle & Brother, to either of the above places, will receive instant attention.—N. Y. People's Organ and Advocate.

IRISH MARRIAGES.

In Wicklow Church, Thomas Gelletlie, formerly of Melrose, Scotland, to Miss Francisca Tuke, daughter of the late Francis Tuke, of the county of Wicklow.

In Mark's Church, Edmund Calvert, of Walton le Dale, Lancashire, to Charlotte, daughter of John Nathaniel St. George, of Great Brunswick-street, Dublin.

In Waterford, George Hare, to Ella, daughter of St. George Freeman, of Waterford.

At Churchtown Church, by the Rev. J. Stevenson, John Kingston Maybury, of Slatefield, county Kerry, to Kate, daughter of Bartholomew W. Pardon.

At Castlejordan, Robert J. Lloyd Peyton, son of Charles J. Peyton, of Corrigard, county Roscommon, to Kate, daughter of the late William Orme Handy, of Ormotu, in the King's County.

In the Roman Catholic church, Maynooth, Peter, son of Walter Dorly, of Belgard, county Dublin, to Mary, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Magee, of Maynooth.

In London, Henry M. S. O'Brien, son of the late Donatus O'Brien, of the county Clare, to Eliza, daughter of the late James Ruddell Todd, of Portland Place, London.

At Ballaghey Church, James M. Bruce, Commander R.N., son of Rear Admiral Bruce, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific, and of Ballyscullion-house, county Londonderry, to Bessie, daughter of John Hill, of Ballaghey Castle, county Derry.

At Lordship, Torrens M'Cann, merchant, Newry, brother of the late Surgeon M'Cann, Dundalk, to Annie, daughter of the late Andrew M'Donald, Rockmarshall, county Louth.

At St. James's, Piccadilly, Charles, son of H. Magniac, of Colworth, Bedfordshire, to Augusta, widow of Colonel the Hon. T. V. Dawson, daughter of the Right Hon. J. W. Fitz Patrick, Queen's County.

At St. Margaret's, Lee, Dr. Holton, second Queen's Royals, to Emma Anne, daughter of commander J. S. Keatley, R.N.

At Cawnpore, East Indies, Lieutenant R. C. Cross, Adjutant 17th Bengal Native Infantry, to Catherine Diana Homfray, daughter of the late Robert Shedden Homfray, and grand-daughter of the late Sir Jeremiah Homfray, Knight.

IRISH DEATHS.

At 27 Monck place, Dublin, Henry M'Connell, after a long illness.
Mark Moran, eldest son of the late J. Moran.
At Ahoghill, William Weir, postmaster, aged 74.
At Primrose Mount, Randalstown, Miss Maria Jane Davison.
Robert, infant son of John M'Dowell, merchant, Newry.
At Rath, Mrs. Cassin, formerly of Ballyduff, county Kilkenny.
At Windsor Hill Newry, aged 76 years, Thomas Hill.
In Kilkenny, Hannah, widow of the Rev. Eland Mossom.
Philip Dwyer, father of the Rev. J. Dwyer, of Enniskillen.
Eliza Chivers, wife of Major Macadam, county Clare.
At Blackrock, the youngest daughter of the late Thomas O'Flyn.
At Killuna, Richard, son of the Rev. John N. Wright.
At Clontarf, at the residence of his mother, James, son of Mrs. M'Knight.
At Upper Queen-street, Captain Alexander Lewis, late of the 49th Regiment, aged 87 years.
At Lisnarick, near Coleraine, the Rev. Samuel Carlisle, aged 67 years.
At Bellhill, Kilkeel, Jane, widow of the late James Marmion, upwards of 100 years of age.
On the 23d ultimo, at Alexandria, Egypt, Captain John Hegarty, of Londonderry, master of the Catania, of Belfast.
At Ballykerne, near Ballingarry, county Tipperara, Kate Ryan, daughter of the late John Ryan, in the 20th year of her age.
The Rev. Mr. Harty, P.P., of Moor, near Ballinasloe, in the county Roscommon, very much regretted.
At 11 North Portland Place, Eliza, relint of Thomas Howard.
At Fredericton, New Brunswick, aged 21 years, Henry Chalmers, son of the Hon. John S. Saunders.

Special Notices.

PRICES REDUCED.

Fine Black Cloth Frock Coats	$ 8
Fine Black Dress Coats	$ 8
Fine Brown Frock Coats	$ 8
Fall Raglans	$ 8
Cassimere Business Coats	$3 50 to $ 8
Black Cassimere Pants	$2 50 to $ 5
Fancy Cassimere Pants	$1 50 to $ 5
Rich Moire-Antique Silk Vests	$ 8
Zephyr Cassimere suits	$ 8
Complete genteel Black Cloth suits	$12

Evans' Extensive Clothing Warehouse,
oct25 2mos Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton street.

MONEY SAVED
IN BUYING BOOKS ON THE GIFT PRINCIPLE.
Great Sale of Books at $1 each, Which includes Wolks sold at $1 25.
A GIFT WITH EVERY BLO.
Orders from the country will be sent by Mail or Express, with dispatch.
☞ Catalogues of the Books and Gifts send to any address.
oct18 6t J. S. Andrews, 140 Nassau street, N. Y.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellectual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

Mr. Wallack will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

"The Fairy Star," Miss Agnes Robertson, will perform for Eighteen Nights, previously to a long series of engagements South and West.

MR. DION BOURCICAULT,

will perform during the engagement of "The Fairy Star," and will produce two new dramatic works, upon the composition of which he is now engaged.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.
The People's Temple of the Drama.
Open every night,
WITH A POWERFUL
Star Company.
Lessee and Manager.....John Brougham

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	50 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.
NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,
Opposite Niblo's Garden,
THE DRED-FUL MYSTERIES
OF THE
Dismal Swamp Revealed, by Geo. Swain Buckley, and R. Bishop Buckley.

MONDAY, Eve. Nov. 3d.—First night of an original Musical Parody, in two acts, many Scenes, Songs, Tricks, and Tableaux, entitled DISMAL OF THE DREAD SWAMP.

Old Tiff, and Dismal of the Dread Swamp.....G. Swain Buckley
Tom-Tit, a Tit-tillating, precocious Colored Infant.....R. Bishop Buckley
Frisette, a Quadroon, with a white heart and a fair voice....Miss C. Hiffert

In the course of the parody will be given a living illustration of a "Tom-Tit on a Pump-handle," and a Grand Tableau of "The Temple of the Union."

Previous to which,
NEGRO MINSTRELSY,
of a superior order.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 1-2 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

Illustrated
LECTURES,
On the Natural History of Man.
Scientific Societies, &c.,
Are respectfully informed that
Dr. McElheran
Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.
Address Dr. McElheran, 136 McDougall Street, New-York. no14

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL
OF THE
EMMET LIFE GUARD.
ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,
At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.
Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the Guard and at this office.
☞ The Life Guard pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by them to produce the best Ball of the season.
Capt. T. Lynch, Chairman.
A. O'Toole, Sec'y.
James Watson, Treasurer. oct11

LECTURE
FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE CAPT. KERRIGAN
BY
THOS. FRANCIS MEAGHER.
SUBJECT:
Contrast between Royalty and Republicanism—Europe and America!
At the Tabernacle on Monday Evening, November 17.
Tickets 50 cents.

FIFTH ANNUAL BALL
OF THE
Barry Benevolent Society,
At the Apollo Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, November 12th, 1856. The Committee has spared no trouble to make this one of the finest Balls of the Season.
John McMahon, President.
Michael Kirwin, Secretary.
2t no1 John Powers, Treasurer.

Sporting!—Young Men desirous of forming a Foot-Ball Club are requested to meet at the Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second avenue, to make arrangements for a parade on St. Stephen's Day, (26th Dec.) This being the first affair of this kind, it is expected there will be a large attendance. 1t. nov 8.

Special Notices.

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says: "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the cheapest Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very very best Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say, that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.
Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
sept18 3mos 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

Attention!—"Irish News Guard."—The Company meet for drill and admission of members for their first annual Target Excursion, on Tuesday evening of each week at the "Eagle Drill Rooms," corner of Chrystie and Delancey streets. The Guard cordially invite additions to its ranks.
P. J. Wall, Sec'y E. K. Butler, Captain.

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening. JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at —— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y. JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street. JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——. JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery. JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn. JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y. MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J. OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey. WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C. EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITCH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport. y3ljune

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of tho Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.

JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

—For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Sties, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARDS," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street, sept27 3mos New-York.

ATTENTION!

To Military Companies.

BEAUTIFUL EMBLEMATIC WREATHS AND BOUQUFTS,

For Target Excursions, constantly on sale, or made to order at the shortest notice, and at any price.

Ladies about making a presentation to their military friends are most respectfully invited to make a visit to the old established bookstore, 366 Bowery, one door above Fourth street.

Robert Coddington, Proprietor.

N. B.—Always on sale, a fine assortment of Invitation Note Paper and Envelopes, Books on Military Tactics, Works on Ireland.

The IRISH NEWS for sale, as soon as published, every week. oct11 4t

Holloway's Pills.—Feeble constitutions.—Thousands of persons with weak constitutions, die early from sheer debility. Nature should, in such cases, be assisted with Holloway's Pills. They give tone and stamina to the system, and vigor to the circulation. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62c., and $1 per box or pot.

Post Office.—Notice.—Change of Hour.—On and after MONDAY, the 3d day of November, the Mails will close as follows:

Eastern Mail by Railroad,.....at 2 P. M.
New-York and Erie Railroad Mails.....at 3 P. M.
North Mail by Hudson River Railroad.....at 3½ P. M.

November 1, 1856.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

Musical.—A young lady lately connected with the profession in Europe, where she studied under the first and best masters, is desirous of giving a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who may kindly favor her with a trial, may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trener, 90 South Eighth street, Brooklyn, E. D.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 882 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring, by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfactiofi be given. sept6 3m

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicines.

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

DRS. GILBERT AND KENNEDY,

TREAT

CANCERS, TUMORS, ULCERS, &c.,

WITHOUT SURGICAL OPERATIONS.

OFFICE 746 BROADWAY, COR. ASTOR PLACE, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES FROM

Ex Gov. T. M. Tucker.	Hon. T. Butler King.	Judge Alex. Walker
Judge F. W. Hugling.	Gen. Narcisso Lopez.	Col. Maunsel White.
Capt. Isaiah Sellers.	Capt. Wm. Leathers.	Thos. E. Bond, M. D.
A. S. Baldwin, M. D.	W. P. Allison, M. D.	J. S. Peacocke, M. D.

PERMISSION TO REFER TO

Ex Gov. James C. Jones. Hon. Frederick B. Stanton.
B. F. Palmer, Inventor of "Palmer's Artificial Leg."
Francis Grice, Naval Constructor, Navy Yard, Philadelphia.
Proprietors of the Girard House, Philadelphia.

Send for a Pamphlet! oct18 4t

Special Notices.

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.

JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept18

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until every has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerk can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206, William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. REGILDING DONE. sept 13 tf

Business Directory.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

---

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 18 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHS,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. Ju12 6m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK.

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York, between William and Gold streets.

ap26tf

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

Dr. Shanahan,

SURGEON AND ACCOUCHEUR,

Can be consulted at his office, No. 169 West 38th street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, New-York. oc11 4t

---

Wm. Irwin,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN BOOTS & SHOES,

No. 174 Bowery, opposite Delancey street, New-York.

Quick Sales and Small Profits. oc11m3

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING, New-York.

my31y

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions :

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)

ap19 1y Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

CARPETINGS FROM AUCTION.

TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK AND VICINITY.

STEPHEN LEAHY,

98 SIXTH AVENUE, between Waverly and Clinton Place,

BEGS to call the attention of the ladies to his large and varied stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloth. The collection comprises goods of every grade and style, from the richest and most beautiful of foreign manufacture to the lowest price domestic.

All who are acquainted with the Carpet trade, and have visited our New Store, acknowledge our stock the most varied assortment and best selected on exhibition in the city. The facilities we enjoy for purchasing cheap, and an experience of many years in connection with the largest houses in the country, enables us to present to our lady friends and the public, the cheapest and most select stock of goods in the city.

sept27 8mos STEPHEN LEAHY, 98 Sixth Avenue.

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, Broche and Woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, Woollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c.

ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street,

oct4 3mos and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

Men's Furnishing Goods.

84 William Street, corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

GEORGE M. TRACY,

HAS now on hand a choice stock of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, nearly all of which are made under his own inspection, of the choicest fabrics and newest styles. Merchants will find this a desirable place to make their selections. Annexed is a catalogue of some of the articles :

Hosiery and Gloves	Improved Napoleon Ties
Silk Beaufort Ties	Stocks, in great variety
Linen Collars	Silk and Linen Handkerchiefs
Silk Albert Ties	Dressing Robes
Fine Shirts	Travelling Shawls
Cravats and Stocks	Silk Under Shirts and Drawers
Suspenders	Silk and Gingham Umbrellas

His shirts are of superior make and quality, and warranted to fit. Persons wishing goods for their own use will be served at retail as well as wholesale, at the lowest prices. oc4m2

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

Which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to his customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city. Gentlemen's furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and single counting-room desks, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office desks from 3 to 6 feet, of Mahogany, Black Walnut, and Oak ; cases for books and pigeon holes. Office-chairs, cushions, lounges, and office tables of every description. my17tf

---

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on libberal terms. jly6 y

---

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 Beekman street, New-York.

Wines and Liquors.

THOMAS RUSSELL,

209 Fulton Street, between Church and Greenwich streets, and across town at 111 Attorney street, corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform the public, that he has opened the abovee stahlishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &c.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call the attention of buyers to his stock, consisting in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, vintage 1823 and 1842.

Otard, Dupuy & Co., vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

Imported by the subscriber, to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a select supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders, with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Conner, Wall street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 86th street, and 6th Avenue : T. Russell & Co., corner 4th street and 6th avenue, and at the corners of 13th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English Pickles, Sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 3m16au

---

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those who are in need of nourishment ; and it is undoubtedly the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days, adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert, that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three huudred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the Elizabethan Ale most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome, (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oc4m3

STUYVESANT SHADES,

No. 12 Stuyvesant Street,

Junction of 9th street, near Third Avenue, New-York.

Wines and Segars, of the best brands, always on hand.

oc25m3 F. Fitzsimons, Proprietor.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,

at 333 Broadway,

tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above estabiishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 306 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. jly26

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1856. NO. 32.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXXII.

Editorial.

A BREACH OF THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH ALLIANCE.

THE LADIES FAIR AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE CRIMEAN BANQUET.

CAPTAIN KERRIGAN—THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD.

BUCHANAN TRIUMPHANT.

JOHN BROUGHAM AND THE BOWERY.

DR. MCELHERAN IN THE ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

COLONEL DOHENY AND LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR RAYMOND.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—Part VII.—By Garland O'Halloran.—Dr. McElheran's Lecture, &c.

Poetry.

November, by "Belshazzar."

Correspondence.

Letter from Waterford, by "The Metal-Man."—Letter from Dublin, by "Kilmainham."—Military Orders, &c.

Miscellaneous.

Lecture on Cork, by D. F. McCarthy—The Use of Ireland—Sketches by the Wayside—the Death of Kings—Jerpoint Abbey—St Canice's Cathedral—Reminiscences of '98—Sarah Curran's Grave—Latest news from every corner of the Globe.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.

For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street.
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned

GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Now Ready!

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET,

By DR. R. R. MADDEN,

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil.

AND A MEMOIR OF

Thomas Addis Emmet.

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo., cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF CLONCURRY.
MADDEN'S UNITED IRISHMEN.
SAVAGE'S '98 AND '48.
GILBERT'S STREETS OF DUBLIN.
FITZPATRICK'S LIFE OF CLONCURRY.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.
LIFE OF O'DWYER THE OUTLAW.
MOORE'S LETTERS TO MACKENZIE.
LIFE OF ROBERT HOLMES. By Savage.
LIFE OF CORBETT.
B. P. BINNS' LETTERS.
GRATTAN'S LIFE. By his SON.
PHILLIPS' RECOLLECTIONS OF CURRAN.
JOHN BINN'S LIFE.
MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
MACNEVIN'S PIECES OF IRISH HISTORY.
MAGOON'S AMERICAN ORATORS.
CURRAN'S LIFE. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

Sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD'S noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Common Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respectable CHRISTIAN OBSERVER; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to posses, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

TWO COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.
oct18 tf

JUST PUBLISHED

THE CHEAPEST AND HANDSOMEST GIFT BOOKS IN THE MARKET.

LOOMIS' ILLUMINATED STORIES!

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

For Sale by all Booksellers throughout the country. Price in illuminated covers and edges, 25 cents.

CINDERELLA.	BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.
JACK THE GIANT-KILLER.	TOM THUMB.
RED RIDING HOOD.	GOODY TWO SHOES.
MOTHER GOOSE.	&c., &c., &c.

Robinson Crusoe and Chanticleer,

Very beautifully illustrated and printed on superfine paper. Illuminated covers, 50 cents.

Brown, Loomis & Co.,
4t nov15 15 Dutch Street, N. Y.

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 18, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856.
aug28 10t

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX, is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities of the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its general appearance, as well as to the clearness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

The work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

Daguerreotypes.

Mark the Facts!—J. GURNEY'S establishment, No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street, is the oldest and most extensive in the United States. GURNEY was the first to introduce the Art of Photography in this city. GURNEY has recently made important alterations and improvements in his establishment. GURNEY has now greater facilities for producing finer work in every branch than has heretofore been produced in this country. GURNEY has still in his employ the best of his old artists. GURNEY has recently added to the above a talented corps of American, French, and German artists. GURNEY'S colored Photographs of all sizes need only to be seen to be appreciated; they speak for themselves. GURNEY'S plain, unretouched Photographs were never equaled—so say artists and the best judges. GURNEY'S Daguerreotypes are universally pronounced superior productions. GURNEY has received more testimonials for his skill than any other artist in the profession. GURNEY received the only medal for Photographic productions at the late Paris Exposition—consequently, GURNEY stands at the head of the world in the Photographic Art. GURNEY has not removed any branch of his business to any part of the city. GURNEY has no connection with any other establishment in any part of the city. GURNEY attends personally to his patrons and friends, and has done so for the last sixteen years. GURNEY will be most happy to continue that attention, and will still endeavor to please all who may favor him with a visit to his Photographic Palace of Art. J. GURNEY, oct4 3mos No. 349 Broadway, corner of Leonard street.

FACTS

THAT NEED NO MARKING.

Progression.

From Humphrey's Photographic Journal of Sept. 1856.

We do not approve of the plan of puffing the members of the Photographic profession by way of personals. This may do very well when one is trying to bring his works into favor with such as are susceptible to flattery, and measure out their support according to the amount of editorial ink used as bait. We feel confident that those who best know will agree with us as that it is no puffing, when we can say with so much truth, that the Photographic Art this day owes, in no small degree, its position in this country to Mr. C. D. FREDRICKS, a gentleman who was the first to introduce the Photographic process upon an extensive scale in America. Previous to his establishing himself here, he visited Europe, and, with an enterprise worthy of imitation, he was not satisfied with first securing what knowledge he could himself gain, but also engaged the services of several of the most eminent Parisian Artists. He then, in connection with Mr. GURNEY, opened an establishment on a plan unequaled in the world.

After succeesfully following his profession, in connection with Mr. G., for some time, he has opened a "Temple of Art" in this City, under his own professorship and supervision. We have honestly and candidly presented the foregoing, feeling that is justly due to a fellow-laborer.

CHARLES D. FREDRICKS, late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, &c., No. 585 Broadway, opposite Metropolitan Hotel.

FACTS WHICH ARE KNOWN.—PHOTOGRAPHS DAGUERREOTYPES, AMBROTYPES, &c.—The undersigned having removed the Photograph department and his Parisian artists from his old place of business, No. 349 Broadway, to his new and magnificent establishment, No. 585 Broadway, would call the attention of public to the fact that his Galleries, and the pictures made in them, are superior to anything before exhibited. Those desiring Photograps, Daguerreotypes, or Ambrotypes, executed by artists of refined taste, would do well to call and judge for themselves. Reception Rooms on the first floor, and are open from 8 A. M., to 10 P. M. CHARLES D. FREDRICKS,
Late GURNEY & FREDRICKS, No. 585 Broadway
oct11 8mos opposite the Metropolitan Hotel.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $825. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 13th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE
OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr., | Manhattan,
Great Western, | Neptune,
Harvest Queen, | Columbia,
Isaac Webb, | Yorkshire,
Isaac Wright, | Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL	FROM PHILADELPHIA
Every alternate Wednesday.	Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $30; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.
JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap19ly Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap19ly Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my31y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS,) which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap19tt

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $3 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.

SMITH, No. 31 PARK ROW,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

MONEY SAVED

IN BUYING BOOKS ON THE GIFT PRINCIPLE.

Great Sale of Books at $1 each, Which includes Wolks sold at $1 25.

A GIFT WITH EVERY BLO.

Orders from the country will be sent by Mail or Express, with dispatch.

☞ Catalogues of the Books and Gifts send to any address.

oct18 6t J. S. Andrews, 140 Nassau street, N. Y.

European News.

By the arrival of the Canada at Boston we have dates from Europe to the 25th ult. Financial embarrassments and political excitement, in regard to the Neapolitan question, form the leading features in the news.

The Moniteur says that when the Congress of Paris broke up, the great powers saw elements fraught with danger to peace in Belgium, Greece, and Naples—that of these States, Naples alone refuses to accept friendly advice, and that in consequence the Western Powers will cease to hold diplomatic intercourse with her. The British fleet is somewhere in the Mediterranean, and the French fleet continue at Toulon ready for sea. Meantime the dispatches are contradictory—while one statement says the ministers will not leave Naples for some months, another asserts that Baron Brenier, the French Envoy, has announced to the Neapolitan Government that if he did not receive a satisfactory communication within two hours he would present his last instructions—said instructions being doubtless to demand his passports. The statement that the Emperor of Russia has urged the King of Naples to avoid a rupture by making some concessions, seems to be confirmed by numerous communications in the Continental papers. The advice of the Emperor, it seems, was that King Ferdinand should change some of his Ministers, and place Prince Satuano at the head of the Government. While warning him against the ill-will of England, the Emperor is further represented as having recommended to the King to trust the moderation of the Emperor of the French, and to accept him as a mediator. The Austrian Gazette has received a communication from Naples, to the effect that King Ferdinand, to show his conciliatory disposition, will not recall his Representatives in Paris and London in consequence of the recall of the French and English Ambassadors in Naples. They will only leave those Capitals in case their passports are sent to them. The only authority for this statement is the Austrian organ, which only professes to be able to say what the demands of the British Government really are: First, a change of Ministry—second, abolition of the present Police system, and third, a general amnesty. On the same authority it may be stated that the French Cabinet would be satisfied if a general amnesty were granted. The hopes of a speedy reassembling of the Paris Conference begin to be shaken. The resistance is said to come from the English Government, whose views seem to prevail. The captain and crew of the lost brig Collingwood, from Quebec, were rescued by the Volga, Jefferson, of Boston, from St. John for Hull.

Great Britain.—The Parliament has been further prorogued till Dec. 16.

The citizens of Dublin gave a banquet on Wednesday, the 22d ult., to nearly 4,000 troops who served in the Crimea. The Mayor of Dublin presided, supported by Lord Lieut. Carlisle, Lord Gough, Talbot, and many other gentlemen. The city of Edinburg will give a similar banquet on the 31st ult. Mr. John Arrowsmith, cotton broker of Liverpool, avows himself the author of the story in the London Times, of "Duels and Murders in a Georgia Railway Car," and reiterates the truth of his statement. The affair is incomprehensible and excites much curiosity.

Aurelia Saffi, a Roman Triumvir, has been engaged by the Italian Emancipation Committee to lecture throughout Great Britain to stir up enthusiasm for Italy.

Mrs. Mary F. Stone, sister of Cyrus W. Field, Esq., of New York, died at Paris on Wednesday the 22d ult.

France. — French correspondence gives prominence to accounts of the Imperial gaieties at Compeigne, where the Emperor is enjoying hunting by day and fancy balls by night, in the style and costume of LouisXIV. Numerous arrests have recently taken place at the Department of the Deux Zones, where a secret society of a dangerous description has been discovered. The society was organised by tens and hundreds, all trained to obey orders for the destruction of the rich. Sixty persons were apprehended, but the peasants, armed with pitchforks, attacked the escort and rescued the prisoners. New arrests have also been made in the Faubourg St. Antoine within a few days. The report of the Bank of France is rather more favorable, although the Bank has adopted yet more stringent measures, and will not make any advance at present on Railway shares or rents. Commercial bills having sixty days to run are always objected to, so that virtually the term is reduced to forty-five days.

Spain.—Accounts from Madrid speak of a new Ministerial crisis, the effect being to throw Narvaez overboard, and restore the Absolutists. The Marquis of Villana, the head of the Absolutist party, is spoken of as the coming man, but he, in the meantime, declines the responsibility. It is said that O'Donnell is put in command of the Household Guard, as a check upon Narvaez. Count Berkendorff, the Russian Envoy, has had a cordial reception from the Queen. A daughter has been born to the Duchess of Montpensier.

Italy.—The Grand Duke of Tuscany, taking alarm at the demonstration against Naples, appears disposed to grant some concessions to his people, by reviving, with some modifications, the Constitution of 1848. The Paris Constitutionel asserts, as if from a sure source, that in consequence of the negotiations between Austria and Rome, the Austrians are about to withdraw, and will retain only two points, Ancona and Bologna. A treaty has been concluded between Russia and Naples, placing the ships of the latter, in Russian ports, on the footing of the most highly-favored nations.

Switzerland. — The Neufchatel prisoners have been dismissed. The Federal Government is making an effort to be represented in the Congress of Paris.

Turkey.—The Sultan has sent orders to Redschid Pasha to form a new Ministry, but Redschid declines. The real cause was a difference of opinion with the French Minister, respecting the union of the Principalities. An attempt has been made to induce Mustapha Pasha to take office, but he refused. A dispatch from Constantinople says that Gen. Guyon has died of cholera.

Austrian Occupation of the Principalities.

The Austrian Gazette of Vienna, of October 16, says:—Some journals assert that Austria has concluded with the Porte a secret treaty relative to the prolongation of the occupation of the Principalities. Such a treaty is in no respect necessary, as the existing one clearly declares that the evacuation of these Principalities depends solely on the arrangements to be entered into between the Porte and Austria. Even admitting that the enactment of the treaty of Paris, which says that foreign troops must evacuate the country within six months, were applicable to the Austrian occupation, based on a separate treaty, we may remind the Paris journals that the treaty in question contains a number of other provisions which have not yet been executed. According to it, for example, the commission on the Principalities ought to have long since assembled at Bucharest, and have commenced its labors, but it has not done so. We do not believe that we are in error in stating that, as soon as a decision shall be come to with regard to the Principalities, and new institutions shall be established in those provinces, Austria will not delay in putting an end to an occupation which has cost and still costs her a good deal of money, and which is not for her interest alone.

The Ost Deutsche Post of Vienna also contains an article destined to justify the occupation of the Danubian Principalities by Austria. It opposes this occupation to that of Greece by the allies, and asserts that the former is justified by right, whilst the presence of the Western Powers in Greece can receive no justification whatever. It asserts that the non-settlement of the Bessarabian frontier demands the presence of the Austrian army in the provinces, as it has given rise to the reappearance of the English squadron in the Black Sea. It does not suffice, it says, for the treaty to be signed, it must likewise be carried into execution. "Austria," says the article, in conclusion, "has the same duty to perform in watching over the execution of this treaty as the other contracting Powers, and the presence of the Austrian force, justified moreover by treaty, is calculated to accelerate the satisfactory execution of the measures provided by the treaty of Paris."

Dr. Rae in Scotland.

At the Lochaber Agricultural Society's dinner (says the Edinburgh Courant) an incident occurred which formed a very interesting finale to the day's proceedings. A gentleman, apparently a tourist, arrived at the hotel just as the party were to sit down to dinner. He asked, and was immediately granted permission to join; throughout the evening he made himself particularly agreeable, and his health was proposed as "The Stranger," and very cordially drunk. On rising to return thanks, he said, "In the course of my life, I have seen some rough days and many pleasant ones. I have lived ten months in a snow-house, without once warming myself at a fire. I have had my moccasins cut off my legs with a hatchet. I have had to kill my own food with my own gun; and I have been reduced to the necessity of living on bones—but all these things are easily forgotten when I meet such a pleasant party as is now before me. As I am an entire stranger to you all, and as I have received so much kindness from you, it is but fair that you should know who I am; my name is Rae, and you may have heard it associated with the Franklin Expedition." At this announcement the astonished party started to their feet, and gave Dr. Rae a most enthusiastic reception. The cheering lasted several minutes, after which Dr. Rae showed some of the articles which had indicated the probable fate of Sir John Franklin and his party. These consisted of a piece of gold and two silver watches, a small anchor, several coins, a spoon, with a crest engraved on it, &c. Dr. Rae had been on a visit to Edward Ellice, Esq., M.P., at Glenqucich, and was on his way to Castle Menzies.

Position of the Different States in regard to the Sound Dues.

From the Cologne Gazette.

Russia and Sweden signed the original protocol of the 9th of May, 1856, on condition that the other States would also do so. Oldenburg also adhered to the propositions of Denmark, and it was only on account of his absence that the representative of that power did not immediately sign the protocol. It has been known for some time past that Prussia approves of the principle; and lately, some secondary difficulties having been removed, the affair is nearly settled with that power. It is positively stated that Austria will not separate from Prussia in this question. France and England have given their consent, although no formal convention has been concluded with those States, not even with England, although the contrary has been stated. The consent of Belgium, Spain and Holland is expected, if it has not already arrived. As to the United States of America, it is thought that when all the other Governments shall be in accord, they will at least consent to pay a sufficient sum towards the expenses of keeping up the lighthouses.

A Romance in Real Life.

A short time since, a young girl of remarkable beauty and fashionably dressed, but whose demeanor and features betrayed an infirm mind, was encountered one stormy evening in the streets of the Martyrs, in Paris. An honorable man living in the neighborhood, M. Saville, defended the unfortunate girl from the indiscreet curiosity of some young men, took her home and confided her to his wife, who bestowed upon her the greatest attention. To all questions as to her name and family, the insane girl remained deaf. She placed herself at a writing-desk, and began to compose and write verses which betrayed a violent passion, the probable cause of her madness. Some days after M. Saville wrote to The Constitutionel, which had announced the previous details, that the girl was dead. Once only, during sixty-two hours she had consented to take any nourishment. The efforts of science had failed to triumph over her resolution; and after two hours of frightful convulsions, she had died with the name of Robert on her lips. The sole indication by which to trace her individuality, was the mark "E. B." on her linen.

Not long after, The Gazette des Tribunaux gave the following details which complete the touching and dramatic history: Emily Bertin, daughter of a rich iron-master in Belgium, was destined by her father's choice to marry the son of a brewer, whose fortune equalled her own. But the young girl had disposed of her affections. The object of her love was a young man named Robert Duval, a writer and artist but little favored by fortune. Emily, as appeared by the fragments of her poetry, was devoted to literature. She was of an exalted and romantic character, and passed much of her time in writing. When her father, whose inflexibility she well understood, ordered her to renounce it, and prepare to marry immediately the brewer's son, she communicated the fatal injunction to the young artist. They endeavored to discover the means of eluding it. Emily could imagine nothing but a double suicide. Robert, whom another plan had suggested itself to, begged her to postpone awhile her terrible design. The same evening he went to a saloon, where he knew he would meet the brewer's son. A quarrel took place between the two young men. A blow received by one of them was followed by a duel, in which Robert was killed.

The day after this Emily Bertin disappeared, taking with her her jewels and a small sum of money. All attempts to find her in Belgium were without success. When the fact of a young girl's being found in the street of Martyrs and M. Saville's letter were seen by M. Bertin in a Parisian paper which he took, it struck him it might be his daughter. He took the road to Paris imediately and sought M. Saville's house. There he was shown the effects and verses left by the insane girl. All his doubts were dissipated, the tears burst from his eyes, and he appeared the prey of the most profound grief, accusing himself of being the cause of his child's death. M. Saville was shown a touching letter left by Emily previous to her flight, which, like her poetry, revealed the possession of real genius.

Neapolitan Prisons.—The political prisoners (says the Times' correspondent) lately set at liberty, have been restricted to a residence in their province. Antoinetta Pace was not liberated at the same time, perhaps for want of sureties. Avitabile has permission to remain in Naples. In referring to the absurd false statements of a portion of the French press, that there were not more, perhaps, than one hundred political prisoners now remaining, I might have given the following evidence of Capt. Acuti on the recent trial. When he was Commander of the Bagni of Procida, there were 1,450 prisoners, of whom 600 were political. Capt. Acuti was Commander of the Bagni about a year ago, and supposing one half have since been liberated, which is certainly not the case, we have yet 300 for one prison only still remaining, to take no account of those who in the provinces are daily arrested for reasons and under circumstances that would appear incredible out of this country. That some have been released cannot be denied, but the majority were such as had been arbitrarily arrested by a simple order of police, and confined without trial or sentence. Poor Amodio, too, once, I think, deputy for Potenza, has been liberated; he had become mad in prison! Death has reduced the numbers, as in the case of the consumptive patient Zueli, confined in chains in the damp prisons of Montesarcoio. Lanza and Mambrini have been permitted to return on conditions extorted from them, which must forever fill their friends with regret. I cannot proceed to individualize all who have returned to enjoy a doubtful liberty, under the surveilance of the police, and within the grasp of a power which may at any time consign them again to a prison. An amnesty, indeed! It is a mockery of concession.

A Runaway Railway Engine.—On the evening of the 19th inst., the people in the neighbourhood of the railway at Southampton were greatly alarmed at seeing an engine proceeding towards the terminus with great speed, without either driver or stoker. It crossed a densely populated street and three carriage ways, and entered the shed at the Southampton terminus, demolishing five empty carriages, and knocking down the lower portion of the shed. The fragments of the smashed carriages and shed formed a barrier which prevented the engine from getting out to the dock road. Mr. Watkins, the Southampton railway superintendent, immediately started for the engine depot at Northam, about a mile and a half from Southampton, believing that the engine had run away from thence. This proved to be the case. A collision had occurred on the line which separated this engine from the coke wagons it was drawing, when the driver, through fear, jumped off and omitted to shut off the steam. His engine consequently proceeded to Southampton at full speed without a driver, and caused the damage above mentioned. The passenger engine was seriously damaged, the driver and stoker were knocked off, and the passengers in the train were violently shaken, but fortunately no one was seriously injured.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

There is a good, although I fear rather apocryphal story told in connection with the Aberdeen harbor. When the trade to the West Indies was first opened up, it is said that the magistrates of Aberdeen were tempted to try their fortunes in what promised to be such a lucrative business, and sent a vessel out there on speculation. The many anxious gazers from the Castlehill for the arrival of the "shippie" were at length rewarded, and when safely moored in the "harbourie," the civic dignitaries paid it a visit. After having exhausted the accidental wonders which had been brought home, the provost and bailies retired to the cabin to partake of the skipper's good cheer. While thus engaged a monkey, which was part of the importations, amused with the tie of the provost's wig, honored it with an occasional pull, much to the good man's annoyance. "Odd, laddie," he would say aside," "ye'd better be quiet." "What't the matter with you, provost?" said the captain, overhearing one of the chief magistrate's remonstrances. "It's that laddie o' yours," was the reply. "What laddie, provost?" "That ane there, wi' the rough foul face, an' the sair e'en." "That's nae a laddie, provost;" it is a monkey." "Is't, is't?" said the worthy dignitary, "fat better keen I. I thocht it was some o' your sugar-maker's sons come o'er to our university to get's education."

An English paper reports that a shocking accident, which happened during the drill of the big gun exercise (firing at a target placed out at the little Nore), caused by the bursting of one of the long 32-pounders, whereby one private named Richard Tucker Lamble, was killed on the spot; Wm. Newton (bombardier) had both feet nearly pinched off—one has already been cut off; Wm. Smith seriously injured about the loins. Both, however, are progressing favorably. The gun in question burst in several pieces, the muzzle end flying over the ramparts, the breech in various directions. The large piece that killed Lamble carried him some ten yards from the gun, and literally cut him in two. Several soldiers were knocked down by the fragments of the gun-carriage.

We (Shipping Gazette) publish our monthly summary of wrecks, from which it appears that during the month of September the number of wrecks reported was 127. In the month of January the number was 265; in February, 174; in March, 145; in April, 157; in May 112; in June, 84; in July, 104; and in August, 88; making a total in the past nine months of 1,259.

The Sport says: — "The Emperor and Empress went on a shooting excursion in the park of St. Cloud. Her Majesty wore an elegant costume of green cloth, composed of a skirt and jacket, ornamented with gold buttons, and a round hat with a plume of feathers. Two sub-officers of the Chasseurs of the Guard attended on the Empress to carry her fowling-pieces. Her Majesty killed nine pheasants out of 53 shot during the excursion.

It is stated that at one of the last public receptions at Moscow, the Czar said to the Piedmontese General Broglio—"Tell your king that I recommended my mother to him;" and turning towards Prince Esterhazy, he added — "Do not be surprised if I love and esteem open enemies."

"Here you bogtrotter," said a dandy to an Irish labourer, "come tell me the biggest lie you ever told in your life, and I'll treat you to whiskey punch." "Ah! sir," quickly replied Pat, "your honor is a gentleman."

Correspondence.

Waterford Letter.

WATERFORD, Nov. 24th.

I feel that my correspondence with the Irish News does not do justice to it. I am very dull and lazy. The letters I send you are few and far between—very far between. That's not my fault, however. Were I living in New-York, and writing to Waterford, the case would be different. But living in Waterford, and writing to New-York, I am condemned to a sterility of incidents, and the utmost lethargy of style. Heigho! Even had we a Repeal Agitation, with Alderman Delahunty full of foam and flame, descanting on the wrongs of Ireland, something interesting might flow from my pen. Next year, to be sure, you'll have something new from Waterford. The Royal Agricultural Society holds its annual meeting here. We are to have all the live beef and pork of the four Provinces gathered within our ancient walls, and with them all the live lords and noble noodles from Dungarvan to Dungannon. France, too, has through one of her masters—the Minister of Agriculture, I believe—promised to contribute largely to the bucolic display. Were Marshal Pelissier to pay us a visit on the occasion, the exhibition would be complete. Our Mayor interests himself immensely in the coming event. He does so in every thing concerning the good and credit of the city. To him we are indebted for the prospect of having our neighbors across the Straits of Dover—the dumb as well as the talkative—with us during the cattle show. Bless my soul! How old Waterford will shake with delight and stare with wonder at the scene! Depend upon it, you shall have letters from me every day during it. Letters worth reading, too, I promise you.

The Testimonial to Father John Sheehan has just been put up in St. Patrick's Chapel. It consists of a plain white tablet, inclosing a medallion portrait of the good and gifted priest. An angel surmounts it, holding a crown over the likeness of the head which was once the seat of so much learning, eloquent thought, and intellectual power. The inscription on the tablet reads thus :

"A.M.D.G.—This monument has been erected to the memory of the Rev. JOHN SHEEHAN, P. P., by his friends of different creeds and denominations, to testify their high appreciation of his worth as a citizen, his eloquence as a preacher and his zeal as a pastor. In him religion found an able advocate, and his country an uncompromising patriot. He died on the 18th of February, 1854, in the 65th year of his age and 42d of his sacred ministry. This distinguished priest was the revered pastor of St. Patrick's during the space of 25 years.—Requiescat in pace. Amen."

The entire is the work of the Messrs Farrell, of Dublin, and is eminently calculated to extend the celebrity of those artists. It is a pity, however, it does not occupy a prominent position in a less dusky edifice. St. Patrick's, from one end of the year to the other, is filled with the sorrowfullest shadows. Prayer-books are of little use there. Beads are the only devotional invention which can with facility be used. So dim and melancholy the old Chapel continues to be the twelve-month through, that one might imagine the Tennebræ was eternally going on there. Yet, after all, it may be the fittest place for this modest little monument to poor Father John. For he loved his parish, and this was the only chapel in it. He loved both. More than this—if a pure pride be a nobler emotion than that of love—he was proud of St Patrick's—chapel and parish—both. I have often heard it said that, over and over again, he might have had a wealthier parish, but no consideration of the sort could tempt him to leave the one to which his heart was so fondly wedded. Old Halfpenny, his clerk or sacristan, shared this affection fully. Awkward and comical as the venerable sacristan was—perpetual as his blunders were—Father John wouldn't have parted with him for all the world—not even for that stately and magnificent sacristan—so fair and so full—who showed you the heads of the three Wise Men in the cathedral of Cologne, and about whom you so often told me when we were closeted together in your little red room on the Mall. Innumerable are the anecdotes they have in every house in Waterford about Father John Sheehan, and Halfpenny his clerk. One specially amuses me. Father John, you remember, always made it a rule to give a course of sermons during Lent. They began the evening of the first Monday after Ash-Wednesday, and ended the Friday evening immediately preceding Palm-Sunday. Controversial sermons for the most part, Father John had to quote largely from the Fathers. During these sermons, the chapel was lit with candles. St. Patrick's couldn't afford gas. One evening, Father John was in the middle of a passage from St. Jerome (it was a very long passage) when the candles on either side of him, on the ledge of the pulpit, grew altogether too dim. Father John moved St. Jerome up close under the wick of one of them, and staring with all his might through his spectacles, did his best to read on. All to no purpose. The carrotty snuff of the candle threw a cloud on the book. "And," says Father John, making another desperate attempt, "and St. Jerome says—snuff the candles, Halfpenny"—and Father John sat down until the sacristan with his brass snuffers threw more light upon the passage.

The subscriptions for the new Catholic church of Tramore are pouring in with a glorious tide. I have seldom witnessed such eagerness, interest, and enthusiasm in favor of any similar project. But Father Nicholas Cantwell is beloved, and Tramore is a beautiful little spot—the pride of our country—and a new Church is wanted. You've often been in the old one, and you will remember how disproportionate in size and accommodation it was to the congregation which on Sundays and Holidays used to pour into it. Pour into it! Why, hundreds were compelled to keep out of it. There they used to be—and there they may still be seen—whilst Mass is going on—kneeling on the graves in the yard outside—two here—three there—half-a-dozen away at the wall behind the sacristy—and ever so many on their marrow-bones about the doors, with their heads against the door-posts. A meeting took place last Sunday week in the vestry of the present chapel. Father Cantwell himself was in the chair. Sandy Sherlock, of Killaspy; Tom Strange; Alderman Slaney; Edmund Power; and quite a number of your friends were present. Progress was reported. It appears that the stone for the contemplated structure will be gratuitously supplied from the quarries on the estates of Grogan Morgan, of the county Wexford. The newspapers of the adjoining counties—the Kilkenny Journal and Tipperary Free Press for instance—warmly contribute their services in aid of the movement. I fervently pray that Father Nicholas Cantwell—one of the noblest priests in all Ireland—will be spared to see this glorious work brought to its consummation—will be spared to hear the holy bell from the lofty tower pealing loud above the sound of the waves, as they roll in from the Atlantic.

I know you will forgive my writing so much upon this one topic. As a son of old Waterford you will be interested in it and as for me, who could be more interested in it than your devoted friend,

THE METAL MAN.

Letter from Dublin.

DUBLIN, Oct. 20th.

I took a run down to Clongowes last week. My object was not so much to pay a visit to the college, as to have a look at some of the old scenes we used to ramble through when we were boys together. Leaving the Dublin train at Salins, I set out on the road to Clane. Clane is something between three and four miles from Salins. A mile and a half from the latter place, I turned off into a bye-road to Bodenstown churchyard. The world knows by this the noble fellow that's buried there. Davis has told us all in that glorious lyric of his, commencing with—

"In Bodenstown churchyard there is a lone grave,
And round it the wild winter winds rave."

Words which flow in and ebb like the strong deep tide among the caves of Slyne Head. A lone grave, sure enough, it is. The ruins in the churchyard are such as you see all over Ireland. The two gables and lateral walls of a chapel, years and years and years ago gone to ruin. Dark and thick is the ivy clinging to the crumbling stones. A dusty brown for the most part, the stones here and there are mottled with the gray frost of age. No architectural beauty redeems the mean poverty of the ruin. It might be the ruin of an humble farm house, for all the evidence to the contrary. Within the walls, the green mounds under which the dead sleep are scarcely visible, such a rank growth of hemlock, dock-leaves, nettles, deadly night-shade, and briers fills the inclosure. The slime of snails varnishes the damp masonry, and spiders weave dusty rags in the four corners. There are two or three alders in there, too, knitting their roots in and out of the human bones in the fat mould, and across the branches, close to the stem, the spiders knit their dingy fabrics also. One might think the flesh even of the dead would creep in such a place as that. Outside the walls the graves are more numerous. In truth, they are hardly to be counted. They press upon each other—lap over one another—run into one another—so promiscuously. A low stone wall incloses the graveyard. A few rough shaggy bushes—furze and brambles—work their way out of it, through the loose stones, at different points. Otherwise, it would have a dismal look.

Close to the southern wall of the ruined chapel—side by side with it—lies the large heavy slab of black marble which marks the spot where Theobald Wolfe Tone sleeps. For years the great republican Rebel lay there without the slightest recognition. Still there was a tradition whispered through the neighborhood, that such a one was buried in Bodenstown, but in what exact spot it was impossible to tell. I myself recollect being there, fifteen years ago, vainly trying to discover some clue to the secret. With the help, however, of Dr. Madden, Davis was enabled to ascertain clearly what had so long remained a mystery. And so, they set a subscription on foot among the young Nationalists in Dublin, and with the money they had this broad slab of native marble plainly wrought and laid upon the breast of the noblest Roman of them all. McNevin, and Duffy, and, if I don't mistake, Doheny, as well as Davis and Madden, were present when the gentle solemnity took place. There is a simple but expressive notice of the dead carved upon a stone, from the pen of Davis—it is such a one as Wolfe Tone would himself have written of a generous, brave, and gifted comrade—so pure, loving, direct it is. I took it down in pencil, but at this moment cannot lay my hand upon it. You shall have it in some future letter. And there lies Wolfe Tone—the man who dared all, risked all, but lost all for Ireland! There the noble fellow lies—in a desolate, ugly, old churchyard—an outcast, as it were, in death—whilst the kings who wronged (as only kings can wrong) the land his blood was shed for, show their saucy heads in the public places of the very city where he died.

Such was the first station of my pilgrimage in Kildare. I performed many others, and in due time you shall have them all from your friend,

KILMAINHAM.

The Belfast Ulsterman reports that, as the Rev. Mr. O'Kane was returning from a sick call in Ballykillbeg, and had got as far as Ballydugan, he was met by six ruffians, on a jaunting-car, who immediately, on recognizing him, one pulled a pistol out of his breast and fired at him, but fortunately the motion of the car saved the reverend gentleman's life. The driver plied his whip to the horse, and the bloodthirsty scoundrels got off, cheering like hellhounds. Next day the proprietor of the car refused the Rev. Mr. O'Kane the names of either driver or passengers.

We regret, says the Tuam Herald, to be compelled to record an increase in the tide of emigration this season. Numerous batches pass every day through this town, on their way to ports of embarkation, from Mayo and the north western portions of Galway. The emigrants of this year are, for the most part, the sons and daughters of apparently comfortable parents.

The Wexford People states that Mr. Clifie, of Belview, his son and two daughters, have been received into the Catholic Church.

Irish News.

Napoleon was accustomed to wear a coat of mail under his clothes, and which he rarely went without. On his departure once for Belgium, he thought it best to guard against those dangers with which he was threatened—having all Europe leagued against him—by every means in his power. He accordingly sent for a clever workman, and asked if he thought himself competent to make a coat of mail of such texture that no weapon whatever could penetrate. On the artificer answering in the affirmative, Napoleon agreed to give him 18,000 francs, the sum asked. On the day fixed, the man brought his work to the palace. Napoleon quickly examined it, and ordered the workman to put it on himself. The man obeyed. Napoleon took two pistols, saying, "We shall now see whether this coat of mail is of the texture you promised me." He fired at his breast; the cuirass resisted. "Turn around." The man obeyed. The second ball struck his back, and with the same result. The poor artificer half dead with fright, thought these trials would be sufficient, but he was mistaken in his calculation. Bonaparte next armed himself with a long fowling piece, and made the same experiment on the shoulders, back and breast of the trembling patient. Happily the cuirass resisted, and saved the inventor from so cruel a trial. "How much am I to pay you," said Napoleon, "after this noble exploit?" "Eighteen thousand francs," stammered the affrighted artificer. "No such thing, sir," said Napoleon, "I shall give you thirty-six thousand francs," and gave an order on his treasurer for that amount.

An attempt is being made on the part of landowners, merchants and others interested in the trade of Macroom, and the prosperity of the surrounding district, to get up a railway from Cork to Macroom, along the valley of the Bride. A provisional committee has been appointed for carrying out the object, and some preliminary meetings have been already held. A circular has been issued by the committee, which estimates that the traffic passing into Cork from Macroom for one year, ending 27th Oct., 1855, at the low rates of 5s. per ton on goods, and 2s. each, on the average, for second and third class passengers, for the entire distance of twenty-four miles, would produce an income of £6.p40; and the traffic between Macroom and the intermediate stations, cannot be estimated at less than £1,000.

The Clonmel Chronicle states that those having the custody of the very little property left available for his creditors by that greatest of public robbers, John Sadleir, have for some days past been engaged in destroying the very fine herd of deer, which were such an ornament to the demesne of Kilcommon, and which, independent of their beauty, are just now of much value, and have been making away with them to feast their friends with the venison belonging to the dupes of their unprincipled employer, and which should, even though a comparative trifle, have been made available to help the paltry dividend his estate will pay.

The Dublin Freeman reports that Hossan, the sculptor, has returned from Paris, whither he had taken his noble colossal statute of the Liberator to have it cast in bronze, and where he has made an arrangement for the purpose, with Messrs. Eck and Durand, the most celebrated founders of works of sculpture in the world. The statue is intended for Limerick, whose citizens have borne the expense attendant upon the operation of casting, &c.

There is not a space of ground in Paris allowed to be vacant, as government insists on the landlords converting it to some use, and the result is, that more houses have been built in that city within the last four years than in London in the last eight years.

Le Nord says that the Grand Duke of Tuscany "complains of the crowd of English tourists who invade his state, and who put themselves in communication with the revolutionary chiefs, thereby encouraging agitation."

Letters from Austrian officers of the Principalities give anything but a pleasing sketch of their experience. They are shunned by all the respectable inhabitants, and the greater number appear to have no other solace than gambling.

The Duke of Sutherland has intimated his intention to contribute £500 to the fund of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, for endowing churches in localities destitute of the means of religious instruction.

On the 16th ult., an extension line of railway from Randalstown to Cookstown, was publicly inaugurated by the Lord Lieutenant. The day was rather unfavorable, but the attendance was very numerous, and comprised the elite of Belfast and the surrounding districts.

The Mayor of Limerick is collecting funds in Liverpool, Glasgow and other seaports trading with that city, to erect there a Sailors' Home.

George Henry Moore is to be entertained at a public banquet, in token of his services, as a member of parliament, in the cause of Tenant Right.

The Wexford Guardian reports that during the eclipse of Monday, 13th ult., a large vessel went ashore at Blackwater. Unhappily, three of the crew met an untimely grave.

A gentleman named Meldahl, recently committed suicide at the Italian Hotel, Queenstown, by taking a quantity of laudanum in a glass of wine. The unfortunate gentleman was a Swede by birth, and was married in Queenstown.

The Colthurst estate, situated near Kerry, and consisting chiefly of head rents, were recently sold at a very high price, and bought in trust for the English capitalist.

G. N. Harvey, Esq., Brazilian Vice-Consul, has been appointed Vice-Consul for the kingdom of Portugal, for the port of Cork and district, in lieu of A. S. Lima, Esq., resigned.

There have been a great many conversions to the Catholic Church at Templemore lately, and amongst them is Mrs. Carden, of that town.

The consecration of the new and handsome Church of St. Patrick, Magheracloone, took place on Sunday, the 9th ult., in the presence of a number of the Clergy of the diocese of Clogher, and of a large assembly of the laity of the surrounding country.

During the week ending the 18th ult., 150 persons left Belfast for New York.

The head quarters of the Resident Magistrate for the county Wexford have been changed from Enniscorthy to Wexford.

Mr. Gillespie has been elected Resident Apothecary in the Cork South Infirmary.

The Waterwitch, 400 tons, lately sailed from Dublin to Buenos Ayres, with a general cargo and 115 emigrants. In reference to which the Dublin Freeman's Journal says :—"The emigrants are all from the neighborhood of Mullingar, and belong to the most respectable of the farming tenantry of that district, whence we learn what perhaps is very little known, that an emigration upon a limited scale, but attended with the most beneficial results to the working classes who have gone out, has been steadily going on from the county of Westmeath for the last fifteen or twenty years, and the community of Irish in Buenos Ayres amounts in number to 12,000 souls, all Roman Catholic, well provided with an excellent clergyman residing among them, and of whom the Rev. Anthony Fahey has for many years past held a prominent position among his flock. This reverend gentleman has, we understand, been the instrument of founding among them a hospital, and latterly a society of the Sisters of Mercy for the education of the rising generation. The pursuits from which the Irish in Buenos Ayres derive so much advantage, are shipbuilding for the port and agricultural pursuits generally for the supply of the city. The value of the production of wool in the province of Buenos Ayres 15 years ago, did not exceed £100,000. Now its yearly value approximates close upon a million, and meets with ready markets in Belgium, France and England. The Governments bordering on the River Platte act with the greatest kindness to the Irish, and as the latter are all the religion of the country, it harmonizes the two races. We understand the Irish emigrants to Buenos Ayres improve greatly in active and steady habits after a residence of four years, and fortunes of from £5,000 to £50,000 are quite common among them. The yearly sums transmitted to the county of Westmeath regularly increases in amount, the object of the senders being to assist their relations, or to pay the passage of those whom they may have induced to join them. The persons who sailed by the Waterwitch have gone gone out at the earnest solicitation of their friends."

A medical gentleman was recently employed at Ballymena, county Antrim, to extract a patient's tooth. It was a grinder of large size, apparently sound, and so firmly seated that it broke in the effort for its removal. On examining that portion of the tooth which came off with the instrument, a very extraordinary worm-shaped animal was found adhering to the centre of it. On being carefully removed, without injury, it proved to be five-eights of an inch long, lively as an eel, of a blood red color, and about the thickness of a woollen thread. On viewing it through a microscope of limited power, it appeared to be ringed or jointed in its formation. No legs were visible, and it moved by erecting its body, arch-like, in the centre, and projecting either end at pleasure—for it appeared to have a head at each extremity. One of the heads was large, flat and broad in proportion to the creature's size, with a capacious mouth and two black eyes, set very widely apart, and projecting from the upper part of its head. The other head was smaller, and a lengthened snout, and a mouth opening from the underneath. This case is regarded as one of great novelty, if not entirely without precedent.

The annual show of the Portlaw Agricultural Society, which is under the fostering care of the Marquis of Waterford, was held on the 20th ult., at Portlaw, and was in every respect most successful. The attendance of the local gentry and farmers, in the locality was large ; and the stock—in cattle, pigs and poultry—was in fine condition, and exceeded the last show. The friends and supporters of the society dined together in the evening—the Marquis in the chair. The dinner was in every respect recherche, and, altogether, along with the viands, which were supplied in abundance, was done ample justice to by the company at large, which mustered over 200.

There is no truth whatever, says the Limerick Reporter, in the statement which has been made, that the aged Patrick O'Brien, immortalized by the pencil of our great Irish artist, Haverty, as the Limerick Piper, is dead. The contrary is the fact. The old man, however, who has reached near ninety years of age, is living in poverty in Nicholas street, Englishtown, parish of St. Mary's, and any contribution for him, given to the Rev. Mr. Ryan, C.C., St. Mary's, or any of the Catholic clergy, will be thankfully acknowledged.

Mrs. Margaret Knox, the wife of an opulent farmer, residing at Ballybricken, in the county of Limerick, and connected with many respectable families in the county and in Tipperary, died suddenly on the evening of the 18th ult. Her death created a great sensation in the neighborhood, and rumors of a mysterious nature were afloat regarding the sad occurrence. The Coroner was sent for and an inquest held. The jury returned a verdict of having died from natural causes.

At the Limerick Petty Sessions, Anne MacCormack, a countrywoman, was prosecuted by Mr. John Lane, on behalf of the Market Trustees, for exposing for sale in the market two firkins of butter, alleged to have been fraudulently made up. Mr. Lane pointed out in each of the firkins what he conceived to be the fraud, half an inch of inferior butter being placed around the lumps. She was fined. 20s in each firkin.

At the fair of Rathkeale all the pigs were bought up by buyers from Waterford, Clonmel and Limerick—a Mr. Connell gave £10 for one pig ; bacon was about 50s. per cwt. There was a good demand for small cattle, but few of a superior description were purchased.

According to a recent resolution of the Board, the Limerick and Foynes Railway will not open to Askeaton, as was expected, but will remain as at present, until completed to Foynes. The works are being executed by that model contractor, Mr. Dargan, with great vigor, and will be finished by July next.

Some cowardly ruffian threw a stone at the Guard of the train returning to Rathkeale, on the 19th ult., near Adara. It weighed about four pounds. The poor man had a most miraculous escape, as the stone hit the door of his van quite close to his head.

At the Rathkeale Quarter Sessions, a man named Brophy, who was employed on the railway, got twelve months' imprisonment and hard labor, for stealing some goods from the Rathkeale station, on the night of the 27th ult.

Mahony Vincent Watson, Esq., youngest son of Alderman Watson, of Limerick, distinguished himself by superior answering in science and classics, in his examinations, as senior sophister, Trinity College, Dublin, last week.

A potato digging machine has been on trial at the Model Farm. The operation gave general satisfaction to the farmers present. The time required to turn out a statute acre, would be about one hour and fifty minutes.

The mission conducted by the Fathers of Vincent de Paul, closed its labors on the 19th ult., in Maryboro'. Nothing could exceed the zeal, piety, and devotion of the people.

The consumption of tea in Ireland is greatly increasing. In 1839, duty was paid on 4,008,148lbs.; this was less than-a-pound per head per annum of the population. In 1854, the number of pounds paid duty on was 8,549,841, or nearly one and a-third pound per head—an increase more than double. This result is a pleasing contrast to what Professor Johnston, in his Chemistry of Common Life, says, when speaking of tea :—"All Europe has chosen its prevailing beverage. Spain and Italy delight in chocolate ; France and Germany, and Sweden and Turkey in coffee ; Russia, Holland, and England in tea, while poor Ireland makes a warm drink from the husks of the cocoa, the refuse of the chocolate mills of Italy and Spain." Tea appears to be replacing tobacco ; as one increases the other decreases. Tobacco paid duty in 1839 on 5,128,850lbs ; in 1854, on only 4,896,042lbs. The public, if not the revenue, must benefit by the result.

Constable P. Arthur, and Sub-Constables Kenny and M'Cracken, says the Nenagh Guardian, have been awarded a half-chevron each, for services rendered during the late militia disturbances in Nenagh. It will be recollected that the two latter were the men who, at much personal risk, on the night of the 7th July, succeeded, by means of a ruse, in conveying, notwithstanding the vigilance of the mutineers, a message to the military authorities in Limerick and Templemore, and on which troops were next day dispatched to the relief of the town.

The Rev. Patrick Boland, R. C. C., has been transferred from Maryboro' to Carlow at his own solicitation. On leaving Maryboro' the pupils of the Christian Brothers' school, presented the rev. gentleman with a copy of the Holy Bible, beautifully bound in morocco, and richly gilt. The pupils also presented the Rev. Mr. Boland with an address expressive of their gratitude for his more than paternal care of them while he was in the parish.

On the 13th ult. an assassination took place at the Cunagh camp. On that day a soldier of the 56th, while on sentry in the B division, got into dispute with a man of the 18th Royal Irish, the result of which was, that a stone was flung at the head of the former, immediately after which the 18th man ran away, but was followed by a comrade of the sentry, and by him bayonetted in three different parts of the body till life was extinct. The occurrence has created great sensation in the neighborhood of the camp.

The Waterford papers state that potato digging progresses fast, and on the whole, the crop is a good one ; but there is still enough of black ones to show that the disease is still in the country, and that it may again break out in a more malignant form. The turnip crop is near as good as usual ; the high price of labor appears in nearly every field, for the crop, in nearly every instance, is but very imperfectly worked.

Mr. Mark Perrin, son of Judge Perrin, has been appointed Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, in the room of Mr. Maziere Brady, who had been appointed Clerk of Affidavits, in the room of Mr. Hogan, who retires on two-thirds salary. The emolument of Mr. Brady's new office amount to £600 a year. The situation is one for life.

The Sisters of the "Good Shepherd" Convent, Limerick, gratefully acknowledge the receipt of £2 from John H. Leyden, Esq., Black River, America, per Robert M'Mahon, Esq., and £1 from Very Rev. Mortimer Collins, P.P., Shanagolden.

Sir John Fitzgerald, Bart., M.P., for the county of Clare, has given £30, and Lady Fitzgerald has contributed £20 towards the building of St. Mary's-on-Fergus Catholic church.

Commissions have been signed by Viscount Lismore, Lieut. of the county, in the 2nd or North Tipperary Regiment of Militia. Ensign Henry Vowell to be Lieutenant, vice Thomas M'Craith, promoted. Ensign Robert Ely to be Lieutenant, vice Richard Acres, resigned.

Lota Lodge, the residence of Smith Barry, Esq., lately rented by Lord Midleton, took fire on the morning of the 22nd ult., and was burned to the ground. It cost £10,000 to build by the celebrated architect, Morrison.

Lucan Bingham, Esq., Sub-Inspector of Constabulary, for many years stationed in Tulla, county Clare, has been transferred to Mitchelstown, county Cork, vice Sub-Inspector M'Guire, removed to Tralee.

Government have decided that the widows of superannuated officers of the Constabulary should receive a similar annuity as if their husbands had died even on active service in the force.

The Mining Company of Ireland have arranged to work the mines discovered by Francis Lisabe, Esq., on Nagheramenagh, county Fermanagh, the estate of Mr. Johnston, near Belleek.

The Seminary founded at Tralee, shortly after his elevation to the ranks of the Hierarchy, by the Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty, has been placed in connexion with the Catholic University.

On Sunday, the 19th ult., the sum of £140 was collected for St. John's Cathedral, Limerick, in the parishes of Croagh and Kilkenny.

Prof. Ornsby, of the Catholic University, is to deliver two lectures on "The Life and Times of Cicero," before the Cork Young Men's Society.

B. Hanrahan, Esq., Carr street, Limerick, has sent a ton of coal to the Young Men's Society, Limerick, for use in their rooms, Charlotte's Quay.

Caran Smith, formerly Recorder of Limerick, died in Dublin, on the 18th ult., at the age of 70.

Sub-Inspector J. S. Watkins has been transferred, at his own request, from the district of Glenties (county Donegal) to Tullamore.

County Inspector John Duncan, of the Constabulary, Tipperary, has been promoted to the rank of Second Class County Inspector.

At the recent registry of votes in Athlone, the conservatives claim a triumph.

Sub-Inspector Ireland, Tralee, has been transferred to Shinrone, and is to be replaced by Sub-Inspector M'Guire.

The Wexford Independent says that Capt. Green, of Ballyharty, has raised potatoes six inches in diameter.

The body of the late Baron De Robeck, who was drowned in the river Liffey, on the 30th of September, has been found.

W. Cairns, Esq., Drogheda, has received the Commission of the Peace from the Lord Chancellor for the county Meath.

The Sisters of Mercy, Rathkeale, most gratefully acknowledge the receipt of £5 from Lord Southwell.

The Liberal votes of Waterford, obtained a majority over the conservatives, at the recent Revision Court held in that city.

At a meeting of the cess payers of Galway, held in the Court House on the 18th ult., the following resolutions in reference to railway extension in the county were adopted —"That we approve of a guarantee of 5 per cent upon a sum not exceeding £6,000 per mile being given by the county for the purpose of constructing a line of railway from Anthenry to Tuam, provided that a bill be brought into parliament during the next session for the purpose, and that our county members, and the members for the county of the town, be requested to support the bill in the lower house, and the peers of parliament resident in this country be requested to support it in the House of Lords." "That we pledge this county to further guarantee at the same rate an extension of the line from Tuam to the borders of the county of Galway, in conjunction with the county of Mayo, so as to connect Athenry and Castlebar." "That we pledge this county to guarantee at the same rate a line of railway from a point on the present line to Loughrea and thence to Gort, and to support a bill for that purpose."

The Derry Standard reports that on the 14th ult. in an affray between two men at the Sion Mills, near Strabane, on last Tuesday evening, a person named Allen was so much injured as to render his death almost certain. According to the information received it would appear that Allen was land steward to J. Herdman, Esq., of the Sion Mills, and for some time past a feeling the reverse of friendly had existed between him and the coachman, a native of Dublin. The coachman was accused by Allen of having ill-treated a valuable horse belonging to Mr. Herdman, which charge the former denied. On the evening of Tuesday the two men were drinking in a public house, when an altercation arose between them, blows were given, but nothing very serious resulted until the parties reached the road. Allen was going home when he was overtaken by the coachman, and beaten in a most inhuman manner. The unfortunate man was removed to his own house, where he now lies in a very dangerous state. The other is in custody.

The directors of the Great Southern and Western Railway Company are about to hold an extraordinary meeting to discuss a subject of considerable importance just now—namely, the establishment of railway communication with Fermoy, under the new military arrangements the largest garrisoned town in the south of Ireland. At present there are two undertakings before the public—one projected by the company, the other by the inhabitants of the town. The former is intended to connect Fermoy with the Great Southern Line at Mallow, or some other point selected, with a view to communication with Dublin as well as Cork ; while by the latter it is proposed to communicate with Cork city and harbor by the shortest route. The company is also seeking for powers to make a railway through Nenagh to Limerick, which, if completed, would tend to prevent any of the Dublin traffic going over the Waterford and Limerick line.

On the night of the 14th ult. the constabulary, it is supposed, acting on private information, arrested in Hearn's public house, Ballinamon, county Leitrim, six persons, on most of whom papers connected with Ribbonism were found. When the police entered six persons were in the room, one of whom, a person far above the ordinary class of persons heretofore supposed to be connected in any way with Ribbonism, was at first permitted to depart, but after they had seen the contents of the papers, they immediately followed and arrested him in his own house. They all remain in custody, Mr. Kelly, R. M., having refused to take bail, although in the case of the person above alluded to it was offered to any amount.

On the 11th ult. Mr. Thomas Hickey, the great Celtic scholar of the South, breathed his last in his humble quiet cottage near the town of Killenaule, county Tipperary, having attained his 80th year He was a patriot of the loftiest sentiments, pure and unsullied in his motives ; and though an old man, yet full of fire and enthusiasm. He never despaired of Ireland's freedom. Mr. Hickey was professor of Irish for upwards of twenty years, in St. John's College, Waterford, during which time he was respected and highly esteemed by the professors and students of that college. Very many priests of the diocese of Waterford and Lismore studied the Irish language under his direction.

On Friday morning, says the Belfast Ulsterman, Superintendent M'Ghee's attention was called to a man named Thomas Keenan, who with his wife and child, were landed on the quay from the Glasgow boat, having been sent across by the parochial athorities at Paisley. The man had been 19 years in Scotland, and the woman 11, and they both originally belonged to the county Cavan. The woman suffered greatly from the sea sickness, and was near her confinement. Captain M'Bride, with his customary attention, gave them breakfast, and assisted them with money to reach their home. On Wednesday last, a man, seventy-seven years of age, was sent to Belfast by the parochial authorities of London. Captain M'Bride gave them refreshments, and sent him away in search of his friends.

There have been, says the Tralee Mercury, several sudden deaths in our town during the week. Among them we notice that of Mr. Michael Gorman, an industrious and old inhabitant, who on preparing to go to bed on Thursday night, after eating a good dinner and good supper, fell dead. On Wednesday, Mr. Thomas Quilter, a respectable young man residing near Tralee, shortly after riding into the residence of a relative, died immediately on his arrival.

The Wexford People reports that the barque Irrawady, of Glaswow, Captain Thomas Miller, bound to Rangoon and Mulmain, with a general cargo, went ashore on Blackwater bank, the wind blowing at the same time from S. S. E. Her crew consisted of 15 men, including the captain, three seamen, were unhappily drowned. Great quantities of wreck have discovered floating about the harbor.

A grand ball was given on the evening of the 16th ult. by his Grace, the Duke of Devonshire, to the inhabitants of Lismore.

The inhabitants of Whitegate have returned thanks to Lord Fermoy, for a large and valuable house which his lordship has generously given them for public schools.

The annual exhibition of stock, farm produce, &c., of the Rathdown Farming Society at Bray exceeded those of previous years.

The members of the county and city of Cork Medical Protective Association have addressed a memorial to Lord Palmerston, complaining of the working of the Medical Charities Act.

Mr. Gillespie of Cork, has been elected resident apothecary to the Cork South Infirmary, vacant by the death of Doctor Trayer.

In Galway thirty thousand herrings were taken one day last month.

Waterford papers complain of an inadequate supply of water in that city, as well as its being inferior in quality.

REMINISCENCES OF A '98 CORRESPONDENT.

From the Dublin Telegraph.

LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD AND ARTHUR O'CONNOR.

"In the latter end of '97 the leaders of the United cause established a newspaper entitled The Press, to forward the movement for the liberation of Ireland. The first seventeen numbers were published by Mr. Whitworth, an Englishman, in Upper Exchange street, Dublin. The subsequently celebrated Peter Finnerty, who was to have been a compositor on it, was introduced to Lord Edward Fitzgerald and Arthur O'Connor, who found him to be a man of great talent, tact, and patriotism. They at once decided that he should be employed at the publishing office, in Church lane, College Green, where he had to conduct some very important correspondence for the United Irishmen. His name was to The Press, and Lord Edward Fitzgerald on several occasions expressed his entire approval of Peter Finnerty's conduct.

"The first editor was Mr. Brennan, a very able writer; but a man of questionable integrity, as subsequent events proved. Brennan having been committed to gaol for debt, he wrote to the proprietors, to the effect that if they did not 'pay his debts immediately he would place all the MSS. which he had in his possession in the hand of the castle authorities.' Brennan's threat was treated with contempt; and Arthur O'Connor wrote to him in these words: — 'If you wish to act a base, dishonorable part towards us and the holy cause you have engaged to sustain, we must regret it — we must likewise regret having been associated with a man capable of such baseness. Do your utmost. Posterity shall decide upon the rectitude of the cause you have expressed your intention of betraying.'

"In a few days after, Brennan was liberated by the Government, who no doubt perceived that he was worth purchasing; but I am not aware of his having appeared before the public again in connection with politics.

"The aspect of Irish affairs looking very perilous, and prosecution following prosecution, Mr. Whitworth declined printing The Press any longer. Mr. Stockdale of Abbey street, brought out the 18th number, and continued to print it as long as it was permitted by government.

"When Finnerty was found guilty of a libel, another name was obliged to be entered at the Stamp Office. Arthur O'Connor's name was then attached to it. Although there were upwards of three thousand copies struck off each publication day (Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings), the day that Arthur O'Connor's name was announced as printer, it got a rise of fifteen hundred, and increased to six thousand, which was the utmost that could be printed in time by the presses in use at that period. The name of Arthur O'Connor was every where received with enthusiasm by the people—particularly in the counties of Kildare and Meath. In truth, almost all Protestants who espoused the United cause, were generous, disinterested, noble-minded men, who truly loved Fatherland. What a contrast with the low, mean, heartless 'Souper Protestants' of these days!

"At the time Finnerty was sentenced to be pilloried at the front of Newgate, Lord Edward Fitzgerald and Arthur O'Connor went to Green street to encourage him while in the pillory. There were several thousands present, and the people seemed much excited. When they reached the guard of soldiers, Lord Edward endeavored to pass one of them. The soldier raised his gun and was about to strike him, when the High Sheriff, Mr. Pemberton, immediately advanced, and ordered him not to act without orders. He then gave directions to the officer in command of the guard to allow Lord Edward Fitzgerald and Mr. O'Connor to pass. They both continued near Finnerty during the time he was suffering the penalty. Lord Edward Fitzgerald exclaimed in a loud voice — 'Keep up your spirits, my boy. There are bright sunny days in store yet for Old Ireland! Cheer up, my boy! The poor people never forget those who have suffered for them.' After this short address poor Peter Finnerty looked as happy as one of the primitive martyrs at the stake. The High Sheriff seemed puzzled as to how he would act; but owing to his mild and kindly addresses to the people, all passed off quietly. I could perceive, however, that the officers and soldiers were inclined to fire on the people; and a large number of the populace had arms concealed on their person.

"Immediately after leaving Green-street, Lord Edward and O'Connor went to Stockdale's office. Having entered into conversation about what had taken place with the soldiers, Lord Edward took two small pistols from his waistcoat pockets, and said that if the soldier had struck him he would have shot him dead. If that had taken place, I am confident the entire guard would have been disarmed in a few minutes, for the crowd was so close to them at that moment, that they would not be able to use their muskets. Lord Edward Fitzgerald was the most determined man I had ever seen. Nevertheless, he was mild and gentle to all those who had communication with him on public affairs.

"So hostile were the low Orangemen to the Press newspaper, that the messengers who carried the papers from the printer to the publishing office in Church-lane, were on several occasions waylaid, in consequence of which the printers formed themselves into a guard to protect the newspapers the men were conveying. One night a printer named Hardy (a lion-hearted, generous soul) and myself went for that purpose. Hardy was armed with a large pistol, and a short black-thorn stick; and I had a piece of metal from the printing office, about two feet long and an inch thick. We had left the messengers safe in Church-lane; and consequently went through College Green, Trinity street, and St. Andrew street. As we passed into William street, Hardy, by the light of the old oil lamps, observed Major Sirr advancing at a distance, and immediately determined on shooting him as he came up, by discharging his pistol in the Major's face, as he was supposed to have worn armour about his body. Having an extreme objection to the assassination, I strongly urged my friend Hardy to abandon all idea of committing a crime so revolting to every Christian sentiment. He yielded to my entreaties; and in another moment Major Sirr passed us, little knowing what a narrow escape he had for his life. The Major surveyed us from head to foot, my anxiety was intense, for I feared the warm Celtic blood of my friend Hardy on meeting a man so universally disliked by all true-hearted Irishmen.

"Counsellor Sampson was the conductor of the Press. The paper continued to be printed until the 68th number, when a guard of the Cavan Militia, under the command of a rampant Orangeman, Maxwell, came and seized the office, carried away all the newspapers that had been printed, and destroyed the type, presses, &c., in a wanton manner. Major Sirr and his colleague, Jemmy O'Brien, were both present. The Major searched the house for treasonable papers, but there were none of that character kept there. The Liberty was our head quarters for anything in that shape. Major Sirr was, on this occasion, in his usual cool, calculating temper. As to Jemmy O'Brien, he was nothing short of a cowardly robber, in addition to his perjuries and murders. When he visited the houses of persons on pretext of searching for papers, he repeatedly went to their desks, cabinets, &c., and finding guineas in gold, immediately exclaimed—'Major, I have here an unquestionable proof of treason; they seem to have no confidence in the banks; they are evidently preparing for the plunder of the loyal and well-disposed.'

"Major Sirr.—'The case looks very bad, indeed, O'Brien. I am fully aware that the Romanists are seeking gold in exchange for notes every day. It looks suspicious. We must watch them closely.'

"The idea of preferring a charge of robbery against O'Brien or Sirr, would have been considered as an act of madness; for the word—the mere assertion—of either would weigh down the oaths of twenty respectable Catholics of '98.

"While the Press continued to be printed at Stockdale's, one of the apprentices, William Purcell, was passing through Back lane, and hearing some noise proceeding from a public house, he stopped to ask a man at the door what was the matter. The fellow immediately collared him, and he was dragged in. Purcell then discovered that he was in the custody of no less a personage than Jemmy O'Brien, who had been placed at the door by Major Sirr. The major had got information that Sergeant Downes, of the King's county militia, who had been appointed to a post in the rebel army, was in the house, and went with his party to arrest him. Downes had his regimentals on, and as soon as he saw the major enter the room he attempted to draw his sword, but his arm was seized by the powerful grasp of O'Brien, and he was immediately surrounded by the whole gang. Purcell and Downes were then handcuffed, and marched to the castle guard-house. Sergeant Downes asked Purcell his name, and as he thought his young companion was alarmed by his confinement, desired him to keep up his spirits, as they had no charge against him, and only seized him to prevent his giving any alarm; but (said he) as to me, before the next day's sun will set I will be in eternity!

"After talking for some time to Purcell, he laid down on the guard bed and slept for some time. When he awoke, he rallied Purcell again, as he appeared to be much fretted, and said he would give him a song. He accordingly gave, in very good style, 'Paddies Evermore.' At six o'clock in the morning, a guard arrived at the door, and commanded Sergeant Downes to be led forth. Downes then bade Purcell farewell, and was conveyed to the camp at the Naul, tried that day by a court martial, and immediately shot! Poor Downes! I knew him well. His fate was deeply regretted by all who were connected with the movement. Indeed, I saw the big tears running down Arthur O'Connor's face, when he heard the melancholy intelligence. Sergeant Downes was only thirty-five years of age, and about five feet and eleven inches in height. He was, I believe, a Protestant.

"About the same time, Mr. Astley, who kept the amphitheatre in Peter street—now the Molyneaux Asylum—made himself extremely obnoxious to the citizens of Dublin. He ordered his musicians to strike up 'Croppies lie Down,' and other insulting airs, twice every night, for the amusement of the low Orangemen who frequented the house; but friend Hardy, who was so anxious to dispatch the major, repaired with about thirty Liberty boys to Astley's, and having taken their position near the musicians, all was quiet until the orchestra commenced playing 'Croppies lie Down,' when Hardy started up and exclaimed—'Come, boys! now is the time. Forward!' In a few minutes all was confusion—broken heads and broken instruments. The Orangemen rushed to the rescue of Astley's party, but Hardy himself knocked them down in half-dozens, and retired with his party, after soundly thrashing the Orangemen. Astley's theatre never recovered the shock of this melee. The Kilkenny militia were on duty, but did not interfere. Doubtless the Ballyragget boys felt no sympathy for the Orangemen who only received their deserts.

"It is nearly fifty-nine years since I witnessed the scenes here detailed, and I recollect them as well as the incident of a year ago! They were sad times, and I hope the rising generation will never have the folly to do any act which may place them in the power of the Orange agents of England—for the Orangemen of 1856 are the same unpatriotic, bigoted, and uncharitable creatures towards their Catholic countrymen that their grandsires were sixty years ago. The leopard seldom changes his spots, or the tiger his ferocious disposition."

MAJOR SIRR AND HIS VICTIMS—JEMMY O'BRIEN'S WIFE.

As I remarked on a former occasion, not one amongst the old Orange school ever attempted to vindicate the memory of Major Sirr. It was quite impossible. He had a museum at the Castle, composed of many valuables—pictures, antiques, old coins, &c. When Lord Anglesey was Viceroy of Ireland, he "induced the Major" to give up Lord Edward Fitzgerald's watch to his family. I have heard it stated that he had Robert Emmet's missing watch in his museum. Such was not the case. Emmet's watch was found two years after his execution, in the hollow of a tree at the top of the garden of the house in Harold's cross. It was supposed that he got on the wall to effect an escape, and that on the approach of Major Sirr (who informed him he had the whole place surrounded) and the confusion attendant on the scene, the watch dropped. This watch was very valuable. The name of the maker, Boutelier, Paris, was on the case. Inside was engraved "Sarah Curran." The subsequent history of this relic of patriotism and romance was very interesting, and would extract a tear from the most heartless opponents of the old country's cause. Major Sirr had a pistol of very peculiar foreign workmanship amongst his collection, which belonged to Henry Sheares; also a ring, which the beautiful and devoted Maria Steele had presented as a souvenir to poor John Sheares. Her hair was encircled in it, and the poor victim of English cruelty valued it much. This ring was stolen from the Major in July, 1814—the treatment which Mr. Russell, an extensive builder, received from Sirr and his employers at the Castle, was of the most heartless character. They violated every constitutional right of the subject in his case, and could prove nothing against him. They, however, ruined his trade, and broke his heart. Mr. Russel was a zealous Catholic, and a good citizen.

The illustrious Henry Grattan gave Major Sirr one of the greatest castigations he ever received—not even from Curran; but the Major had no heart—the sensitive plant, with all its nicety of feeling, could never find a resting-place in his bosom.

Jemmy O'Brien had £200 at the time he was arrested for the murder of Hoey, and he left it in the care of Majors Sirr and Sands. He had apartments at the Castle, and was married to an English girl (I am informed) connected with Secretary Cooke's establishment. On the night of the day O'Brien was executed at Newgate, his wife was confined of a son, and on the following evening she was ordered by Major Sirr to quit the Castle. She then sought for the money which her husband left with the above named gentlemen; but was informed that they "handed it over" to the Crown. Mrs. O'Brien seemed a match for the "two Majors." She knew much of their vile doings in Dublin. Sirr remarked to Sands, "This woman has a shocking tongue; she would assert anything." To which Sands replied—"'Tis best to drop her easy; she has good back stair interest yet—I will give her £5." Major Sirr—"I will give her £10." In a few months after, she was placed on the Pension List at Dublin Castle, under the assumed name of Mrs. Sarah Dunne, which she enjoyed for years.

It is understood that selections from the Correspondence of Miss Mitford are in preparation by Rev. W. Harness, her executor and friend of many years.

A LECTURE ON CORK.

D. F. McCarthy recently delivered a lecture on Cork, before the Young Men's Society of that city. We quote the following summary of his discourse from the Cork Examiner:

I propose for your consideration the history of our native City. One might have imagined that for a Cork man to speak of the history of Cork, to Cork people, would be trite. Yet I believe you will admit, I could scarcely have selected a less hacknied theme. It is absolutely novel. Perhaps there is no one topic about which the generality of Cork People know less. I cannot remember having heard a lecture, a discourse, or an essay upon it, or any thing appertaining to it. Even amongst our most cultured classes, for ten persons who could recite to you the fortunes of a fourth-rate Italian, or German, or English town, scarcely one can tell of the various races that trod the very soil on which we stand, and whose very blood, in mingled current, flows in our own veins.

Yet I must not waste much time pleading that this should not be. It is not honorable, either to our patriotism or our intelligence. The Hottentot knows nothing of the land he treads: will refined and intelligent Cork people adopt a Hottentot precedent? It is said that the story of our city is very simple, and contains few remarkable incidents. Granted. Is it not easier to know; is it not less excusable not to know it? True knowledge, like true charity, begins at home. We have had enough of patriotism that rants, boasts, fights; let us have a little of the patriotism that knows, thinks, loves. For my part, I can scarcely believe in the affection that is ignorant, and is content to remain ignorant, of its own object.

Having stated that Cork was founded in or about the year A.D. 600, the lecturer proceeded at some length to describe the train of facts at home and abroad to which that date is an index—the confusion and barbarism that prevailed in Europe consequent on the fall of the Western Empire, and the barbarian colonization—the sanctity and learning fled "to take up its winter quarters" in Ireland, according to the expression of Gorres. Cork, he said, grew out of that state of things at home and abroad. If they were not so, it would not have been.

And now let me ask you—who founded our City? You know who founded Rome and Athens, and Corinth, and Constantinople. Who founded Cork? Perhaps not one in twenty of Corkmen could tell. But some one whispers a dear and well known name—Saint Finnbarr! Yes; our City was founded by a Saint, who was also a priest, a monk, and a scholar. Its founder had been reared by a Roman Priest, and himself knelt at "the footstool of the Apostles." Religion, learning — the Church of God and the authority of Rome—these, then, are not strange to Cork; they are native to it. But who was Saint Finnbarr? You remind me that a mere name is no better than a mere date. It, also, must have a definite idea behind it. And you rightly ask me, what definite idea does the name, Saint Finnbarr, represent? Lochan, the fair-haired, was a Connaughtman. He sprung of a Celtic sept, whose house lay on the Atlantic shore near where now stands the town of Galway. He was educated at Banchor, on the banks of Lough Erne, under St. Comgall, and a Roman Ecclesiastic, Macrobius, who was himself a pupil of Pope Saint Gregory the Great—of course long before that Pontiff had reached the purple, Lochan learned the lore of the ancients, and caught the enthusiasm of the time. Vowing himself to God, he vowed to do something in the great movement with which the nation and the world were throbbing. Solitude matured his purpose and purified his character. St. Comgall singled him out from a cluster of saints, and despatched him at the head of a mission to the southern parts of the island. Like so many of our saints, Lochan, or as he was then called, Fioun Bharra, or, as we say, Finnbarr — "the fair-haired" — seems to have had quite a poetic appreciation of natural beauty. It was in the midst of the lovely lake, called henceforward after him, Gougane Barra — or the hollow or recess of Saint Finnbarr — that he made his first attempt. That attempt was a success. Clan O'Leary mustered about him; throughout Desmond his fame ran; the dark valley resounded with the hum of scholastic and missionary labor; and from the heart of the hills rose the high song of worship. In some years he sought a wider field, and aimed at a greater work. He followed the stream whose source he had consecrated. Just at the point where it swells forth into a deep and stately river, he found another stately valley — less romantic, indeed, than the first, but fit to be the site of a great city. And on the sunny side of the hill, whose northern abutment we call "Gill Abbey," whose southern slope touches the waters of the little lake we call the "Lough," he planted his monastery, built his church, and opened his school. This work, too, prospered. Students and monks, scholars and saints, from far and near, gathered around the fair-haired Abbot, or grew under his rule. With a saint's instinct he thought his work incomplete until it had received the blessing of Rome. Accompanied by two like-minded friends, St. Maidoc of Erns, and Saint David of Menevia, in Wales, he crossed rough sea, and lands that man's passions had made more perilous than the ocean. It was by the hand of Pope St. Gregory the Great, that the first bishop of Cork was consecrated. As ever, St. Peter's blessing seemed fruitful. The school grew to the proportions of an University. The church crowned the ascent. The peillicesor wooden cottages of the students encircled the lake. A Brugh or village sprung up on the Corcach or marsh beneath. And before the mortal of its founder was shrined in silver beneath the high altar of his Cathedral, in the words of the chronicler, "a desert had been changed into a great city." Such was then Cork. The lecturer proceeded to give a picture of Cork a thousand years ago—its abbey, its university, its town, crowded with strangers, and the manners of the chiefs that frequented it and lived around it—especially the Court of the Righ-Corcach or King of Cork—the MacCarthiagh Mor. The Danish invasion was now described —who the Danes were—whence they came — how they settled down—how the peaceful little monastic city was now plundered and dismembered by these terrible sea pirates—how they were resisted — how at length they were not only conquered, but converted — how, finally, they turned their maritime skill to purposes of trade, founded some of our best civic families, and laid the basis of the commercial prosperity of Cork. The election of Gill Adha, Bishop, as described by St. Bernard of Clairvaux was a curious and characteristic narrative. The Norman invasion was next recounted—how Norman nobles with their ladies and troubadours, Saxon artisans, Aquitanian merchants, Gascon rovers settled down in the little Irish city, made their own of it, and made common cause against the native race — how the history of Cork for four hundred years might be summarized in the sentence "that it was an Anglo-Norman Fortress and Colony on the sea-board of a hostile Irish country." Speaking of the merits of that long contest, the lecturer said—"It appears to me that of both parties, the clash of whose arms scarcely ceased to resound in and about our city for four hundred years, that neither was wholly wrong. Each had some right upon its side; each had a claim on our sympathies; each sustained the struggle with astonishing courage, energy, and endurance. The Celt and the gallant families that became more Celtic, that he had a clear right to resist invasion. The colonists had no less right to keep what had descended to them, and to fight for their homes and their lives. And while we heartily sympathised with the great old race that resisted for centuries the conquerors before whom the greatest nations of the world had yielded, we must admire, too, the proud little city — state, standing out alone for ages in a land of foes, making its own laws, asserting its own rights, extending its trade, and preserving its integrity against all odds, and through all dangers.

Let us pause for a moment in the reign of Elizabeth, and have a glimpse of the town as it was then. Cambden, a cotemporary, tells us that "it is of an oval form enclosed with walls, and encompassed with the channel of the river, which also crosses it, and is not accessible but by bridges, lying along, as it were, in one direct street, with a bridge over it. It is a populous little trading town, and much resorted to—but so beset with enemies on all sides that they are obliged to keep a constant watch as if the town were continually besieged, and dare not marry out their daughters into the country, but contract one with another amongst themselves, whereby all the citizens are related in some way or other." Its port was much frequented by strangers, both for the advantage of fishing in the harbor, and for purposes of trade. The inhabitants were industrious and opulent. They travelled much, and many foreign merchants resided with them. The mayor and bailiffs, with the advice of the town council, governed the city. They were practically almost independent of external authority; and their edicts had nearly the force of laws. They levied taxes, regulated commerce, and modified the English laws of property; they did not value much privilege of representation in parliament—sometimes refused to attend—and sometimes declined to yield the subsidies they did not vote. The Mayor was admiral of the harbor and river. His jurisdiction extended a mile all round the city; but practically, I suppose, it seldom exceeded the circuit of the city walls; for we find that incessant watch had to be kept on the gates, night and day; and that when the citizens "walked out for recreation" they should be "with strength of men attended." Some of the greater city families, however seem to have singularly combined the martial with the mercantile character. We have seen that the Barrys had a castle at Shandon, and the Skiddys within the walls. So it was with others. The Roches built Shippool castle—the Sarsfields, Garrycloyne. The Meades had a fortress at Meadestown, and the Martels at Ballymartle. Thus, while the artisan took his turn at defending the walls, the stout Burgher merchant left his counting house to don his arms and sally out of his castle at the head of his retainers like a feudal lord. And so they lived and fought for centuries. With the 17th century we turn a new leaf of civic history, and for the two hundred years following, the annals of the city may be summarised in the sentence, it was a Protestant town throughout the great Catholic struggle. The lecturer detailed the history of that struggle—how Cork at first sided, as usual, with the Crown—how the old Catholic families resisted when they found it was going too far—the refusal by the Catholic mayor and chief citizens of Cork to proclaim James I. unless he guaranteed liberty of conscience—the effects of the rising of 1641 in Cork—Lord Inchiquin—Prince Rupert and his Cavaliers in Cork—Oliver Cromwell and his troopers in Cork—the expulsion of the Catholic families from the city—James II. in Cork—the siege under the great Marlborough—the Penal times—the ferocity of the persecutors—the heroic steadfastness of the persecuted—the comparative leniency of the Protestants of Cork—how Protestant ladies succoured their Catholic sisters, and Protestant gentlemen protected Catholic property—how the Catholics founded the beef and butter trades of Cork—a curious picture of Cork in the early part of the last century by a cotemporary—the Volunteers in Cork—'98 in Cork—the return of prosperity—the mercantile house of Callaghan and others—literary and educational progress—Hely Hutchinson's election and Reform—how the old Catholic race that formed the city, and was twice so ignominously expelled from it, has at length conquered in the great contest of centuries—how better than that, both parties have to a great extent combined in social, commercial, and even political life. The old divisions are scarcely to be recognised, the old watch-words are scarcely ever heard. 'So,' he said, 'let it be!' May the errors and sorrows of the past be the beacons of the future—may the jar of political or polemical contest be never again heard in our little valley. Surely they have spilled enough of blood in it! Surely they have wasted enough of lives! We have all something to forget—all something to be ashamed of—all something to be proud of. Let us all lay hands and hearts together, and strive only who best shall do his private duty—who best shall serve our common city—and who truliest and kindliest shall show form in word and work that the basis of all religion is 'to love God above all things, and our neighbor as ourselves.' If the force of this lesson be in anywise illustrated by what we have been considering—alike by what is glorious and what is sad—it is not in vain that we have spent some time in looking back through ages at 'The History of Cork.'

THE USE OF IRELAND.

(From the Nation.)

When the Nigger, with satisfaction and pride hears some balmy orator expatiate upon the noble end for which the African race were destined—the use and service of the white man—the cultivation of the sugar cane, the tobacco plant, and the snowy cotton for the pleasure and comfort of the superior race; or, when a Scotch duke exhibits amidst highland plaudits, a prize stag, and some specimens of matchless grouse, and black cock, the growth of districts once encumbered by human beings—then, not till then, will the world exhibit a parallel for "the Beasts" at Athlone.

There has been a rare show there; beasts, quadruped and biped, at their ease exhibited themselves; and of the two, the latter may safely claim the larger share of prizes, for all that constitutes an animal useful for British purposes. There were fat oxen and fat fools, fat pigs and fat place hunters; horses with four feet, and asses with two; all unparalleled for pinguidity. There were rams and ewes of various breeds, whose fat proportions were developed on the fields and pastures where once lived the men and women, and children, who had been driven to slave away their lives in the mines of Wednesbury, and morasses of America. Mangel Wurzel and prime Swedes were piled in heaps like shells before Sebastopol; the richness of the soil of Ireland was there displayed; the bounteous store of God's providence was set forth as if to show how horribly it must have been marred, when a people have famished and still fly from a land so blessed.

But as the eye of the surgeon regards the human frame as an anatomical subject; as the artist sees in the meadow's slope a subject for the pencil, while the farmer sees in it a banquet for his kine, so did the eye of the English Viceroy, Lord Carlisle, see in the beasts and turnips of Athlone, nothing but beef, mutton and vegetables for the English dining table; nothing in the production of the Irish soil save the advantage for his country to which it might be turned. A noble mission this, truly, for this country of ours—once the mother of heroes and sages, wise men and good in college and in camp; no longer to bear nobler offspring than oxen and swine. This old island, which has given to history some of its greatest names—the country that, in Alfred's days, sent scholars to instruct our English neighbors—in Victoria's must be content to send beef and butter to feed them. Such, at least, is the English Viceroy's idea of Ireland's mission among the nations of the earth.

To some, it may seem a strange one for even him to hold; some there may be to think that, even from a British point of view, the use of Ireland to England might be of a higher nature; that the service of the handmaiden might be a little less humble; and her lot to breed—not short horns, and Devons, but Wellingtons, Cannings, and Burkes to fight England's battles, to grace her Senate, to ornament her literature. Some there will doubtless be found, even in England, to sigh over the fallen destiny of the country of a Goldsmith, a Sheridan, and a Moore. Its people flying from it as from a plague-stricken land; its children scattered wanderers from pole to pole, finding a home and protection in any country but their own—finding in most countries honor and distinction, wealth and fame denied them at home. Hewing down the forests and building up the palaces of America, the pioneers and the architects of civilization—rescuing from anarchy and ruin the relics of a Catholic Monarchy in Spain—twining fresh laurels round the standards of France—toiling in the mines of England—raising up a new nation in the antipodes—but whether backwoodsmen, soldiers, scholars, or statesmen, exiles still, ever dreaming of the green valleys where once stood the homestead, where now stands the cattle-shed and the sheep-pen. This is a fate which, even to a stranger, might seem a sad one for a land like this—no Norfolk Island, discovered a few weeks ago and peopled by the scourings of English jails, but an old country, once a queen among the nations—one to which Europe owes something, to which learning and civilization owe a great deal. Yet, this is the lot to which an English Viceroy blandly consigns us, and for which he bids us rejoice and be thankful.

No more presume to dream of freedom, as if we were Sardinians or Australians; no more to hope the hope that gladdens the breasts of men in other countries; no more to feel the ties that bind the human heart in fatherland! Ireland is to be the cattle-shed, the farm-yard the dunghill of Great Britain. For this flattering prediction Lord Carlisle was honored by bellow and bray at Athlone. It is, at least, well that one should hear the views and intentions of those who at present hold our destinies in their hands; it is well that the Irish still remaining in Ireland should know what is projected for their country when emigration and extermination have done their work, and when political corruption has rotted the lands core. England has at last hit on a plan for keeping Ireland quiet. Even Englishmen when naturalised in Ireland have been found most obstinate and troublesome in demanding for the country of their adoption the freedom enjoyed by the country of their birth. Papists have been rebels, Protestants have been rebels, Irishmen have been rebels, Anglo-Irishmen have been rebels. One hope remains, one experiment is yet to be tried. Bullocks and rams, calves and pigs, may prove loyal subjects and salute the House of Hanover every evening, lowing out "God save the Queen."

SKETCHES BY THE WAYSIDE—THE DEATH OF KINGS.

From the Tipperary Vindicator.

No. I.

"For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings;
How some have been deposed—some slain in war;
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd;
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping killed;
All murder'd."

SHAKSPEARE.

In the dark nights of winter, when the sky is covered with black clouds—when the wind moans pityingly without, and the rain falls thick and fast—when the fire has burned down, and the smouldering embers shoot forth little flames which cast fitful lights on the wall,—I love to sit by the open window, to feel the blast play round my forehead, and the rain beat on my face, and there, in the darkness, to ponder on the last ending of the former kings of this world. There is something awful and inexpressibly affecting in the thought that those before whose nod thousands of beings trembled, should, in their turn, too, tremble and bow down before the Great Monarch of All, who ruleth prince and peasant justly and impartially, and who teacheth them, in his own good time, that they were placed here to rule, not for themselves alone, but as his vice-gerents. And if they have been more exalted during their lives, so often have their deaths been more terrible. "Of tallest trees the roots delve deepest;" and so when misfortunes fall on a Sovereign, they seldom are light and partial, but sweep down and overwhelm him with the fury of a mountain torrent, swelled by the winter rains and the melting snows. The annals of all nations bear witness to the truth of this assertion, and none more so than those of Ireland. Some authors allege that the first inhabitants of this island were the dispossessed tribes of Canaan, and it would seem as if the curse which had been pronounced on them, had pursued them from their sunny eastern home to this far distant isle of the setting sun. In no other nation have so many monarchs fallen by the sword, by treachery, and by poison,—and, as century after century the sad annals unfold themselves, the soul sickens and the heart throbs with disgust at the unvarying details of crime, perfidy, and ingratitude—and to turn then and pursue the history of some nations, is like inhaling the pure ocean air after escaping from the stifling, sweltering atmosphere of a manufactory. Let us commence with the first page of Irish history. It was in the young world's dawn, while yet the grass waved on the Capitoline hill—while the wolf made his lair in the Esquiline, and ere a single temple had crowned the banks of the Elissas, that the first colonists came to Ireland. Hither they came, a dark-eyed, swarthy Eastern race, and dwelt here many years, until at last a fearful plague broke out among them, and they and their monarch perished miserably on the Hill of Howth. Years passed on, and the island lay desolate, and then came Nemedius with a gallant train of warriors to take possession of the fair and deserted land. Here for many years he dwelt in peace, but then a fine body of African pirates arrived in their light vessels, and devastated the country with fire and sword. Nemedius vainly opposed them, and fought as only one can fight when battling for crown and life. Various conflicts ensued, but at length Nemedius's son Arthur, and Jobean, his grandson, were slain; and so, wearied, dispirited, and broken-hearted, he retired from the hopeless contest, and took refuge, with some followers, at Oilean arda Neimtriodh, now the greatest island in Cork harbor.

The beautiful situation and calm tranquillity of all around failed to afford balm to his wounded spirit, and after a few months had elapsed the old man died of a broken heart, and a sad and portentous ending for the first monarch of Ireland. The Eastern pirates hold the island for a short period, and yield, in their turn, to the Firbolgs. But though the races have been changed, the same dark fate still pursues the island monarch. The Tuatha de Danaans invaded the land, and Eocha, sovereign of the Firbolgs, dies, king-like, sword in hand, fighting against the dark-haired strangers, at the battle of Moyturey, in Mayo. Nuagha of the Silver Hand succeeds to the vacant throne, and peacefully dies, and the crown descends in a direct line until Eathur, Teahur, and Reahur, wear it in common. In their reign another race land to win the kingdom, urged hitherto by an old prophecy that in the Island of Destiny they should found a mighty empire. The struggle was long and doubtful, but finally the three brothers are slain at the battle of Failton, in Meath—Eathur falls by the sword of Amhergin, Teahur by that of Heber, and Reahur is struck down dead by Heremon. The three monarchs, with their wives, thus perish, and Heber and Heremon, the leaders of the Spanish strangers, divided the kingdom between them. The olden prophecy is fulfilled, and the sons of Milesius, at length, possess the land over which their descendants are so long to reign. But they are hardly settled in their various principalities when division—the eternal curse of Ireland—with his black pinions overshadows the land, and the same tragedy that stained the infant Rome, centuries after, is played with tenfold horror in Ireland. Various circumstances, slight at first, had gradually estranged the brothers: their love changed to the bitterest hate. Heber was the first to draw the sword; he attempted to gain possession of some land in Heremon's territory; a fierce civil war occurred, and at length Herber was slain at the battle of Geisiol by Heremon, who thus became sole monarch of the island. Once the bond of peace was broken, it would seem as if all love had departed for ever from the hearts of the brothers. Amhergin, the gentle Amhergin, the head of priesthood, and earliest of our poets, in a fit of passion murders Caicher, and he himself is assassinated by Heremon. This was the dominion of the Milesians commenced, and years afterwards Heremon himself, brotherless and wifeless, his mind tortured by remorse, dies at Airgiodross, and his three sons succeeded him, all of whom, in their turn, are slain by the four sons of the murdered Heber, and these, too, are destroyed, after a reign of but a year, by Iriel the Prophet, who announced that he had come, a heavenly messenger, to destroy the immediate descendants of the fratricides. There was a brief respite from internal dissension; and, passing over those monarchs who had the good fortune to die in peace, we come to Aongus. He was a gallant warrior and a great monarch. He sternly repressed the feuds of the petty chieftains, gave his banners to wave in the cold breeze of the Orkneys, defeats the inhabitants and the wild Picts in more than thirty pitched battles, checks the piracy of the rude Islemen;—and then, oh! what an ending for such a life! he is treacherously slain by his own subjects, as unarmed and unattended he hunted one day on the mountain of Slieve Cua in Munster. Thus it has ever been. In the long line of illustrious Irishmen, nearly all, with very few exceptions, have met their death by the perfidy or ingratitude of those very countrymen whom they had tried so hardly to serve. Then Laogase Loro, the son of Ugene, once more wears the crown, and the old tragedy of Heber is enacted again, for he is basely and barbarously assassinated by his brother Coblagh. His son fled to his relatives in Gaul, and, after a weary exile, he returned with a numerous army, and the usurper expiated his crimes by his death on the field of battle. There was a short interval of peace after his death until Conare More ascended the throne, in the first year of the Christian era. He was a great and wise monarch, and unwonted tranquillity prevailed throughout the kingdom; but after a reign of more than thirty years, he perished miserably by fire in his castle of Brighean da Deargh, and his successor, Luagha, too, ends his life yet more sorrowfully, for he lived to see his children and people alienated from him; and so, unwilling to endure the tortures of a desolate and crownless life, he terminated his existence by slaying himself.

JERPOINT ABBEY.

This religious house was originally founded by Donough O'Donoughoe, king or prince of Ossory, in the year 1180, for Cistercian monks. This fraternity was one of the richest and most influential of the monastic orders in Ireland. It spread itself over the most fertile provinces of the country, and engrossed so much wealth and political influence, that no less than twelve of their religious houses had abbots who sat and ranked among the peers of the land as lords of Parliament.

This institution was once collegiate, and it is said that more than seven hundred students were resident within its walls. The ruins of it are very extensive. The church was a cruciform structure, and consisted of a nave, the roof of which was supported by a range of six pointed arches, with a corrresponding number of massy columns. Above and between these pointed arches are the remains of six clerestory windows, narrow and rounded at their tops. The western or great window of the nave, consists of three distinct arches, separated from each other by a single mullion with rounded tops also. The steeple which is over the cross of the transept, derives its support from four massy square pillars, and the arches which spring from them. The two arches of the transepts, and that belonging to the nave, are of the pointed form; the arch which leads to the choir or chancel is circular.

This singular deviation in point of form between them, makes it very probable that the choir was the work of a different period; although the eastern or altar window, which is now built up to smaller dimensions, is also of the pointed form. Such an anomaly in the character of its architecture can only be accounted for by the foregoing supposition, or that it was built about the period when these styles—the circular and the pointed—were undergoing that change which occasioned the one to supersede the other.

The roof of the choir is a circular arch of stone, quite perfect and in the chancel of it are the tombs of the founder, Donough O'Donoughoe, and Bishop O'Dullany, of Ossory, sculptured in rude though bold relief.

The roof of the steeple over the cross transept, is curiously groined with springers, that are supported on each side by neat and ornamental corbels. The nave and transepts are uncovered.

ST. CANICE'S CATHEDRAL.

The church of St. Canice at Kilkenny, is the episcopal seat of the diocese of Ossory. It forms, like that of Christ Church, Dublin, a cross, and is considered by Ware, or his editor, Mr. Harris, the largest cathedral in the country, except those of the metropolis.

The present church was erected upon the original ecclesiastical foundation, which was either raised by St. Canice, or dedicated to him. The episcopal chair of the see of Ossory was removed to this place from Aghaboe, in the Queen's County, by Bishop O'Dullany, who it appears held this see in the year 1180. Though the building was begun by him about this period, it was not completed till 1286; so that above a hundred years were occupied in finishing this structure. Like most buildings of a similar kind, it has had its revolutions of prosperous or adverse fortune, according to the zeal, the liberality, or the taste of those bishops and dignitaries, who, from time to time, have had the care of administering its revenues—sometimes suffered to moulder nearly to decay, and at others re-edified, and almost restored to its original appearance; but after all its changes, there is more of the original structure and form preserved than in any building of the kind we know of in the country.

The nave is divided into three parts, a centre and two lateral aisles, by a range of five arches, supported on each side by massive piers of black Kilkenny marble, which present to the eye a variety of vistas of a most magnificent effect.

Answers to Correspondents.

Derrynane.—Daniel O'Connell always enjoyed an exuberant flow of spirits, and relished a joke intensely. On the occasion of a contest for the representation of Dublin, with Mr. West—a most awkward individual, whom Lord Plunket designated "Sow West,"—he humorously quizzed him upon the beauty of his appearance. In reply, Mr. West said, "If you saw Mr. O'Connell without his wig, he does not present a face which has much to boast of." O'Connell, immediately pulling off his wig, stood close by West, and exclaimed, "There, now—which of us is the better looking? My wig is off!" The sally was received with universal applause. O'Connell looked admirably. The skull he exhibited, for volume and development, could not be surpassed.

Kilkenny—"The Triang'e Field," in which the Volunteers were reviewed, previous to their march to Dublin, and in which Harry Flood shot the Hon. Mr. Agar, is near the old boundary of Dunmore Park. Sir John Davis, who was James the First's Attorney-General for Ireland, says, that around that old residence of the Butlers was the first inclosed deer-park in Irel and. It formerly extended to the bank of the Nore. When we were last there, traces of the old boundary were here and there still perceptible.

Jerpoint.—Yes, "Poulacuilla" is a most delightful glen. It is situated but a few miles from Woodstock, and is approached by a crystal stream, flowing from the Nore, at the extremity of which a cascade of great beauty, rolls in mournful tones over rugged fragments of rock, and descends a craggy precipice of great height. From the fissures of numberless cliffs, which overhang the boatman's head, as he plies the oar beneath, shoot forth stately old trees, ameliorating and diversifying the character of this pensive glen.

THE IRISH NEWS.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1856.

A BREACH OF THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH ALLIANCE.

By the arrival of the Baltic, we are in possession of news from Europe four days later than that previously received by the Canada. Monetary affairs occupied the serious attention of financial speculators. Royal gamblers in bank stock and railway scrip, do not sit firmly on their commercial thrones. There is a general apprehension that a monetary revolution may break out in London or Paris at any moment—a revolution more formidable than the uprising of February, or the rebellion of Jack Cade. The Austrians still remain in the "Principalities," and some say contrary to the demands of the Sublime Porte, while Austrian journals stoutly deny the "impeachment." At all events, the legions of Francis Joseph are still on "Turkish soil," and an English fleet still keeps possession of the Euxine. It looks as if there were some work to be yet done in the East—another dose to be administered to "the sick man" of Stamboul. Although diplomatic relations have been broken off with brother Bomba, no demonstration of a menacing character has yet been made against the capital of the Two Sicilies, and the amiable Bourbon, "whose crown and dignity" has been offered insult by his royal intermeddling neighbors, has not found it necessary to let slip his Lazzaroni and Swiss mercenaries, to cut the throats of half his loving subjects in Naples. They are on hand, however, and can be unleashed at a moment's notice. But the occupation of the Principalities, the possession of the lighthouse on the Isle of Serpents, the presence of the English squadron in the Black Sea, the diplomatic squabble with the contemptible despot of Naples, dwindle down to the smallest speck of insignificance in presence of the reported misunderstanding between the governments of France and England. The English press have changed the tone of slavish adulation hitherto observed towards the man of December. He is no longer their "august ally;" and free comments are occasionally made upon his acts. Some of the English organs, more bold and honest than the rest, have been rudely stripping the imperial purple from his shoulders, and treating him simply as his infamies deserve. But this is by no means pleasing to his Majesty. He feels himself a veritable monarch, and, although his throne is not very stable at present, he cannot allow John Bull to treat him with as much vulgar familiarity as if he were a special constable, keeping the peace for Queen Victoria in London. The official organ of the Tuilleries, consequently, published the following paragraph, which contains a menace, rather than a remonstrance—a dark threat under the mask of a friendly warning.

"Various organs of the English press have for some time past been in the habit of diffusing calumnies against the French government which are the more odious as they are concealed under an anonymous mask, and allow no other answer than contempt. We understand the respect which the liberty of the press receives in England, and in thus noticing its errors we confine ourselves to appealing to the good sense and good faith of the English people to warn them against the dangers of a system which, by destroying confidence between the two governments, would tend to disunite the two nations, whose alliance is the best guarantee of the peace of the world."

The English press rejoins with bitterness and defiance, while it is reported that the British Government have intimated to the French Government, that explanation will be required, regarding that part of the note which refers to the alliance being endangered."

Without a friend in Europe—without an honest ally amongst the whole family of nations—England must either remain the subservient tool of Louis Napoleon or imperil her existence as a sovereign power. The days of her pride and her strength, and her prestige have passed away. The first hostile arm raised against her in Europe will be the signal for a general coalition of her secret enemies, which will wipe her from the map of nations. With her wealth, her commerce and her intrigues, she has been the most formidable opponent of republicanism in the old world—once stricken down, freedom's banner would be up, and freedom's challenge cry ringing out in a hundred capitals, king-crushed and bayonet-ruled to-day.

THE LADIES' FAIR.

These are bright times at the Crystal Palace. The Fair transcends the liveliest expectations. Not since it was opened by President Pierce, in the summer of 1853, has there been so rare a scene spread out under its noble dome. Indeed, we are strongly inclined to the opinion that the present far exceeds the former spectacle, brilliant and impressive as that was. The array of beauty, winning wit, goodness, sweetness, all the graces and all the virtues, now brightening and exhaling the fragrance of the kindliest natures all through those long-drawn aisles, is itself worth many a gold dollar to look at. The stalls are laden with the daintiest specimens of needle-work, jewelry, painting, embroidery—all the exquisite products of the gentler arts—and a thousand other treasures of themselves sufficient to loosen the tightest pocket and melt the stoniest heart. Were they to fail—had they no genial influence—the queenly merchants of the Palace would be sure to triumph in the beauteous cause of Charity.

We fear, however, these few remarks trespass on the special domain and property of our sparkling little brother, The Page of the Fair. Every one interested in the success of the movement should buy that paper. It contains the fullest information respecting it; and, along with a profusion of poetry and humor, gives us a carefully compiled index to the different stalls, and the articles and goods each stall contains.

Considering the object for which the Fair was organized, every good citizen in New York must feel delighted at its success. The erection of a Hospital—open to the poor of all religions and countries—and to be placed under the wise and tender rule of the Sisters of Charity—is an object, every event tending to realize which, cannot fail to inspire in the community at large the deepest satisfaction. Well may the noble womanhood of the city devote themselves to such a service! Well may the rich, and the gay, the gifted, and all who can afford the leisure and the means, join with heart, hand, and brain! Heaven blesses such festivals of love—love which provides for the poor, the shelterless and sick—and the efforts on earth, animated by this love, are remembered for ever in the hymns of Angels, and are recorded in the Book, which promises that even the cup of cold water, given in His name, shall not be forgotten.

THE CRIMEAN BANQUET.

There has been feasting and rejoicing in the ancient capital of Ireland—a display of flags, banners and the sound of martial music unseen and unheard by the banks of the Liffey since the battallions of the Irish Volunteers filed through College Green before the grand old Senate House. But how different the two occasions! Then a nation's army, bearing the nation's flag and wearing the nation's uniform, celebrated a triumph of national independence. Their bright arms flashed in the morning sun, and they received the congratulations of the surging multitude. But now, within the shadow of that noble Custom House, whose chaste architecture might bear comparison with the most finished structures of ancient Greece, but whose empty warerooms and silent corridors are typical of the despoiled land—there, within the shadow of its grandeur, four thousand soldiers were feasted—men who bore the arms, and wore the livery, and fought the battles of the stranger. That the Irish contingent maintained the military character of Ireland, no one questions. It was proved by that fierce and fatal charge on the plains of Balaklava, on the heights of Inkermann, and by that gallant dash into the heart of Sebastopol, while the Russian flag yet flew defiant from the ramparts of the Malakoff, and the guns of the Redan swept the English reserve, like chaff, into their trenches. While proud of these acts of gallant daring—even when performed in the service of England, every one of whose victories have increased the power of Ireland's mortal enemy—we could not join in any such ovation. We know there are honest-hearted and well-meaning Irishmen who believe that the Crimean banquet was the celebration of a national triumph. But it was nothing of the kind. Those soldiers deserved well of England. They fought and bled and starved for her, in the trenches before Sebastopol. Their praises have been chaunted in the "lays of the war" by a servile poetic place-hunter; but he could not sing of those who fought and died in the Crimea as was sung of the heroes of Cremona:

> News, news in old Ireland, high rises her pride,
> And high sounds her wail for her children who died,
> And deep is her prayer—God send I may see
> McDonnell and Mahony fighting for me.

The news of Crimean victories was not received in Ireland with rejoicing by the masses of the people, and they have accordingly held aloof from the banquet as something resembling the Saturnalia which greeted England's bloated monarch in Dublin thirty-two years ago. More power to the people!

CAPTAIN KERRIGAN—THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD.

Mr. Meagher is absent this week in Boston, where he delivers his lecture on Gerald Griffin before the Columbia Military and Literary Association, which Association consists chiefly of the four military companies disbanded by Governor Gardner for the crime of having Irish born citizens in the ranks. Mr. Meagher returns in time to address the citizens of New-York in the Tabernacle, on Monday next, the 17th instant, in aid of the widow and child of the late PATRICK KERRIGAN, Captain of the Irish Dragoons of the N. Y. S. Militia. We understand, and have been confidently assured, that the occasion, in point of numbers, brilliancy, and enthusiasm, will be all and everything that the most earnest sympathizer with the widow and child of this true-hearted, whole-souled Irishman could wish. The 9th and 69th Regiments, the Napper-Tandy Artillery of Brooklyn, Emmet Guard of New-York, Montgomery Guard of Jersey City, and several other uniform companies, will be present. It will be a splendid military tribute of thousands of generous and gallant men to a dead comrade, and from it, we are sure will flow, no small measure of happiness to a house of mourning, and the lonely ones who in poverty wear out the dark hours of life within it. Already, we have been informed, two thousand tickets are disposed of. The subject will be—The Contrasts of Royalty and Republicanism—Europe and America.

BUCHANAN TRIUMPHANT.

Like the croaking of birds of ill omen, the sinister rumors of the Black Republican organs fell upon the ears of the Democracy during the two first days of the week. False telegraphic dispatches from Tennessee and Illinois divided those states between the condidate of proscription on the one side, and the foreign abolition and disunion nominee on the other. However, those little specks have not gathered into a cloud. All is now bright, joyous and triumphant. Defeated, routed, annihilated, at all important points, the enemies of the Republic have no longer a political existence in the Union. The Democracy and their veteran chief have signally triumphed over the treasonable and persecuting isms of the day. Not a single star has fallen from the bright banner which keeps sentinel over the liberties of the Republic. Intolerance, bigotry and the impertinent intermeddling of foreign powers with the internal affairs and social institutions of the country, have been rebuked. We trust the lesson which has been read to the enemies of republican governments—at home and abroad—by the irresistible Democracy, will not be lost upon the rabid fanatics of New England. The battle has been nobly fought and won. God save the Union.

JOHN BROUGHAM AND THE BOWERY.

With sincere gratification we learn, that the friends of this excellent and gifted gentleman purpose giving him shortly a benefit on a magnificent scale. No one better deserves such a tribute. Exhaustless industry, the most liberal spirit, wit, eloquence and fancy—every resource that can ensure intellectual pleasure to the public and crown his theatre with their praises—he devotes to the profession of which he is a pillar and proud ornament. As for his munificence, it is as extravagant almost as his glorious Pocahontas. The friends of the Catholic Orphans of New York know this, and gratefully await an opportunity of testifying their great indebtedness to the services he has, over and over again for years, gratuitously rendered their noble cause. This week he gives $500—the proceeds of Bowery Theatre tickets sold in aid of the "Ladies Fair at the Crystal Palace"—sanctifying by charity the profession which his scholarship, high tone, correct taste and affluent genius have long since exalted and enriched.

DR. M'ELHERAN IN THE ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

We call the attention of our readers to the report of Dr. M'Elheran's lecture on Ethnology, delivered in the Universty, before the Academy of Medicine.

The unusually large attendance, the warm applause of the learned assembly, and the vote of thanks proposed and seconded by two of the most venerable members of the Faculty in America, may be considered the greatest triumph that Dr. M'Elheran has yet achieved.

This question of the extension of races is of vast importance considering the international relations and future destiny of America, which must be influenced in a great measure by the ties of consanguinity.

By means of his large collection of portraits and diagrams, Dr. M'Elheran makes science plain and interesting to the public. Lecture committees will do well to remember that he is ready to receive engagements.

COLONEL DOHENY AND LIEUT.-GOVERNOR RAYMOND.

We feel sincerely gratified in publishing the following letter in answer to the irresponsible insolence of the New-York Times:

"THE MERE IRISH."

The N. Y. Daily Times is eminently "Anglo-Saxon," and, in consequence, pre-eminently arrogant, abusive, and mendacious. The true Anglo-Saxon is always of this stamp. He is not satisfied with any native superiority he may possess, but looks rather to the depreciation of his neighbor for the true standard of his own elevation. The human family, according to him, has but one aristocratic branch, of which he is himself the rightful head. His policy, morality, religion, good faith, honor, and "pluck," transcend those of all others, not because of their innate worth, but because they are his; and the same qualities in others are inferior, simply because they are not his. The world knows how far-famed in this particular is the Times of the Strand. But let me come to our Beekman street Manikin, who, moralizing from the frozen side of the hedge, thus maligns:

"As for the Irish, they have gone in a drove—as they always do go—for the regular Democratic ticket. They will probably never do anything else, as long as they remain Irish—and it takes at least two generations to convert them into Americans. They seem to lack the faculty of individual action, or of exercising a personal judgment on public affairs. They vote in herds, and are, of course, managed like other herds, under the control of skillful and experienced drivers."

The voting in "herds," as far as facts are concerned, means, that they voted together, and together against both Fillmore and Fremont. But the intended sting is in the metaphor, which insinuates that they voted without any more consideration than steers or hogs.

The conclusion that because they voted together they therefore voted blindly is as fallacious as it is insolent. It is puerile, as an argument; it is malignant, as a slander. In voting as they voted, even though it would take "two centuries to Americanize them," they voted with the son of Henry Clay and the son of Daniel Webster; they voted as these statesmen voted in life and would vote if now living—that is, to preserve the Union and the Constitution in their integrity. They voted as Calhoun would vote—as Madison would vote—as Jackson would vote—as the ablest, and truest, and noblest Americans, living or dead, would vote and have voted. But I claim no exemption from blame for myself or my race, because we have voted with these illustrious men living and dead. I demand our full rights to exercise our judgment. I ask no favor. I insist on equality. I scorn this arrogant dictation to us as a people. If, then, we own our own franchise, have we fulfilled the trust as becomes Americans?

We had before us two candidates; one representing the "American" party (falsely so called), the other the still more falsely self-styled "Republicans." The one relied on double proscription—proscription for creed and proscription for birth-place. The first is a direct and flagrant violation of the Constitution. It falsifies its holiest principle. It falsifies the communion of brotherhoods which was first to dawn on and hallow the emancipated country. It falsifies the promise held out to the nations, through the Constitution, the laws, and the history of the Republic, inviting to its bosom the suffering children of men. And this attempt to trace a lie on history, freedom, fame, and pledged faith, was planned in a midnight conspiracy, secret, oath-bound, and accompanied by circumstances the most repugnant to liberty and to the spirit of our institutions.

On this ground alone could we vote for Millard Fillmore. I do not disparage him. I do not decry him. But I could not vote for him without treason to the Republic, and worse than treason to my own convictions.

I pass by the other article of proscription, as this is enough in reference to one candidate.

I now come to the other candidate. Ostenibly there was but one issue between him and Buchanan—"Free Soil;" but incidentally several others engrafted themselves on this. One, which was decisive in determining of the vote of every citizen of Irish blood, who was in his heart a republican and aspired to preserve our institutions, was an act done in the Philadelphia Republican convention. It is well known that the American convention split. A bare majority sided with Fillmore: a most powerful minority bolted. That minority was strong in its unyielding bigotry, in the iron hatred it bore to the Catholic and "Foreigner"; but above all to the former, wherever born. It afterwards set up itself, and became more powerful than the majority. The Republican convention, which was afterwards held at Philadelphia, hugged it to its bosom, and entered into brotherhood with it.

The manner of the affiliation was disgraceful. A committee of the convention drew up a code of principles, in which there was a declaration that the party thus solemnly pledging themselves to "Free Territory," would proscribe no man for his faith or birthplace. On this being read, up rose a sage—I think, David Wilmot—and said in substance that, although he was not proscriptive—Heaven forbid he should be!—yet, he strongly urged that so plain a word would be offensive to a great number, and that thereby Pennsylvania would be lost. On this suggestion, the anti-proscriptive assurance was abandoned. Now, whether did that man betray his own convictions, or wilfully deceive those—to please whom he shrank from asserting them. It is clear there was deceit somewhere, either to his conscience or to them. It is clear the convention at both sides made a disgraceful compromise—cemented by a mutual fraud. It is clear the abandonment of the anti-proscriptive was a pledge given to the proscriptive doctrine. Independent then of other reasons, how could we vote for the man committed to this juggle? Leave out the man and take the platform: is there one honest voter who respects civil and religious liberty who could sustain it? We, of Irish birth, long and stoutly struggled for that sacred privilege; we often sorely bled for it; and having vindicated it at home, are we to join hands with those who would commit it to the coils of a treacherous political snake? Nay more, could any man vote for the Philadelphia platform and respect the Truth? I say—and I say it boldly—NOT ONE!

In face of this treachery, was it not "blind ignorance" in the Irish to "herd" in voting aginst the platform that betrayed them and ignored the Constitution? If they did not, they would be fools, or dupes, or cowards.

The Times thus glibly continues:

"Besides this, there is nothing that an Irishman loves like the opportunity to tyrannize over somebody; and nothing that he hates like a Negro."

This is the grossest perversion of history and fact. In no country, when Ireland was a nation, was there so little actual slavery. In no country was slavery less a subject of traffic. It was altogether abolished with the pagan religion. There was never any serfdom in Ireland. The chief neither owned his clan nor the land the clan tilled. Their title was equal to his, and so was their position. Not so the Anglo-Saxon—the real Anglo-Saxon—he was himself a slave, bound to the soil. But the upstart in learning is usually as shallow in his calling as other upstarts in gentleness and courage.

To assert that an Irishman hates a Negro, is as untrue as the pretense that the Negro's condition—his slavery or freedom—were in any way to be affected by the result of the late election, is false and fraudulent. "Ignorant" as the Irish are, there are few of them that do not know that the words, "Liberty, Freedom, the benefit of the Negro," are high-sounding delusions, simple frauds for duping fanaticism. An Irishman does not hate a Negro, but he hates the false pretender that, under cover of liberality to the Negro, which is a lie, meditates the proscription and enslaving of other men.

The Times becomes witty and indulges in a coarse joke about the Irish believing "every cock and bull story that jumps with their inclination." This is of course attributed to their "ignorance and credulity." It has so chanced that there were then cock and bull stories addressed to their "credulity" which the Times and its colleagues did hope "would jump with their inclination," and yet they did not believe them; and yet they spurned them and the little "artful dodgers" who invented them. One of these was Fremont's Catholicity. Of this story the Express was the dupe, and not the inventor. It was palmed off, as I think, by some "Republican," for it could in no way serve Fillmore. His hopes lay South, where Fremont could not get a vote, and it was well known, that Fremont would more than double his vote North. The only possible effect of the story woold be to filch some Catholic votes from Buchanan in the North-west and New-Jersey. But be the inventor who he may, it was daily paraded before the people, by the "Republicans" by way of denying it. If the first denial were a denial, then the second and third up to the five hundreth, were not needed. But there is not yet a denial for the good reason that the real object was to keep up the delusion, in view of "Irish credulity." At last the delusion grew into a book, and was thrust into every house where an Irishman was supposed to reside, in company with the bull of Pope Gregory and Mr. O'Connell's opinion

The republicans, in thus circulating the quasi denial of Fremont's Catholicity, were guilty of a fraud and a pretence. It was a pretence, because the object was not to make the people believe that he was not—but to make them suppose he was a Catholic. It was a gross fraud to address themselves to religious considerations, treachery alike to the state, to religion and to conscience. It was an attempt to seduce the Irish Catholic from his duty to the Republic. And this is the second time the attempt has been made, and made in vain. The invocation of the papers also, was not a fraud, but a double falsehood. First, it was not a bull; secondly, it concerned the "slave trade"—a subject which was no more involved in this issue, than Mahomet's coffin. Mr. O'Connell's opinion, as used in the canvass, is another fraud, and not a pious one either; for it referred to slavery in the abstract, which the "Republicans" are pledged never to disturb.

That these were thus fraudulent and false in every issue, and in the pretences on which they rely, should venture to assail those who were not duped by them, can only be reconciled on the principle that the vilest and most prostituted are always first to vituperate.

There is an esteemed friend of mine, and brother lawyer in this city, named Chauncey Shaffer. He is a good fellow, and has an intense desire to have a hand in "ruling America." He has strong spiritual affinities and buoyant lungs. When the angel Gabriel visited our mortal sphere, he held most intimate relations with Chauncey. The angel's horn blew blasts most thrilling, but not quite so lusty as his colleague's lungs. They both discoursed much through horn and lungs on the influence of a certain Babylonish female, wearing scarlet petticoats. But alas, even for "grace," when in close connection with things mundane! That of Chauncey was unstable; to use a literary phrase in vogue nowadays, it "caved in." For where think you he has been seen of late, with bent back and wearied limbs and out of breath? Why, circulating certain contraband wares of that most crimson of naughty maidens! And is it not too bad, now that after all this warping and winding and blowing, and coaxing and bullying and bellowing, "the Irish vote in a herd," and did not even listen to these charming seducers, and did think too, perhaps, that my friend Chauncey, though "rayed in radiant angel form," was addicted to very unsavory politics.

I have dealt with only one day's labor of the Times—that of Nov. 3. The next day it renewed the charge. After speaking of the Germans at home, and asserting their vast superiority over the Irish,—a subject on which I shall say nothing, because I know nothing—it says, that "they are much more easily and readily Americanised than the Irish." If the other assertion be no truer than this, it is not only an ignorant, but a wilful slander. The Germans—to their credit be it said—preserve their own customs, pastimes, traditions, morals and manners here much longer than the Irish. They have their Sunday dance and Sunday game and sunny Sunday holidays, which they enliven with their native airs, in their native tongue, while the Irish are almost instantaneously absorbed in the American element.

And again, hear the Times:

"They" (Germans) "bring with them to this country much less of their home quarrels and domestic dissensions, and seek much less to perpetuate on our soil the wranglings and snarlings of political life at home."

I don't know whether the Germans have any "political snarlings at home," but I take it, it is Irish snarling the writer has in view, in accordance with the habit of this punica fides print.

If so—and it is so—I can assure him that an importation of that canine quality would be a vast improvement to political discussion on "our soil," for I never knew two dogs, or even two curs, no matter how cross-grained or cross-bred, that would gnaw each other so indecently, and so sneakingly, as some politicians of "our soil." Decent dogs fight it out. Politicians that I know run into holes, there to crunch in safety the last joint of their opponents' bones. Decent dogs don't call each other foul names. That is the peculiar privilege of women lost to womanhood, and such are the weapons of "Republican" men. And not only men, but the guides of the country—the lights of the press—the beacons of civilization. According to one set, the other sets are damnable—damned even in this world. And each set returns the compliment with interest. So that on their joint authority, the whole are "ruffians," "traitors," "perjurers," "thieves," and "robbers." The Times may indulge in these exercises in respect to American politics and politicians as long as they will serve its end. But it had better let "Irish political snarlings" rest. It is utterly ignorant in respect to Irish politics, and it is incapable of comprehending the tone and spirit in which they are conducted, even if it were not. There is excitement there, and the struggle is between the governing and governed classes; but the candidates never sink the gentleman in the politician, never trench on decency, and never invade the inviolability of private life. 'Tis rather unsavory logic that the result of "perpetuating political wrangling" should be "rushing in bulk"—a new sample of the "concordia discors." But let it go.

What principally excites the ire of the Times is, that the Irish "vote in bulk." How could they go together if they thought? Admirable logic! Must some of them vote against their convictions, to show that they think? Is his idea of thinking that it must result in a lie? He is welcome to it if it be. How did the descendants of the Puritans vote in the Bay State? Was it not "in bulk?" Are they clannish and ignorant because they went in shoals? The English do not vote together, exclaims the Times. Certainly they don't, for they don't vote at all. One quotation more.

"The Irish do not act upon knowledge, or upon principle. They are the tools of demagogues. Their actions are decided, not by appeals to their judgment, but by the orders of their superiors, or the most dishonest appeals to their credulity or their hatred."

Here are three sentences, very curt, very pert, and very impertinent. There is no attempt at proof, no bungling at inference. They stand alone, unsustained by even hollow proofs or shallow argument. The answer must be more curt—they are three untruths—no other is applicable.

The Democrats appealed to nothing but principle. The "Republicans" did not appeal to principle at all. The Democrats did not invoke the prejudices of their religion. The "Republicans" did—they falsely invoked the religion, the Pope, and Mr. O'Connell. The Democrats did not "appeal to their hatreds." The "Republicans" did, in the case of Keating—the most cold-blooded, the vilest, the meanest appeal ever made to human passion.

But besides, the Irish did not vote in bulk. They divided in this city, to the heart's content of the Times—some voted for Wood, some for Libby, some for Bleecker, and some for Whiting And so as to the other candidates.

The Times condescends to except a few Irishmen from the sweeping charge of ignorance. I, at least, spurn the compliment, if by possibility I be included. I say, fearlessly, that the education of the present generation of Irishmen at home is superior to that of the same generation here. Their school system is better, their scholars are more competent, their education is of a higher order.

I regret exceedingly to be obliged to use arguments of this character. There is no man living, wherever born, who has higher respect or admiration than I for the institutions of this country, its unexampled prosperity, its unrivalled activity and industry. No man living who has a more intense desire to see it progress and prosper, but there are in it, as in every other country, narrow and little minds; and when they grossly and wantonly assail and slander a whole race, it would be cowardly not to return them blow for blow. I regret, too, that the style of the assault tempted me to the use of language, in which I would not otherwise indulge, and I trust, on a comparison of the attack and defense, the latter will be found excusable.

As for the threat to revive Nativism unless we can get the Irish to vote different ways, we make the Times a present of it. If it come to that, we shall see who shall be proscribed. We defied persecution at home; we defy, and shall trample on it here.

MICHAEL DOHENY.

Literature.

THE FORTUNES OF CASEMENT O'REILLY.*

HIS ADVENTURES IN AMERICA.

BY GARLAND O'HALLORAN.

CHAPTER VIII.

BEEFSTEAKS AND BRAVERY—THE DETECTIVE'S PLAN—ITS EXECUTION AND THE RESULT.

"No need, young gentleman," answered Bullock, quietly, as he withdrew the last screw from the last hasp. "Let s get a light now, to see what's inside—for the door's open."

Drawing forth a pocket-lamp and a box of lucifers, a light was struck. But just as the parties were about to enter, there was a heavy crash, and then the clock, which had fallen forward on the floor, commenced striking. As it lay across their path, Bullock stooped to pick it up and replace it against the wall. In doing so, a letter which had been deposited, probably, between the glass and dial plate, fell out, and as Casement hurriedly glanced at the superscription, the clock—which had not moved for years—struck the last notes of twelve. A lapse of twenty years, at least, had passed since that iron tongue had last been heard! A long dark night for somebody—a night which was about to pass—and it would seem as if the senseless mechanism had sympathies with the brighter dawn which its exulting clamors heralded.

Hastily hiding the letter in his bosom, with emotions which he could not pause to analyze, Casement now awoke from his momentary reverie, and who shall describe his astonishment at the scene which met his gaze?

The sisters, apparently dead, lay locked in a last embrace upon the funeral couch. The door had never been opened since Brand's departure. The lamp had gone out sometime during the first night of their imprisonment. The food deposited by the negro on the table, was abundant to sustain life for twice the period. But they feared it might be either drugged or poisoned, and so it remained untouched, until at last when the pangs of hunger had become so acute that they would gladly have eaten it—even though assured that it was certain death—to get rid of the insupportable torments they were then enduring; when they had reached this condition, we say, they found they had not strength enough to rise, and turning face to face, with a last kiss and a last lingering prayer, the sisters resigned themselves to death, and were now in the last painless torpor of the trance which immediately precedes dissolution.

So altered were they—so gaunt and hollow-cheeked and white—their faces smeared with dust and tears, and their finely-rounded figures so emaciate—so unlike were they in every respect to the fair girls he had taken leave of three days before, in all the bloom of youth, simplicity and beauty, that Casement could not believe such a change was possible, and deemed they must be some miserable victims who had been confined here for months—for years; and were now at last released by whatever writ of the spirit-world is equivalent to the habeas corpus of the world below.

"They live," said Bullock, turning his lamp upon their faces. "Let us carry them down," continued he, picking up Anne in his right arm, and taking along with him the bottle of wine, which stood untasted on the table; "you follow me with the hother, and the fresh hair will revive them.

They got down none too soon; for the negro had dragged his mutilated body into the parlor, upset the spirit-cask with shoulder, and was now busily endeavoring to ignite a match he held between his which teeth, and was rubbing in that manner against the damp and dripping wall.

The villain must have known that, crippled as he was, his own life would have been the first forfeit of the hellish deed. The others in the house might possibly have escaped by great presence of mind and activity; but for himself, with his garments saturated in the fiery flood, his ancle shattered, and his hands bound behind his back, what hope was left?

Seizing him by the collar, Bullock dragged him out, and handcuffed him to the old man, who was already handcuffed to his wife.

The detective next applied himself to the restoration of the sisters, and exhibited a tenderness and skill for which few acquainted with him in rougher scenes would be likely to have given him credit. Putting a few teaspoonsfull of brandy into a wine-glass of water, he fed the girls alternately, while Casement and one of the assistants chafed their hands and feet with spirits. The other policeman was sent inside, with instructions to convert the food found in their room into soup. This was quickly done, and the officer returned in less than a quarter of an hour with a very creditable specimen of cookery. Meantime, while the sisters gave symptoms of revival, our hero related their history in full, so far as to him was known.

"I know the cove that played the clergyman," said Bullock, still continuing to feed the sisters as he spoke; "e's one of the artfullest dodgers that the hold country 'as sent hover. "You," he continued, addressing the officers, "fetch out a mattrass, and whatever pillows and blankets you can find. These gals will soon be all right hagain, and then we'll 'ear what's become of the hother fellow"—meaning Ned.

His words, though spoken at random, and more from a desire to quiet Casement's alarm than with any real hope that what he said would come to pass, were quickly proved prophetic. Youth and unbroken constitutions befriended them; nourishment was all they needed; and in less than an hour from the time of their first discovery, Anne was able to relate all that happened them since their departure from the Vulture. Ellen did not speak—but what a heavenly smile was that which lighted up her thin shrunk lips, and restored the lightnings to her eye, when her gaze—long wandering vacantly around the group—first rested upon Casement's face as he knelt beside her, chafing one of her white hands in his, and breathing words of tenderness and hope! How tremulous was the pressure which the wasted fingers gave! How much more eloquent than words the glance which implored him not to leave her! He kissed her hand in mute acknowledgement and promise; and the "efficacy of this treatment" (as the doctors would say) was proved by the first faint blush of color which reappeared on her ashen cheeks.

"And Morgan," said Anne, who had been talking to the detective; "oh, now I recollect it all; he is on board the schooner; he was to be gagged and tied as we were, and stowed away among the lumber in her hold!"

"Sharp's the word," said Bullock, leaping to his feet, and bringing his great hand down on Casement's shoulder with a force that almost took away the other's breath; "the girls are well enough now, and we must hact pretty lively, if we want to lay 'old of hour man. Brand went down to Staten Island last night, and, sure as heggs his heggs, Ned Morgan must he haboard the three-masted schooner that dropped down the bay this morning. Never mind it, girls; these hofficers will take care of you, and we'll be back in double-quick. You wouldn't detain us," he added, addressing himself pointedly to Anne, whose manner in speaking of Ned had not escaped his lynx-like vision; "you wouldn't detain us, young 'ooman, would you, when hevery minute may be hanother chance lost for the poor fellow's rescue?"

The sisters consented eagerly; and Bullock, promising to send a wagon for the prisoners and a carriage for the exhausted girls, once more took the reins and drove off, accompanied by Casement, at a speed never witnessed in Long Island except on the neighboring race-course.

While the tug-boat was getting up steam, the necessary warrants were applied for and procured. A strong posse accompanied the officer, as it was expected that Brand would make a desperate fight. They boarded the schooner just in time to save Ned from suffocation, but not in time to arrest the more important actors in the outrage. Squinting Dick and Maine had plied their oars to some purpose before their flight was discovered, and when it was, their boat was in water too shallow to be followed by anything of a larger craft.

"God of my fathers!" exclaimed Casement, as he leant over the stern-rail, and tried to decipher the inverted letters; "she is called the Isabella de Cascalles!"

"That is my name, signor," said a female voice, with a strongly foreign accent; and turning round he found himself face to face with the lady whose mysterious connexion with his uncle it had become the chief object of his life to understand.

CHAPTER IX.

MRS. MULDOON DOES SOME INVOLUNTARY GOOD—THE CONSUL'S "ENERGY" IS DISAPPOINTED—NOW BACK TO CASTLERONAN.

"The shadow of imputed crime,
Far down his future path was thrown;
It haunted him in every clime
To him revealed alone.
A bitter lot, oh God! thou knows't
That mortal sufferer has to bear—
Who feels, when others envy most,
The gnawings of despair."—WHITTIER.

For the three or four days following the events described in the preceding chapter, it may be well imagined that both Casement and Mr. O'Grady were pretty busily employed.

Not only was the lawyer excited by the strange aspects which the case assumed, in a criminal point of view, he was still more deeply interested by the curious reference which each fresh development seemed to bear upon the question of the Castleronan heirship.

Brand, who might have thrown some light upon the matter, had escaped for the time being, along with his accomplices; a circumstance which Mr. O'Grady, knowing the difficulties of conviction, did not much regret.

"He will not dare," said he, "to show his face in the city for some months, and by the time he returns, we will be better prepared to meet him."

The mysterious lady and her quasi husband had been released on merely nominal bail, there being no evidence of their ownership, and both swearing stoutly that they had embarked as simple passengers. The schooner, however, was declared forfeit, in the absence of any claimant, leaving the dark-eyed lady a second time almost as poor as when she had to beg her coach-fare down to Castleronan.

But, poor as she had become, the lawyer was soon convinced that neither bribes nor threats would avail to wring from her the secret in which, as she imagined, lay unlimited wealth. With her companion there appeared more hope; for though he asked a price ridiculously large, still he did ask one, and would doubtless listen—if not to reason, to starvation then—when what little funds he at present had were exhausted.

Things were in this condition, when Ned Morgan chanced to remember that Brand had made some allusion to the negro arrested at the farm-house, as a person who had full knowledge of everything relating to the mysterious lady. Pete, as he was called, was in the hospital, undergoing treatment for his fractured ankle, and Mr. O'Grady had there some interviews with him, the result of which may possibly appear hereafter. The lawyer also had several private conferences with Mr. Bullock; but if Casement knew of these things at all, he imagined that their subject-matter had reference to the abduction of the sisters, and never dreamed of any nearer interests involved in the investigations. For Ned, having told his story first to Mr. O'Grady, had been duly cautioned by that prudent gentleman to suppress—while relating to Casement the conversation so strangely overheard—that part of those disclosures which more particularly related to the past history of the Senora.

"An' why not, may I ax, sir," inquired Ned, who, of course, knew nothing of the discovery made by Casement at the banker's. "What's the use of bein' tied neck-an'-heels in a sack, wid a swate prospect of bein' dhrowned like a puppy, at the back o' that, if one isn't to speak of what he heard while in durance? Besides, sir, I don't like the notion of keepin' a saycret from the man that keeps few from me; an' though, av coorse, it can be nothin' to him, still your cautionin' me so sthrictly not to mintion it, only makes my throuble greater."

"I cannot explain my reasons just at present, Ned," answered the lawyer, seriously, "and so you must act as you think best. But I tell you candidly that your silence upon the points named may be of the utmost importance: for you and I, between us," he added confidentially, "now hold the key which may restore Castleronan to its rightful heir; and you surely would not mar such a prospects by an untimely whisper."

"An' do you mane to tell me that what I overheard that murdherin' villain say about the Mexican Wild-cat can have anything to do wid the ould place beyant? It's Castleronan I mane," he added, seeing that Mr. O'Grady looked puzzled. "We call it the ould place amongst ourselves, for the rayson that the ould stock have lived in it ever since St. Pathrick was a gorsoon."

"Everything—everything," answered the lawyer quickly; "and now I know that I may rely on your discretion. Promise me only to keep that secret for a few days more, and in return I'll promise you such news as will cause you to bless your kidnappers."

"Faix then it must be the best o' news to make me do that, sir," rejoined Ned, with an incredulous grin. "I'm not misdoubtin' what you say, you see; but you know there are some things that can be done, an' then again some others that can't."

"It is the best of news, and you will find it so if you only wait," said the lawyer cheerfully. "I have almost completed my evidence, and as soon as sergeant Bullock returns, you and I will tell Casement all about it."

The assumption of confidence in the latter part of the sentence had the desired effect; it effectually sealed Ned's lips. To have partnership in a secret with Mr. O'Grady—though he really knew not what the secret was—was an honor which no imprudent zeal must be allowed to forfeit. The lawyer was a keen judge of human nature, and had not missed his calculation when relying on Ned's pride as the best guarantee for silence.

Added to all the other business which crowded on Mr. O'Grady's attention at this time, was the extradition case of John McCarthy, in which he had been retained, at Casement's suggestion, as counsel for the prisoner.

The consul, finding that Squinting Dick, his first model informer, could not possibly appear, next offered a large reward to any one who could identify the present John McCarthy, otherwise known as John Plunkett, of Illinois, with the McCarthy indicted by the grand-jury of the County Wexford, Ireland, for the crime of wilful murder.

The advertisement of course was not so broadly worded; but such was substantially its spirit and design.

Meantime a habeas corpus had been sued out, the return to which fell due upon a certain day: and then, if identity were established, the judges declared they had no option but to remand the prisoner until further advices could be received from Europe for the completion of the evidence. If the identity were not proved, of course the prisoner must be instantly set free.

The Consul in this matter had three difficulties to contend against; or rather one great and radical difficulty out of which the others grew. In the first place the charge was inherently and wholly false—a mere pretext got up to screen the real perpetrators, the police; and many innocent men had already suffered transportation on account of it. In the second place, all the independent papers of the country viewed the transaction in its proper light, and lent their powerful voices in the prisoner's favor. Thirdly, and as a sequence to the former two, it became clear, that no one except he spoke the truth, or was an absolute master in the art of perjury, could hope to pass muster under such a cross-examination as the identifying witness would be compelled to undergo.

A true witness was not forthcoming, and the case was too prominent to allow a false one to be safely used, when suddenly a gleam of light broke in on the darkness of the consular despair, in the shape of a fellow-countryman, who came down from Troy, in answer to the advertisement, and stated that he had been well acquainted with the prisoner long ago, "which is what he won't deny," he added, "if he's the same John McCarthy I used to know in Wexford."

It's an old saying and a true one, that put one Irishman on a spit, and you'll get as many as fifty to turn him.

This candidate for a niche in that gallery of which Jemmy O'Brien is the presiding genius, had undoubtedly—as he stated—known McCarthy in the old country; for on visiting him in his place of confinement, the prisoner held out his hand, addressed him cheerfully by name, and kindly inquired after his prosperity and health.

"I would not care a pinch of snuff for it," said Mr. O'Grady, when discussing the matter with Casement and Ned Morgan, whom he sent for, on learning that the Consul had at length found a credible witness—"I would not mind it in the least; for we could admit the identity and beat them out of Court on the merits—but the fact is, that I fear the anxiety will kill my client. He is wretchedly nervous, and grows thinner and weaker every hour, and if he be remanded to-morrow, the chances are that he may die before his case comes up for final argument."

"Ah then, might I ask your honor what kind ov a rapscallion this witness is?" inquired Ned—whose thoughts, to confess the truth, were running on some possible exploits with a shillelagh having for their object the summary incapacitation of the Consul's "friend."

"Oh, he seems a soft-headed stupid fool himself, who partly does not understand, and is partly sorry for the mischief he is about to do. But he has a wife with him—a flaming shrew, who equally hungers for the reward, and is flattered by the idea that this business will increase her importance. By heaven," continued O'Grady, with a bitter laugh, "one would think, to hear her talk, that she expects an autograph of thanks and a diamond necklace from Queen Victoria, by the first current packet! The officials, of course, flatter her conceit, and between them they have persuaded that poor jackanapes, the husband, that he will be the biggest man in Troy, when he gets back there, if he can only accomplish this job successfully.

* Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856, by THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the U. States, for the Southern District of New-York.

"In Throy, sir," did you say? In Throy?" exclaimed Ned, starting up from his seat, and looking the very picture of bewildered hope.

"Certainly," answered the lawyer, much surprised, for Ned was usually cool. "He is a stove-smith or tinsmith, or something of that sort up there, and his wife has only just come out to him from the old country."

"A stove-smith, and from Throy, and his wife's only just come out, and she a flamin' vixen," almost shouted the excitable Ned. "Just answer me wan question more, lawyer darlin', an' then I'll be contint to die! Isn't the poor spalpeen's name Muldoon?"

Never before was there such a mixture of the ludicrous and solemn, as appeared in Ned's face and tone while he asked this question. One syllable he pronounced as if his life depended on the answer; the next, as if it were barely possible to keep his risibles in even moderate subjection.

"The name is Muldoon," answered Mr. O'Grady, now puzzled in his turn—"perhaps you know something of him?"

Ned looked at Casement—Casement looked back at Ned; and then the two gave way to that reaction of laughter which is always strongest where the most powerful emotions of an opposite kind have been previously excited. They laughed until they cried again; the lawyer caught the infection, and was soon the loudest of the three. It was some minutes before this "passion of the ludicrous," having exhausted itself in protracted peals, again permitted them to resume the discussion.

Having related what they knew of her, Ned was immediately voted a committee of one to wait on Mrs. Muldoon, and endeavor to persuade that right-minded lady to use her matrimonial influence on the other side. He succeeded, as might have been expected, to admiration—reminding her of how intensely her conduct had been appreciated on board the ship, and giving her six hours to take her husband out of the city, unless she wished that luckless individual to hear of divers matters not calculated to add rose-leaves to the hymeneal couch. Mrs. Muldoon (to borrow a phrase from Louis Napoleon) at once "appreciated the supremacy of the crisis," and began to take another view of her duty towards the commonwealth, of which she aspired to become a citizen. A moment before, her "juty" told her that a man like McCarthy should be expelled from the body-politic about to be adorned by her own incarnation of all the virtues and graces: but now, so effectual was Ned's pleading, such an act would be one of base subserviency to British despotism, and she wondered "how a dacint man like her husband could ever have thought of taking part in such a dirty act."

To conclude this episode—Ned saw them off in the cars before returning; and next day the case was of course dismissed in the absence of any evidence of any kind.

The seeming misfortune operated a substantial good: the tone in which the independent press had taken up the matter showed very clearly that it was not a case which British influence would act wisely in pressing. The true nature of the accusation—its baseness and fraud—were clearly proved; and the prosecution was soon after officially discontinued, because pressing it could do no good, while its abandonment might be magnified by hireling prints into an act of gracious and benevolent condescension.

McCarthy grew young again when relieved of a terror which had weighed like a stone upon his springs of life. Like many others of his class, he possessed no moral courage, though personally as brave as a lion; and it was this unfounded fear of an inquiry which he should rather have courted, that had hitherto induced him not only to conceal his name, but also the large fortune which a sudden rise in the value of land and his own successful industry had accumulated.

To Ned his gratitude for the protection extended to his daughters and his own immediate release (though he never knew exactly how the latter feat had been accomplished,) took the substantial form of a heavy dowry to Anne, a farm beside his own in Illinois, and the paternal blessing on their union at such time as it might hereafter take place.

To Casement his gratitude was still more fervent; but the position of the latter rendered its expression a point of more delicacy than he would entrust himself with handling.

In this emergency he applied to Mr. O'Grady to help him; and the results of that consultation, and of other consultations had between our hero and the lawyer, compel us — none reluctant—to return in our concluding chapter to that stately home from which our faithful history set out.

TO BE CONTINUED.

NOVEMBER.

I.

Look where the crisp, sun-painted leaves,
In russet clouds fly past,
While creaking boughs, and naked crests
Bend in the wailing blast!
The gorgeous robe that Summer hung
Upon the chestnut tree,
Beneath fell Autumn's blighting breath,
Lies scattered o'er the lea.

II.

No longer laughs the mocking-bird,
Within the silent dell,
Where through the long, bright, summer days
He played the mimic well.
To warmer climes, and brighter skies,
The jocund warbler flew,
Long ere the Frost King killed the buds
That Summer loves to strew.

III.

Low-whistling quails now strut the field,
Where late the waving grain
Upreared its myriad golden spears,
And beautified the plain.
Along the dreamy woodland aisles
The robin's note resounds,
And still woodpeckers loudly drum,
Within their olden rounds.

IV.

The farmer and the giddy squirrel,
Alike from toil set free,
Now loll before the blazing hearth,
And in the hollow tree.
While one complains of scanty yield,
Viewing his loaded hut,
The other, in his woodland lodge,
Contented cracks a nut!

V.

Wild-screaming ducks, and long-necked geese,
Now seek the lakes and streams,
Forsaking shallow, sedgy ponds,
Where ice already gleams.
Bleak is the wind—the foliage dead,
And humid shadows fall,
While over all there hangs a gloom
That keeps the soul in thrall.

VI.

Yet ev'ry change that Nature brings
With deepest good is fraught,
Though oft her motive lies beyond
The grasp of human thought.
Without some pain, we could not know
The luxury of health,
And if all men alike were rich
What joy would spring from wealth?

BELSHAZZAR.

ACADEMY OF MEDICINE — LECTURE ON ETHNOLOGY.

BY DR. M'ELHERAN.

The Academy of Medicine met in the University on Wednesevening, Nov. 5. Seldom has there been a larger attendance of professors and the elite of the Faculty. The chapel was nearly filled. It was proposed by the Secretary, Dr. Foster, seconded, and carried unanimously, that Dr. McElheran, member of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, be invited to address the Academy on "The Comparative Anatomy of Human Crania."

The lecturer said that he would have sought the high privilege of addressing them two years ago, but he had found the field of his investigations still widening, and he was anxious to come before the Academy with an essay as complete as possible. From our works on Archæology, our museums, and from dentists, hatters, &c., he had reaped a rich harvest of facts. This world's-fair of human specimens, where the sons of men stand side by side, is the greatest school for the student of Ethnology. Whatever credit his work might attain, is therefore due to the free spirit and kindly co-operation of the members of the profession in his adopted country.

The lecturer maintained that Ethnology has hitherto been only an empiricism, because the transcendental doctrines of development, such as they are, have been misapplied or entirely disregarded by Ethnologists. He contends that nature has repeatedly changed her mode of operation, and that she converged her forms in approaching Man, who presents the most distinct evidence of antagonisms, of unity and variety, and of a versatile vital principle, the animus which is not to be confounded with the anima, or soul.

He believed that the true doctrine of development, which he briefly elucidated, and the radiating degeneracy of the human family from the Celtic centre—supported the dogma of original unity. But races have been stereotyped, and evidently as permanently distinct as if they had been created separately. Oppressed Celtic types have repeatedly regained their true position physically and mentally, but no inferior Gothic or other carnivorous race ever rises above a certain level; for in them the vital principle itself seems impaired. They are stereotyped.

The lecturer demonstrated that the brain and skull of the herbivora is superior to those of the carnivora, and that therefore we must have a new classification of animals.

He divides men, according to natural history, into omnivora, herbivora, carnivora. These are the Types, found under various Forms, infantile, athletic, intellectual, in the several continents of the world. We find Ethnology a chaos of contradictions, because authors have not discriminated between forms arrested in development, accidental types, and permanent stereotypes. The common facts of natural history, which elucidate these phenomena, have been disregarded. Transcendental anatomy explains the varieties of forms; that is, degrees of development. Man is naturally omnivorous, but he degenerates and diverges into the other stripes. This fact supplies a philosophic basis for Ethnology, including phrenology and physiognomy. The oval-headed, fine-limbed, beau ideal of the Celtic nations is the central type and perfect form, contrasting with the Goths, Kalmucs, and other square headed carnivora, and with the true Negroes, Hindoos, and other narrow-headed herbivora. The unmixed, carnivorous Anglo-Saxons, have crania like the red savages, being generally broad, short, and distorted. And such is the common characteristic of the Gotho-German at this day. The average white American head is a regular long oval, like the Irish, Welsh, and Highland Scots. The Aborigines of the Old World were and are degenerate in proportion to their distance from the Celtic Mediterranean, degradation being most rapid southward into Africa and northward into Europe and Asia. Degeneracy is more gradual eastward.

The great trunk of the Celtic or central type, stretches through India, where it is modified. In China it is enfeebled and stereotyped. It terminates in Central America, which was the high central realm of the New World, as Celtica was of the old. This radiating degeneracy of men is like a process of crystalzaation, the centre is most perfect—the superficies amorphous. The outer rind of the tree of life is most suborganized. These observations apply to races in their aboriginal nativities. The Anglo-Saxons, for example, still retain the evidences of their descent from the outer rind of humanity in north Europe.

In 1850-51, he made statistics of complexion, &c., of the inhabitants of Great Britain. He was the first to analyze that conglomeration of races, and to demonstrate that the Celtic type of Shakspeare and Wellington is dominant. His published address to the British Association, and his memorable controversy with the Times, in October, 1852, had extinguished Anglo-Saxonism in Britain, but the false theory still prevails in America. His friend and teacher, Dr. Knox, of Edinburg, although merely theorizing, had inoculated our whole scientific and public press with Anglo-Mania. He (Mr. M'Elheran) had spent years of travel, and study investigating this special subject. He made and compared collections of portraits of the Celtic and Saxon races—specimens of which he now exhibited. By a combination of anatomical and artistic skill he had thus been enabled to enlighten dubious history. Beginning with living facts, he had traced the Celtic type back through Italy, Greece, Asia Minor and Egypt, in illustration of their monuments, collections of crania, portraits antique statuary, coins, etc., particularly in the new gigantic work, the Tresor de Neumismatique. While even the latest writers, Nott, Davis, &c., still erroneously dogmatize over a few crania, he had broken up new fields of inquiry, in the reports of hatters, dentists, hair-dealers, &c., and produced aggregate millions of facts in proof of our Celtic origin.

The history of emigration and the peculiarity of our language, so different from the Saxon dialects of East and North England, prove that our ancestors came from the Celtic South and West of England, and the other persecuted Celtic parts of the three kingdoms—not to mention Celtic Spain, Celtic France, and Celtic Belgium.

The Celto-Germans from the borders of the Rhine, probably out-numbered the Gothic immigrants from North Europe, whose type has been submerged in the general Celtic tide. The true American type is therefore not a hybrid Anglo-Saxon, but a pure bred Celtic race; as their language, their history, their physique, and impulsive, versatile genius testify.

This lecture, which fixed the attention of the learned assembly during two hours, was very profusely illustrated with cranial forms and portraits of the Celtic and Gothic races. By merely changing the head-dresses and style of wearing the hair, the lecturer demonstrated that the physiognomy, as well as the phrenology and lathy figure of the French and Gaelic peasantry is exactly and unquestionably the same as the typical Americans, such as Washington, Jackson, Taylor, Clay, Webster, &c. And that the Anglo-Saxon is like the red Indian and other carnivorous savages.

The Academy expressed their approbation of the demonstrations by prolonged rounds of applause.

It was proposed by Dr. J. F. Francis and seconded by Doctor Smith: That the thanks of this Academy be tendered to Dr. M'Elheran for his able and lucid exposition of this intricate subject —The Developments and Causes of Variety in Mankind. Passed unanimously.

Considering the vast future of our country and the international interests involved in the question of race, this discourse of Dr. M'Elheran may be considered an event in our history, as well as a triumph over the popular Anglo-Saxon error.

Literary and Artistic News.

The modest and fragrant violet seems to have derived its name from the Latin via—a way—from the frequency of the wildflower by the roadsides. It was the national flower of Athens, which city, personified by sculptors and painters, was represented as a majestic female, wearing a wreath of violets. The Athenians were originally from Ionia, so called from its abundance of violets, the flower being termed in Greek Ion. The classic poets of old feigned that Ia, daughter of the Phrygian King, Midas, and wife of the handsome shepherd Atys, being persecuted by the addresses of Apollo, who had become enamored of her, she was changed into a violet to avoid him. The Romans crowned their domestic gods, the Lares, with violets. Pliny thought a bride more interesting when surrounded with garlands of violets. Mahomet compared himself to the violet. He said, as its odor surpasses that of all other flowers, so his doctrines excelled all others. At the Floral Games instituted at Toulouse, in the fifteenth century, by Clemence Isaure, for the encouragement of poetry, the first prize awarded to the most skillful competitor was a Golden Violet; the second was a silver Eglantine; the third a silver Marigold. These competitions of the gaya scientia, were held in a magnificent garden, perfumed with the floral creation, on that happiest of days the first of May. The marble statue of Clemence, in the old Town Hall, was crowned with flowers, and an eulogium was recited in her honor. These pleasant, innocent, happy games continued until the Revolution. A pretty device was once invented by a Norman Knight, for a beautiful and accomplished but very retiring lady—a violet almost hidden beneath its leaves—and the motto, Il faut me chercher. The violet has derived from Napoleon le Grand a place in French history. It was a token for those of his followers who were in the secret of his intended return from Elba in 1814. These were bouquets of early violets; and in order to discover who were of their party, the watchword was, "Do you love the Violet?" If the reply was simply "Yes," the questioner passed on, perceiving that the stranger was not one of the initiated. But if the latter repied, "Well," then followed the countersign of recognition, "It will reappear in spring." And they bestowed upon the Imperial exile the symbolical name of "Corporal Violet." The printshops in Paris exhibited engravings representing a bouquet of violets, with a bud below the full-blown flowers. In the outlines of the violets the profiles of Napoleon, Maria Louisa, and their son were ingeniously traced—Napoleon's under a green leaf folded so as to represent a cocked hat, Maria Louisa opposite to him, and the child in the bud beneath.

Mr. Thackeray has published his great attack on the Celtic Character—"Barry Lyndon," a novel that was a failure when first printed, but is now enjoying, thanks to the since acquired reputation of the author, a large sale. The secret of Mr. Thackeray's horror of Ireland and everything Irish is known only to himself; but it is so vivid, so endaring, and so undisguised, that one might almost think that he himself was an Irishman. A stranger never before favored us with such an aversion, and the phenomenon is worth studying.

The first daily newspaper printed in Virginia was issued in 1780, and the subscription price was fifty dollars per annum. The daily paper of that date was not so large as a sheet of common foolscap, and a dozen of them contained about as much reading matter as one finds in a two-cent daily of the present day.

Prince Napoleon is about to publish a book, illustrated with numerous engravings, giving an account of his recent tour in the north of Europe.

English papers state that a statue of the late Duke of Wellington has just been inaugurated at Manchester.

Military News.

FOURTH BRIGADE NEW YORK STATE MILITIA

BRIGADE ORDERS.

New York, Oct. 20th, 1856.

By a Brigade Court-martial, of which Colonel Junius Stears of the 12th Regiment, is President, and Capt. Jacob F. Fauth, and John Kennedy of the 10th Regiment, members, was put on trial, Captain James Huston, of the 69th Regiment, on a charge and specifications preferred by Colonel Jas. R. Ryan, his Commanding Officer, of disobedience of orders.

The Court, "having duly deliberated on the evidence on the part of the prosecution, and having fully considered the same," found the accused not guilty of the specifications and charge.

The Commandant of the Brigade, having considered the proceedings in the case, disapproves of the same. He can find no warrant for the action of the Court, in rejecting the testimony of Colonel Ryan as incompetent, on the ground of his presence in Court during the examination of the previous witness.

The Court could have directed the withdrawal of all the witnesses, except the one under examination: and had the accused "applied for such an order, it would not have been competent for the Court to refuse it." No such application or order, however, was made, and objection to the presence of the witnesses must be regarded as having been waived; and the Court could not legally exclude the testimony of any one of them, on the ground alleged.

Even "if a witness should remain in Court, or return to it after being directed to withdraw, it is no grouud for rejecting his testimony, though it may affect his credibility." (O'Brien, p. 203.)

"It is the general practice, on the day of meeting, for the Judge Advocate to present to the Court lists of the prosecution's and prisoner's witnesses. But this does not preclude either party from producing, so long as his case is not closed, such witnesses as he thinks necessary; and though they may have been in Court during all the preceding part of the trial, the Court cannot legally refuse their evidence." (O'Brien, page 282.)

There having been no proper ground for excluding the testimony of a competent and credible witness, the proceedings under the circumstances, in the judgment of the Commandant of the Brigade, have but little better claim to be regarded as a trial, than if the testimony of any and all the witnesses had been rejected from the beginning.

It is hereby ordered that the said Brigade Court-martial be, and the same is, hereby dissolved.

Captain Huston is relieved from arrest, and will report to his Commanding Officer for duty.

By order of

John Ewen,
Brigadier General Commanding.

Robt. Taylor, Brigade Major and Inspector.

Sixty-ninth Regiment, New York State Militia.

Head Quarters, New York City, Oct. 28, 1856.

The above Brigade orders are hereby promulgated for the information of the members of this Regiment.

Captain James Huston, having reported for duty and having been re-arrested on charge and specifications preferred against him by Captain Michael Corcoran, Lieut. James S. Lyons is hereby ordered to retain command of Company K, to issue, without delay Regimental Orders, No. 30, with the Brigade order attached, to the members of said Company, and to perform such other duties appertaining to the command of said Company as may be necessary, until further orders.

Commandants of Companies will cause a copy of this order to be served on each member of their respective commands.

James R. Ryan, Colonel Commanding.

The Waterford Republican Musketeers, Capt. John Slater, intend making their first annual Target Excursion on Monday, Nov. 17. The Company will meet at the Eagle Drill Rooms, corner Christie and Delancey Sts., and proceed from thence to he River House, Harlem.

Guyon Cadets, Co. D., 9th Regiment.

COMPANY ORDER.

You are hereby requested to Assemble at the Eagle Drill Rooms (with overcoat and side belt) on Monday evening, Nov. 17, at seven o'clock for the purpose of attending the Lecture of Thomas F. Meagher, in aid of the widow and family of the late Capt. P. Kerrigan.

By order of Capt. Thos. Murphy.

N. B.—All military gentlemen desirous of attending the Lecture are requested to meet (in uniform) at the above time and place.

Shelton's American Brass Band will be in attendance.

The first annual Target Excursion of the Irish News Guard, E. K. Butler, Captain, comes off on the 13th inst. The Guard have been assiduous in their preparatory arrangements to secure a most brilliant, pleasant, and successful excursion. They will meet their guests at our office, at 9 o'clock, A. M., and thence proceed, at once, to their shooting ground at the Red House, Harlem.

The Thomas Davis Cadets, under the efficient command of their Captain, James H. Anderson, will proceed to Hoboken, on their first annual Target Excursion, on the 20th inst., starting from Hermitage Hall at 7 1-2 o'clock, A. M.

REVOLUTIONARY MEN AND WANTS.

From a Correspondent of the Petersburgh Gazette.

In the immediate vicinity of the spot (Leetown, Jefferson county, Va.) from which I address you these lines, are the dilapidated and antique residences of three distinguished Major-Generals of the American Revolution. Within a radius of one mile and a-half, lived long and weary years, Charles Lee, the sinister hero of Monmouth; Horatio Gates, the loser of the battle of Camden and the Southern campaign; and Adam Stephen, the early friend of Washington. In this little village—on whose golden forests I am gazing—under the shadows of the great woods here, remote from camps and the flashing world, these three warriors rusted out the remainder of their lives in inglorious repose—the swords in moth-eaten scabbards, no more to be drawn. Here, if I mistake not, two of them died, and soon even these lingering memorials of them will crumble and disappear, as their figures are fading from the general mind!

Lee's house is a hundred paces from the little assemblage of houses called by his name, and is an oblong building of stone, with chimneys at each end and midway, low, with a rude porch, depending, as it were, above the rough door, and a few outhouses. Gates lived somewhat further from the town, in a plain, undecorated building, and Stephens occupied a mansion probably built by the earliest pioneers of the valley, in which every thing is small and confined but the fire-place. But that is neither small nor confined; it is grand—enormous! Around it, how many good companions must have gathered, in the olden day, aud what sounds of revelry shook the rafters overhead! You may read of Adam Stephen in Spark's edition of the writings of Washington, and there you will find that, among the hardy gentlemen who stood shoulder to shoulder with the young chief at Winchester, when the Indians ravaged the valley a hundred years ago, was Lieutenant Stephen. A landed proprietor hereabouts, he doubtless resented the trespass of the Indians upon his grounds, stretching towards the foot of the great North Mountain; at least we know that he did good service. He was afterwards an effective officer of the revolutionary struggle, but left the army, about the period of the battle of Princeton, disgusted at something or other, and so came hither and lived and died.

Of Gates and Lee more is known. The story of the woful quarrel of the latter with Washington at Monmouth you may read in full in the recently published third volume of Irving's great work. It is probable that history will show that Lee was not so much in the wrong as the world supposes. That he made a blunder in ordering his forces to retreat, and that his retreat very nearly ruined all the plans of Washington and lost us the battle. This is certain; but it was probably an error of judgment, not a want of courage. In Leutz's great picture he sits his horse sullenly before the chief, whose hot anger flames out. All that he did and said after was sullen, too, unfortunately. High words, indignant correspondence, Washington cold and haughty, Lee raging; then a court-martial, suspension for a a year, and Lee in utter disgust threw up his commission, and came hither "to hoe tobacco, that being the best school for a general," he said with a sneer at Washington. And here in this poor and obscure dwelling, as I have said, rusted out the sharp spirit of Lee, and fell into dust and oblivion. With few neighbors, no friends, surrounded by hounds and horses and making the chase his only occupation nearly, thus lived the General and died. One day, long afterwards, says a tradition of the neighborhood, Washington sent his old adversary a note, saying that he would call on a certain morning, and see him, and that he hoped all past contention and bitterness had been forgotten; he was coming to see him as an old comrade in arms, as a friend.

On the day fixed for the visit, Lee sent away all his servants, placed upon the locked front door a paper with "No meat cooked here to-day," written thereon, and then followed his servants, leaving Washington to knock in vain. He never returned; and with the passing year, the eccentric soldier grew more morose and repelling. The ground floor of his house was divided by chalk lines merely, forming thus four compartments. In the first he kept his books; in the second was his bed; his saddles and hunting-gear in the third; the fourth was used as a kitchen. He could thus sit in one spot, he said, with grim humor, and overlook his entire household. Tired of his dogs and his silent misanthropy at last, he commenced his "Queries, Political and Military," an attack on Washington; but the world declined listening to him; and then, tired of life, the cynical spirit of Charles Lee fled to other realms. His last words were: "Stand by me my brave Grenadiers!" and so he ended.

A word now of the third of my trio of warriors. Horatio Gates came to the old house yonder after Camden. It was the gates who had taken Burgoyne, and whose popularity at one time overshadowed Washington's. But now, alas! how fallen. The breath of an indignant public opinion had blasted him, and his laurels were all seared and withered. He had lost the battle of Camden—had been deposed from the command of the army of the South, to make way for Greene; over his head lowered a heavy cloud of public execration almost, and Congress, it was said, had prepared its thunderbolt to strike him. But the bolt never fell. The sad soldier's sorrow was respected. They left him to die in peace here—enough punishment that the magnificent drama of the Revolution was played out, independent of one who had enacted so splendid a part in the earlier acts.

These three old wooden houses are the visible remains of three vigorous lives—in them, to the musing eye, the spirits of Gates, and Lee, and Stephen hover around them still, speaking in every whisper of the pine tree and the oaks—those ancient oaks of the noble, English looking "chase," which murmur yonder beneath the window—through whose lengthened vista appears the lone mansion of General Adam Stephen. Here, within a gunshot almost of each other, these men of history reposed—though not happily we must conclude—after all their struggles. The current of the Opequon, resonant in old days with savage shouts, and dyed with blood, murmured by them, and perhaps spoke to their minds of other days—typifying human things which ever bud and flow, and change like the skies of autumn yonder—the gorgeous leaves whose colors vary with each day.

Court Scandal in Paris—The Emperor and Empress.

Paris Correspondence of the Manchester Guardian.

During all last winter the conduct of his Imperial Majesty had been anything but what can be termed regular, and his health had been much the worse for his excesses. The brain showed manifest signs of weakness, and considerable alarm was felt by those around him. One fair lady, in particular, had been the object of the Imperial attentions, but a coldness had ensued, when the journey to Plombieres effected a reconciliation. At Plombieres, unfortunately, more than one witness can speak to the exceeding irregularities committed. Upon his return those nearest the Emperor were painfully affected by the often-repeated proof he gave of cerebral perturbation. The word 'absences' was used to characterise this state, but these "absences" were upon one or two occasions so strong, that between those most immediately called upon to watch and assist in guiding the progress of circumstances, the near eventuality of a regency was more than once seriously discussed. The Emperor was most solemnly warned by his medical attendants, but he left Paris for Biarritz undetermined to stay at the seaside, and without giving up his project of returning to Paris alone. However at Biarritz his resolution was at length taken to remain during the whole time of the Empress's stay, and when he returned to St. Cloud it was the positive opinion of all his medical advisers that the crisis had been for the moment entirely warded off, but that he absolutely must resolve to lead a regular life, under the pain of the gravest possible consequences.

Now, as the chronicles of palaces are matters of history, I will enter into some few other details that indirectly bear upon all this. For the first eighteen months or two years after his marriage, it is a matter of European notoriety how strictly the Empress was imprisoned in an etiquette which it was Louis Napoleon's vanities to render starched and stiff as that practised at the courts of what are termed the "legitimate" monarchs of Europe. Like all things affected, this was carrried to a perfectly ridiculous pitch, and the Empress, by a life so contrary to all her antecedents and habits, was made proportionably unhappy. This gave way, however, from the moment when, by concessions in his own interior, the Emperor sought to secure indulgence for his behaviour out of doors; and the result is, now, almost free permission for the Empress to resume the habits which were familar to her as Mdlle. Montijo, and which, however innocent they may appear to us, are regarded by public opinion in this country as unpardonable eccentricities. For instance. two little acecdotes will suffice to illustrate the position. Very shortly after her marriage, the Empress declared that she would go out and take a walk on the streets of Paris; her grand mistress, the Princess d'Essling appeared, self summoned, and said the proceeding was contrary to etiquette, but that, if her Majesty chose, she was willing te follow her Majesty in a carriage and go whither her Majesty thought fit. A scene ensued, the Empress was angry and flew to the Emperor to be supported against Madame d'Essling; but the Emperor very gently but inflexibly supported the grand mistress, and the Empress found that her liberty was lost. The other day, when the Emperor left for Plombieres, Madame d'Essling appeared ready to mount guard over the Empress, to whom she very quietly observed, that the instant the Emperor was absent, the duties of her office called upon her not to leave the Empress! "That is what we shall see," was the indignant reply; and a telegraphic despatch to Plombieres upon the very instant demanded if it was intended to appoint a duenna to watch over the actions of the imperial prince's mother? This time the reply was that the Empress was at liberty to do as she liked with Madame d'Essling. In this aspect everything is altered, and the pony phætons driven by the Empress herself, her attendance at bull fights dressed in the Spanish cotsume, and her shooting at St. Cloud, attired in a sort of fancy dress, all these seemingly little incidents are signs to those who live in the close intimacy of the imperial court. You must live in the heart of French society to know how severely these various fancies of the Empress are judged by high and low, and by the imperialists as much as by others; but Louis Napoleon has lost the right to gainsay his wife's wishes, and he could now with great difficulty compel her to that frigid dignity, to that perpetual observance of decorum which French prejudice in all ranks exacts from persons of exalted rank.

One of his oldest friends, speaking to me yesterday, of Louis Napoleon, said, "I think I see him now before me," as he went one day with the Empress and all their suite to inspect the works at the Elysee. The Empress with a bound, nearly a jump, crossed some planks, when, in an instant, the Emperor, telling her sharply to stop, came to her side, took hold of her arm, and said in a loud tone of great displeasure, "Do walk as you ought to do, Eugenie; what will all those people think of you?" and my interlocutor added, shaking his head, "I am afraid he would not stop her now; I am afraid he has no longer the right to make any observation."

In answering the question, "war or famine—which the most destructive"—the London Times gloats absolutely over the efficacy of the "infernal machine" invented by the British rulers for the destruction of nearly 2,000,000 of the Catholic population of Ireland. Here is the reasoning of that London paper:—

Nicholas Markey, Esq., of Walshestown, gave his usual harvest home dinner on Sunday, the 19th ult., to over 100 of his laborers and neighbors. The repast was of the most substantial kind, and was served up in abundance, with copious libations of ale, porter, and whiskey punch.

SARAH CURRAN'S GRAVE.

The Rev. J. Beechinor, Parish Priest of New Market, county Cork, has addressed the following letter to the editor of the Limerick Reporter, respecting the grave of Sarah Curran, the betrothed of Robert Emmet:

"Dear Sir—As it were duty of either a historian or writer to do justice to the memory of the great, I cannot conceal my surprise how the above-named 'compiler,' in his sweet words 'The Exile,' should have committed so great a mistake as to tell his readers that the remains of our celebrated countrywoman, Sarah Curran, are deposited in the garden of her father, at the Priory, near Dublin. This misstatement was contradicted by some anonymous writer of yours, under the initials 'W. C. G.,' on the 16th April last; but learning from several respectable and well-informed persons, from different parts of Ireland, that they never noticed this anonymous contradiction, I now beg to assure Mr. Finden and the public, that he has been completely imposed on, from whatever source he has drawn his information, as the following facts will clearly prove.

"About seven years ago, the grave of Miss Curran, in the churchyard of New Market, was opened to bury a near relative, and the breast-plate on her coffin was found beneath. It was in a high state of preservation, and contained the following inscription: 'Sarah Sturgeon, died July, 1808.' The plate was for several days in the hands of the present Mr. John Hartney, postmaster of New Market, who gave me therefrom the above inscription. Now I fancy any impartial person would be satisfied from the above facts alone, that the remains of Miss Curran—or rather Mrs. Sturgeon—lie here among us, beneath the green sod in the churchyard of New Market. But lest that fact may not be deemed sufficient, let me state that her husband, Major Sturgeon, sent over from Sicily—where she died—a beautiful marble slab, which by some accident was misdirected to 'Newbury, near Mallow,' where it still lies, instead of at New Market, its original destination. But, to make assurance doubly sure, I here insert—at the particular request of the parties—the names of some of the inhabitants of New Market who attended the funeral of our heroine, and who still distinctly remember the day and the late hour in the evening when the procession arrived. In short, the interment of Miss Curran—the name she is best known by—in New Market, is as well-established a fact in this neighborhood as any fact in history. And when I tell you, sir, that I have been Parish Priest of New Market for 26 years, you will readily admit I have had ample time to test the accuracy of my statement. I therefore hope Mr. Finden will, in some future edition of 'The Exile,' correct the mistake he has been led into—I am sure unintentionally—for he may with as much truth say that the great Curran, her father, was born in Dublin, instead of New Market, his birth-place, as that his daughter Sarah, is interred at the Priory—a place so called from the Priory near New Market, where Curran, Baron Yelverton, Counsellor Kellett, and the famous Arthur O'Leary, so often met after the Cork summer assizes, and where the song called the 'Monks of the Screw' was composed and often merrily sung. I request a place, Mr. Editor, for these remarks, in your next number, as I think it but right to remove a wrong impression from the public mind. I am, dear sir, your obedient servant.

A younger daughter of Curran's was really interred in the garden of the 'Priory.'"

ROYAL PLUNDER.

The whole amount of net public English revenue averages £55,000,000 a year, but of this however £28,000,000 is disbursed to pay the interest on the National Debt. This leaves twenty-seven millions sterling for all other payments. Let us see what they are. The Civil List is the whole payment made to Royalty for its support, and to maintain what is called the "honor and dignity of the Crown." The actual amount placed at the Queen's own disposal is £385,000 per annum. However, besides all this money she gets what may be called money's worth, for she occupies several palaces (on the repairs and keeping up of which a good deal of the public money is annually expended,) and is exempted from all taxes—postage stamps excepted—which every other person in her realm has to pay. She faithfully promised, through Sir Robert Peel in 1842, to submit her salary to the Income Tax, but she contrived to evade doing so. Prince Albert, as her husband, has a separate allowance of £30,000 a year, which his wife has contrived to double, by heaping on him a variety of profitable appointments. His Royal Highness, who possesses large accumulative propensities, not only receives £30,000 a year as Governor of Windsor Palace, but also condescends to accept £300 a year as Constable of that Castle—his wife's residence. There are other Royal pensioners. England continues to pay £50,000 per annum to Leopold King of the Belgians—an amount settled on him in 1816, when he married the Princess Charlotte. There are also annuities of £30,000 to the Queen's mother; of £17,000 to the Duchess of Gloucester; of £6,000 to the Duchess of Cambridge; of £6,000 between a couple of Cambridge princesses, and of £12,000 to the Duke of Cambridge. This last named gentleman has pay as General in the army, and Colonel in the the Guards, besides having salaries as Ranger of Hyde and St. James' Parks. He was lately appointed Commander-in-chief of the army, at a salary of £9 9s. 6d. a day, or £3,385 a year; but as the person holding this appointment gets double pay if he also be a Field Marshal, it may be safely prophesied that ere long, His Royal Highness will hold the "baton," carrying with it the increase of revenue. As the command he holds is administrative rather than active, the Duke of Cambridge will probably get on very well—though he did not superlatively distinguish himself in the Crimea. We may take disbursements in one shape or another, to Queen Victoria and her family, as close upon £600,000 a year.

The seven o'clock train on Tuesday evening, (the 14th ult.,) says the Limerick Reporter, conveyed two eminent personages of Oriental royalty, with their attendants to our city, namely—His Royal Highness the Rajah of Scinde, Ameer Modleigh, and his son the Imperial Prince, and heir apparent to the Crown of that extensive and important Indian territory. They were met by special omnibuses from Cruise's hotel, where apartments had been engaged by William John Shaw, Esq., Secretary and managing Director of the City of Limerick Steam Company, to whom the Ameer had letters of introduction from the Directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Company at Southampton. His Highness was attired in a flowing tunic of heavy green silk, most richly embroidered with deep gold embroidery, and a turban of white muslin ornamented with costly jewels. His son, a most intelligent and beautiful looking youth, about twenty years of age, wore a superb robe of Irish poplin, manufactured by Messrs. Atkinson, of College-green, Dublin, on which was displayed in rich relief the Irish harp, shamrock and wolf-dog. The expressions of His Royal Highness, through Mr. Coffey, his travelling secretary and interpreter, were most kind and friendly towards the Irish people; and his acceptation of their kindly feelings, as manifested towards him were warm and cordial in the highest degree. Among his attendants were His Highness's two chief cooks—the principal of them Ougley Ben. There were two pipe-bearers, and two chief valets or yeomen of the guard. Next came in full and grand Oriental costume, the chief of the Royal Body Guard, bearing a vast "yatachan" or sword of state, emblematic of the Imperial dignity of his royal master. Then came two valets carrying richly-finished and decorated arquebusses. On arriving at the hotel they were shown to their apartments by Mr. Thomas Cruise, son of the proprietor. There they all partook of Coffee, after which their cooks came down to the fire-place at the bar parlor and there prepared the evening meal for the Imperial family. In this process they would allow none of the servants of the hotel to approach them. They tolerated, however, the presence of young Mr. Cruise, and when the mess, consisting of boiled milk, candy, butter, honey, herbs, rice, currie and various other savory ingredients in the exclusive possession of the Indian cooks, was ready, they allowed Mr. Cruise to taste it, handing him a portion thereof on a large silver dessert spoon. After he had tasted it he handed the spoon back to the head cook of the Ameer, but what was his surprise to see him throw it back as far a distance as he could, declaring that it could be no longer used again after an infidel had profaned it with his touch. Accordingly, one of the bar-maids took it up, and no manner of objection being raised thereto in any quarter, very properly made her own of it as a memento of the Rajah of Scinde's visit to Limerick. At half-past eleven o'clock His Highness left on a visit to Lord Dunboyne, at Knockpogue Castle, county Clare.

"In March, 1851, the number of men and women in Ireland was reduced to 6,552,000 from 8,175,000, their number in June, 1841. In other words, the Irish population had absolutely decreased in ten years by more than 1,500,000. This, of course, was the effect of the famine and its concomitant pest. No extent of emigration, such as was possible for Ireland could explain it. Emigration at the very utmost could only have kept the numbers of the popluation at or near the same level; it is entirely contrary to experience to suppose that it could both have neutralized the average annual excess of births and then reduced that level so signally. Emigration has undoubtedly contributed its own effect; but, after making all possible allowances for this, a very large proportion remains to be accounted for, and nothing else will account for it but the death and the plague. And what an idea of their intensity is impressed on us by the multitude of their victims! More than a million human beings stricken down in less than three years by hunger and disease!—a population nearly equal to half of all Scotland—more than half that of London proper—fully equal to that of four first-rate English cities—larger than that of one of the Canadas and exceeding that of some half dozen other not unimportant English colonies! Men talk of war as if it were the great destroyer of life. But what have two years of this war, with all the means and appliances of the destructive art, and—more deadly still—with the combined horrors of disease without remedies, and climate without protection—of tents and clothing that exposed men already prostrate under typhus or dysentery to the piercing blasts and cutting sleet of the Crimea—what have they done in comparison with that pest which slew its countless victim in the stillness of a two years' unbroken peace? Even if the loss on the side of our enemy be allowed to include the mortality among the inhabitants of the Crimea, or that motley band which may have accompanied the Russian armies without sharing their dangers in the field—the total am't of those who perished on their side and that of the allies will not equal the victims of the Irish famine. The cost has been enormously great—perhaps the benefit purchased is equivalent.

Lord Clermont, says the Dundalk Democrat, is collecting from some of his tenants the arrears which accumulated in the famine years. The rich landlord insists that these debts, with the exception of 25 per cent., shall be paid him, while poorer landlords generously forgave their tenants every penny of the arrears which they incurred during the years of distress, when Ireland was covered, as it were, with a black pall, the emblem of death and desolation. What, in the name of wonder, induces him to act this miserable part? Has he not money enough for his wants? Could he not resolve to do one generous turn in his life, and say to his tenants—"These debts were contracted when famine cast its dark shadow on the land; and as I hope to be forgiven myself, I will release you and let you go free." Lord Clermont is offering his tenants leases, but the cost of these instruments, ranging from £14 to £16, we are told, deters them from accepting them. In our opinion, they would be much better without them. All the good they could derive from such leases would be, that the landlord could not raise their rents during their term. But when the leases expire they may, probably, be asked to surrender their holdings; and, should they demand compensation for their improvements, they would be told that nothing of the kind could be given, as they had enjoyed these improvements during the term of the leases. We think, then, that they would be much better without these short leases, for public opinion would give them more protection than a lease for 21 years, and they would always have the right to claim compensation for permanent improvements.

At Clonakilty, on 14th ult., a riot took place on the occasion of polling to determine whether that place should be put under the Towns Improvement Act. At the close of the proceedings, the numbers were 40 for the adoption of the measure, and 38 against. The success of the popular measure, though only carried by a majority of two, was evinced in great cheering. Large mobs paraded the streets, and towards night the throng proceeded to deeds of violence against the persons and houses of the opponents of the measure. The entire town seemed to be in possession of the mob, who proceeded from house to house, smashing windows, and venting their dislike on persons and property with hardly any check. A plot was formed to attack Mr. W. Jones, but that gentleman fortunately escaped. The mob buried him in effigy; they got a coffin with his name upon it, and having triumphantly carried it through the streets, they buried it in a bog with every circumstance of contumely and derision. Several persons were hurt severely with stones, and among others the police were seriously bruised. One man had his thumb broken.

Mr. Henry Roche, the master of a National School in Mountrath, has invented an ingenious machine for teaching mathematical geography. From a wheel, revolving on its own axis (a fixed upright iron rod), hangs a globe representing the sun, and with the wheel a second one of equal diameter is connected by a band. It is made to revolve round the former wheel on a frame—or we might, to be clear, call it a horizontal lever. But for this connection, the second wheel would revolve on its own axis, whereas now, at all periods of the revolutions of the lever, it presents the same surface to the same point. The shaft of the revolving wheel is continued downwards and bent, at its lower part, to an angle of 23 1-2 degrees, and upon it is placed a globe representing our earth. Moving the lateral arm, or lever, round the upright rod which forms the axis of the first wheel, the globe approaches and departs with increasing and decreasing velocity, and in short the little globe revolves precisely as our own great one does, placing before the young scholar's eye, in simple guise, astronomical knowledge without which the meaning of such expressions as "tropics," "polar circles," "zones," "ecliptic," &c., would be enigmas. Without a single word from his instructor he can see why we can find every length of day and night between six months and six minutes.

A quantity of coals, packed in a large, but close coal store, at the gas works, Enniscorthy, were found to be on fire. Notwithstanding that every exertion was made by breaking down the walls of the store and getting out the coals, the fire continued until next evening, and we regret to hear that much damage is done to the store. The coals are quite charred, and thus deprived of the property for producing gas.

At the October Fair of Cootehill, county Cavan, there were 20,000 persons present. Springers ranged as high as £15. There was a considerable number of sheep, which rated at 25s. to 55s.; hoggets at 22s. to 45s.; and stores at 19s. to 36s. There was a reduction in the price of store pigs, but bacon pigs sold very high.

The Annals of Tighernach.—Competent authorities have decided that the earliest and most trustworthy annals are those of Tighernach, whose death is thus recorded in the "Annals of the Four Masters," at the year 1088:—"Tighernagh Ua Braein, chief successor of Cairan and Coman, died at Imhaidh Cairain (St. Keeran's bed); he was a paragon of learning and history." Casting aside all the very early bardic legends relating to Ireland, he "makes the historical epoch begin from Kimbaoth and the founding of Emania, about the 18th year of Ptolemy Lagus, before Christ 289," (recte 305) and says, "Omnia monumento Scotorum usque Kimboath incerta erant." "The quotations from Greek and Latin authors, in Tighernagh, are very numerous; and his balancing their authorities against each other manifests a degree of criticism uncommon in the iron age in which he lived." Five copies of this valuable work exist—two in Oxford, two in the Royal Irish Academy, and one in the library of the University of Dublin which last to be the most perfect. It is written in the Irish character throughout, upon paper, foolscap size; but being imperfect at the end, the name of the transcriber, or any reference to the original from which he wrote, had been lost. "The handwriting," says Mr. Curry, "is one with which I am not acquainted, but I believe it to be as old as 1650 at least; there are 98 pages, and no date appears in the original hand down to the year 1308; but the preceding dates are in the hands of Roderick O'Flaherty's time, if not his own."

IRISH MARRIAGES.

Oct. 15, in St. Anne's Church, Dublin, the Rev. George Finlay, to Isabella, daughter of the Rev. Gilbert King, rector of Langfield, county Tyrone.

Oct. 16, at the Westleyan Centenary Chapel, Stephen's Green, Dublin, by the Rev. T. N. Hull, Thomas H. Evans, to Anne Alicia, daughter of John Fannin.

Oct. 23, at Booterstown, Francis Sullivan, Navan, to Fannie, daughter of John Rogers, Woodberry, county Dublin.

Oct. 21, in St. Anne's Church, William Johnston, of Kinlough House, county Leitrim, to Sarah, daughter of the Rev. W. A. Percy, rector of Kiltoghert.

Oct. 18, at Donnybrook Church, Edward J. Locke Pring, to Fanny, daughter of Wm. Hayes, of Trimleston, county Dublin.

Oct. 22, at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Blackrock, Henry Talbot, Shrewsbury-terrace, Rathgar, to Maryanne, daughter of the late Fred'k. Robt. Bailey.

Aug. 26, at Kingston, Canada West, David Rutherford, son of the late John Rutherford, of Rutland-square, to Emily Dorothea, daughter of Geo. Sinclair Gordon.

Oct. 16, at St. Patrick's, Cork, David Basil Duane, Professor Catholic University, to Eliza Margaretta, daughter of James Keane, Affghan House, Cork.

Oct. at Armagh, near Tralee, Daniel O'Connell Ffrench, eldest son of the late Nicholas Joseph Ffrench, M.P., and grandson of the late Daniel O'Connell, M.P., to Nora Mary, daughter of the late Maurice O'Connor, M.D., of Tralee.

Oct. 14, at Askeaton, Peter H. Roe, Surgeon of the Gold Coast Corps, to Grace, daughter of E. Westropp, of Ballysteen, county Limerick.

Oct. 15, at Tynan, Edward Chaloner Knox, Captain in the Royal Tyrone Fusiliers, to Alice Hewitt Cardine, daughter of the late Acheson St. George, of Wood Park, county Armagh.

Oct. 16, at Passage, Cork, Richard Welstead Day, M.D., to Annie, daughter of Wm. Browne, of Mount Prospect, Passage West.

Oct. 14, at Lurgan, county Armagh, Charles Chapman, of Soldierstown, Moira, to Margaret Anne, daughter of George Ruddell, of Laurel Mount, Lurgan.

Oct. 15, in Belfast, James Reid, of Lisnow, Lisburn, to Lizzie, daughter of G. Roberts, of Belfast.

At the Roman Catholic Church, Castlerea, B. T. O'Brien, of French Park, to Rose, daughter of Edw'd. M'Dermott, of Castlerea.

Oct. 15, at Cheltenham, Nathaniel Montgomery, of Cullies House, county Cavan, to Amelia Mary Anne, daughter of the late Lieutenant Colonel Holmes.

Oct. 16, in Paris, Walter Trevor Stannus, son of the Dean of Ross, to the Hon. C. Geraldine Vesey Fitzgerald, daughter of Lord Fitzgerald Vesey.

Sept. 23, at Kemptville, Canada West, the Rev. John Strutt Lauder, to Henrietta S. Lyon, daughter of the late J. B. Lewis, Captain in the 88th Connaught Rangers.

Oct. 22, in the Parish Church of Eirke, county of Kilkenny, by the Rev. J. T. Marsh, Mr. Robert Baskin, of Upper Buckingham-street, Dublin, to Kate, eldest daughter of Richard Ringwood, Esp., Tillavolty, Johnstown, county of Kilkenny.

IRISH DEATHS.

Oct. 21, Robert Brownrigg, of Norrismount, in the county of Wexford, D.P. aged 67 years.

Oct. 13, in Gloucester-street, Captain James Galbraith, of the Royal Tyrone Fusiliers, son of the late John Galbraith, of Roscary.

Oct. 16, at Fitzwilliam-square, West, aged 75 years, Eliza, widow of William Campbell, M.D., formerly of Fermoy.

Oct. 21, at her residence, 11 Sinnott Place, Miss Agnes Byrne.

Oct. 22, at his residence, 58 Smithfield, Michael Gaffney, corn factor.

Oct. 21, at Mountpleasant Avenue, James W. Alcock.

Oct. 17, at Greenville Lodge, Rathmines, Isabella Rose, wife of Digby P. Starkey.

Oct. 15, at Mellifont View, Kingstown, Mary, wife of J. Walsh.

Oct. 21, at Norrismount, in the county of Wexford, Robert Brownrigg.

Oct. 11, at Coleraine, the Rev. Samuel Carlisle, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Congregation of Clabber.

Oct. 13, at Omeath, county Louth, Catherine, widow of James Bell.

Oct. 16, in Tralee, suddenly, Mrs. Mary Power Den, late of Tinhallow House, county Waterford.

Oct. 17, in Belfast, Elizabeth Bell, one of the Society of Friends.

Oct. 14, at Graystone Lodge, near Moria, county Down, William, eldest son of John Duglas.

Oct. 17, George, son of the late Rev. W. D. H. M'Ewen, of Belfast.

Oct. 18, at Thurles, aged 66 years, Miss Bradshaw, eldest daughter of the late Geo. Bradshaw, of Corbally, county Tipperary.

Oct. 19, at Ardsallagh House, county Waterford, Olivia, relict of Dominick Ronayne, M.D.

Oct. 14, at Aclare Castle, Dunleer, county Louth, aged 82 years, Mrs. Plunkett.

Oct. 20, John, son of John Bouchier, of Baggotstown, county Limerick.

Oct. 16, in Bath, aged 83 years, Louisa Christina, daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Tolson.

Oct. 9, in Paris, Thomas R. Bruce, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, of Benvenue, Rostrevor, county Down.

Aug. 18, at Lahore, Bengal, Ensign Robert O'Dell, of the 81st regiment, son of Major H. E. O'Dell.

June 17, at Amherst, Australia, Thomas Jefferson, third son of the late Ths. Jefferson Stamper, of Monaline, in the county Wicklow.

Sept. 2, at Dum-Dum, near Calcutta, Lieutenant F. P. Drought, of the 53d regiment, youngest son of the late John T. Drought, of Whigsborough, in the King's County.

Oct. 16, at 3 Merrion Row, Mrs. Maryanne Levey.

At his residence, Phibsborough, Henry M'Connell.

Quite suddenly, Mrs. Patrick Knox, of Inch St. Laurence, county Limerick.

At Carrigrenane, County Cork, Arthur Morton, eldest child of Capt. Charles Tuckey.

At Ballingarry, county Limerick, Richard Maunsell, third son of Rot. Odell, Esq., M.D.

American News.

THE FRAUDS AND OUTRAGES IN BALTIMORE.

The Baltimore Republican of the 5th says: "There is not a man in this city who does not know that the bloody tragedy of yesterday, called an election, was a mere horrible mockery—that thousands of illegal votes were polled by the opposition of Democracy, and that thousands of honest voters were prevented from giving their votes by the organized and armed bands of ruffians who at an early hour took possession of the polls, and kept possession throughout the day. In several of the Wards, the majority of the Know-Nothings is greater than the whole legal vote, and yet the Democrats were scarcely permitted to poll a vote. These facts were early reported to the Mayor, and were treated by him with perfect indifference; his police force were enlisted everywhere on the side of the rowdies, and the increased vote which they received shows conclusively that their services were very effective—against the Democracy.

"The course of the Know Nothing press, including the American Patriot, has been such as to encourage and stimulate the state of things which has brought such disgrace upon the city. The Patriot, with a vulgarity and indecency only equaled by the Clipper, sneered at the Governor, and ridiculed his desire to maintain the peace of the city, and complimented Mayor Hincks upon his refusal to accept of any aid, thus showing a perfect understanding among the coalitionists as to the plan of carrying the election in this city. We would ask what the coalitionists have accomplished by their violence, and fraud, and murders?"

The following is a list of the killed and wounded, as far as we have been able to ascertain:

KILLED.—Albert B. Clark, John Parker, Washington Daity, Jas. Woods.

WOUNDED. — Richard Pryor, fatally; Wm. Bright, Thomas Divins, Edward Elliot, officer Hand, John Anderson, Jas. Wm. Hinton, Bridget McCadden, German woman, Hack Quinn, Mrs. Hount, James Wilson, German, unknown; German, unknown; James Wilson, boy; Martin Haley, Daniel White; man unknown; German, unknown; Samuel Jackson, dangerously; boy, unknown, fatally; —— Hitzelberger, fatally; John Haupt, Callender Patterson, fatally; Columbus Johnson, Simon Haupt, fatally; Samuel Benjamin, fatally; John C. Owings, Thomas McDonald, fatally; Owen McDonald, Wm. Sproule, boy, fatally; John Mayor, fatally; Basil Root, Patrick Green, Robert Parkhill, James Dryden, Chas. Chenowith, Washington Tate, fatally; —— Fell, dangerously; James Bishop, Barney Culley, Wm. McCafferty, Jacob McCurdy, Charles Ensor, Jas. Klumeyer, James Barvey, Wm. Herbert, Philip Dagner, Chas. Smith, John Kinsey, Henry Shulter, John Metier, Thomas Lamb, Jno. Ryan, —— Wills, William Williams, Samuel Smith, Byd Mitchell, John Holbrook, Joseph Brown, Thomas Bartlett, fatally; James Norris, boy; Thomas Murray, officer Stephens, Nicholas Gill, Samuel Miskinnis, fatally; George Benjamin, Peter Havilan, fatally; —— Stansbury, —— Jones, fatally; William Chambers, James George, Daniel Root, Charles Bowers, John Parkhill, James Hooper, boy; David Huxford, Jas. Mondon, S. B. Whitelock, Thomas Burgess, C. Colgate, —— Wyatt.

A colored man, named Henry Washington, residing on Gallows Hill, was in the Belair market when the fight began in that neighborhood, which so frightened him that he fell dead. Coroner Stevens summoned a jury of inquest, who returned a verdict of death from disease of the heart, produced by fright.

DESTRUCTIVE TORNADO IN ILLINOIS.

The village of Littleton, situated about 15 miles from the Illinois River, in Schuyler County, was visited by a most destructive tornado or whirlwind, on the 23rd ult., by which nearly every house in the place was entirely destroyed, and several persons injured, some of them it is feared fatally. We obtain the following particulars from a private letter received in this city yesterday:—

Beginning at the south end of the village and on the east side of the street is Jacob Sowers' house, which is completely demolished, and the furniture destroyed, broken up and carried off with the wind. Mr. Sowers' arm broken and otherwise injured. Next the Baptist church all torn to pieces, and scattered in all directions; part of the roof was found about two and a half miles distant. The Methodist church next, brick, was torn down to the foundation. This was a very strong, well-built house, but now a mass of ruins to the ground.

Next was Wm. Snyder's house, occupied by Z. Abbott and Mr. Edmonson. This was very much wrecked, windows, &c., torn out, and the timbers thrown into it, but the body of the house is still standing though moved from its foundation several feet. Part of both families occupying it were slightly injured. Next was Rev. Mr. Stewart's (Baptist minister) house, entirely demolished with its contents—occupied with himself and wife—not injured. Next was Dr. Davis' house, office, barn and smokehouse. These were good new buildings—all, with their contents, destroyed. Some of the Doctor's books and papers were picked up from one and a half to two miles distant.

Next was Isaac O. Smith's house, occupied by Prestly Cordell, and a small house owned by same, and occupied by Alexander Simpson, all with their contents destroyed—Mrs. Cordel, badly bruised and injured—child one week old injured some, but not considered dangerous. Next Mr. Nicholas' tavern and barn. The house was much wrecked—roof all off, and moved from its foundation—the north end of it stove in—furniture much injured—the barn a total wreck, and a valuable horse killed. Next on north side of the road opposite the tavern, Elijah Wilson's house and blacksmith shop all leveled to the foundation. Mrs. Wilson was cut on the head and bruised. Next north of the Main-street, Talbot Crawford's dwelling was entirely destroyed, with Rev. Mr. Shelly's furniture, all of which is lost or much damaged.

On the west side of the street, at the south end, Wm. Hill's house and stable torn down, contents generally destroyed. Mrs. Knowles, who was there on a visit, is badly injured, supposed fatally—ribs broken and otherwise badly cut and burned. Mrs. Hill was also injured, but not considered dangerous. Mr. Hill was also injured some. Next, Kanada Odell's house and contents destroyed; family escaped uninjured. Next, Dr. Window's house, occupied by Mrs. Dale and five children—lost everything she had, even her cow was killed—the house torn to the ground, family not hurt. Next, Wm. Hill's large wagon and blacksmith shop, which is yet standing, but very much wrecked, and considerably injured within and without—his books, notes and papers are lost.

Next, Mr. Crawford's store and warehouse, which are about demolished. They are not so effectually carried off as most other buildings, but are moved from their foundations, and so much wrecked that they could not be repaired without taking what little there is left apart in building. Mr. Crawford, who was in the second story of the building, was somewhat injured, not very bad; but Mr. Wm. Crawford, father of Mr. T. Crawford, is supposed to be fatally injured.

Mr. Devitt's house was not very much injured; the porch in front is partly torn off, and the back shed torn; several timbers drove in through the walls. The front of his store was torn about one-third off, the balance was left hanging loose, his fence nearly all thrown down and hay-stacks blown off. So far as we have learned, all the damage done by the storm was at Littleton, except some fences blown down.

The people of Rushville have contributed about $1,000, and those of Macomb $150, for the benefit of the sufferers by the dreadful calamity.

In a quiet little village on the Western Reserve, in Ohio, says the Prescott Transcript, there lives a man who, physiologically considered, is certainly one of the wonders of the world. His joints are completely ossified, turned to bone, and he is not capable of making the slightest movement, except alternately opening and shutting two fingers of his right hand. His body is as rigid as iron, and it could not be bent backward or forward without breaking some of his bones. This singular process of ossification has been going on in his system for more than twenty years. He is now about 46 years of age, and has not had the use of his limbs, so that he could walk, since he was 19. Ossification commenced first in his ankle-joints, gradually extending itself through his system until he was entirely helpless. Since that time he has been entirely under his mother's care, and she watches over him with an anxiety which only a mother can feel. When about 16 years old, he became entirely blind from some unknown cause, and has remained so ever since. At about 30, he suffered greatly from the toothache, and finally he had his teeth all extracted. A year or two afterwards his finger and toe nails all came off, and were supplied by others growing out from his fingers and toes at right angles, and presenting the appearance of horns. What is still more singular with regard to his nails, if the end of the nail is cut off, it will bleed freely. Such is the condition of this remarkable man at the present time. He has been visited by a great number of scientific men, from all parts of the world, but all have failed to give any plausible reason of the cause of his transformation from flesh to bone. Singular as it may appear, although his jaw-bone is firmly set in his head, he not only talks freely, but fluently converses with his friends and those who visit him on all ordinary topics of the day, and he shows himself well-informed and of good mind. He is always cheerful, appears contented and happy, and it seems probable that he will live for many years to come.

On the 7th inst., Major Benjamin Perley Poore, the late Fillmore candidate for Congress in the Sixth District, had arrived in Boston, with his wheelbarrow and barrel of apples, which he wheeled all the way from Newburyport—a distance of thirty-six miles—in two and a-half days. The job was in fulfillment of a bet with Colonel Burbank, the Fremont State Senator elect, that Fillmore would get more votes in Massachusetts than Fremont. The Major, wheeling his apples, was escorted up State street, about two o'clock, by the Fillmore Clubs of Boston and Charlestown, a military company, and a mounted cavalcade of citizens. The novelty of the performance collected many thousands of the people, and the Major was greeted with tremendous and tumultuous applause on all sides. He delivered the apples to Colonel Burbank, on the steps of the Fremont House, where both gentlemen delivered congratulatory speeches mounted on the barrel. At least ten thousand people were present.

We have dates from Tampico to the 20th ult. Gen. Garza had taken active measures to oppose the progress of Vidaurri, and the greatest alarm and excitement had prevailed throughout the entire region. At latest accounts, however, tranquility had been somewhat restored, upon the receipt of a report that terms of accommodation had been agreed upon between Garza and Vidaurri, and that the latter had agreed to recognize Comonfort's government.

Special Notices.

PRICES REDUCED.

Fine Black Cloth Frock Coats	$ 8
Fine Black Dress Coats	$ 8
Fine Brown Frock Coats	$ 8
Fall Raglans	$ 8
Cassimere Business Coats	$3 50 to $ 8
Black Cassimere Pants	$2 50 to $ 5
Fancy Cassimere Pants	$1 50 to $ 5
Rich Moire-Antique Silk Vests	$ 3
Zephyr Cassimere suits	$ 8
Complete genteel Black Cloth suits	$12

Evans' Extensive Clothing Warehouse,
oct25 2mos Nos. 66 and 68 Fulton street.

AGENCY OF NICARAGUA, NO. 347 BROADWAY.—The undersigned having been appointed by the Government of Nicaragua GENERAL EMIGRANT AGENT in the United States, has established a permanent Agency at 347 Broadway, Room No. 2, up stairs. All persons desirous of obtaining information of any kind concerning Nicaragua, will receive prompt attention by addressing the undersigned, personally or by letter, at the office of the Agent.

The price of passage to Emigrants has been fixed at a very low figure; and for those without means, arrangements have been made with the Nicaragua Emigration Company to advance the price of passage, upon the transfer of a part of the land granted to each emigrant by the government of Nicaragua. This secures to Emigrants a large grant of land and a free passage to Nicaragua.

The new and splendid Steam-ship Texas, 1800 tons, will sail from the pier at the foot of Beach-street, North River, for SAN JUAN DE NICARAGUA, on Monday, Nov. 24th, at 3 o'clock, P. M., to connect with the steamer.

Alexander C. Lawrence, Gen'l. Emigration Agent
oct25 tf of Nicaragua for the United States.

NOVEMBER!—Ladies, Winter is Coming; and if you wish Cloth Button BOOTS, with warm Linings, Gaiter Boots and Shoes of all kinds—Boys' Misses, and Childrens' Boots and Shoes, with India Rubber Shoes of all the various styles, (Goodyear's Patent,) the very best kind manufactured, patronize J. B. MILLER & CO.,
nov15 4t No. 134 Canal-st.

Dr. McGowan, Physician and Surgeon, No. 322 Canal Street, (formerly 69, the numbers having been altered on the street,) a few doors from Broadway, attends to calls in every branch of his profession.
Special attention devoted to DISEASES of the EYE, SCROFULA, CONSUMPTION, etc. Advice to the poor, gratis, every Wednesday afternoon. sept6

☞ Post Office.—Notice.—The Mails for Europe, via Southampton and Havre, per U. S. steamer Fulton, will close at this office on Saturday, the 15th day of November, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

THIS Theatre was opened for the season on Wednesday September 17. Its object will be, as it has been, to sustain the Drama in artistic purity and intellectual respect. The company, through whose energies and abilities this object has been so successfully attained, will remain substantially the same as in past seasons.

MR. WALLACK will appear for Eighteen Farewell Nights, previously to his visit to Havana, where his health demands that he should pass the Winter.

It is the intention of the management to produce dramas in the same style as those put forth by Charles Kean at the Princesses Theatre, London.

LOVE IN A MAZE.
THE CORSICAN BROTHERS,
FAUST AND MARGARET,
LOUIS THE ELEVENTH.

Engagements have been offered, with every prospect of success, to several American artists of renowned fame, and to others of dawning distinction, whose genius it will be the object of the management to cultivate and encourage, and several comedies, written in this country and for this theatre, will be produced.

BOWERY THEATRE.

The People's Temple of the Drama.

Open every night,

WITH A POWERFUL

Star Company.

Lessee and Manager.....JOHN BROUGHAM

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Boxes	50 cents.	Pit	12½ cents.
Gallery	12½ cents.	Orchestra Stalls	50 cents.
Private Boxes			Five Dollars.

Doors open at 7½; commence at 7½.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.

NEW HALL, 585 BROADWAY,

Opposite Niblo's Garden,

From the great success of

DRED

OR THE DISMAL SWAMP,

It will be repeated all this week.

OLD TIFF, and Dismal of the Dread Swamp.....G. Swain Buckley
TOM-TIT, a Tit-tillating, precocious Colored Infant.....R. Bishop Buckley
FRISETTE, a Quadroon, with a white heart and a fair voice....Miss C. Hiffert
Mr. Percival and the rest of the admired troupe in prominent characters.

Previous to which,

NEGRO MINSTRELSY,

of a superior order.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock. Concert at 7 1-2 o'clock. Admission 25 cents: Orchestra seats 50 cents.

Illustrated

LECTURES,

On the Natural History of Man.

Scientific Societies, &c.,

Are respectfully informed that

Dr. McElheran

Is prepared to receive engagements to lecture on Ethnology. His discourses are the fruit of original inquiry, during the last eight years, chiefly among the Celtic and Gothic races and their descendants in America, and are illustrated by a large collection of portraits and cranial forms.

ADDRESS DR. MCELHERAN, 136 MCDOUGALL STREET, NEW-YORK. no14

GRAND MILITARY AND CIVIL BALL

OF THE

EMMET LIFE GUARD.

ENGINEER CORPS 69th REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.,

At the City Assembly Rooms, 446 Broadway, on Monday Evening, December 29th, 1856.

Tickets $1, admitting a gentleman and ladies. For sale by the GUARD and at this office.

☞ The LIFE GUARD pledge themselves that nothing will be left undone by by them to produce the best Ball of the season.

Capt. T. Lynch, Chairman.
A. O'TOOLE, Sec'y.
JAMES WATSON, Treasurer. oct11

LECTURE

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE CAPT. KERRIGAN

BY

THOS. FRANCIS MEAGHER.

SUBJECT:

Contrast between Royalty and Republicanism—Europe and America!

At the TABERNACLE on Monday Evening, November 17.

Tickets 50 cents.

FIFTH ANNUAL BALL

OF THE

Barry Benevolent Society,

At the Apollo Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday evening, November 12th, 1856. The Committee has spared no trouble to make this one of the finest Balls of the Season.

JOHN MCMAHON, President.
MICHAEL KIRWIN, Secretary.
2t no1 JOHN POWERS, Treasurer.

Sporting!—Young Men desirous of forming a FOOT-BALL CLUB are requested to meet at the Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second avenue, to make arrangements for a parade on St. Stephen's Day, (26th Dec.) This being the first affair of this kind, it is expected there will be a large attendance. 1t. nov 8.

Special Notices.

Lyon's Kathairon.—The editor of the Rahway Republican says: "Those who have used this article are doubtless aware that it is the CHEAPEST Hair Preparation in existence; but they must be aware, at the same time, that it is the very VERY BEST Toilet Article yet discovered, and we will venture to say, that, once having used it, these same individuals could not be prevailed upon to exchange it for any other. At all events we could not, and we flatter ourselves we are by no means alone in our predilections." Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers.

Heath, Wynkoop & Co., Proprietors,
sept13 3mos 63 Liberty street, N. Y.

Attention!—"Irish News Guard."—The Company meet for drill and admission of members for their first annual Target Excursion, on Tuesday evening of each week at the "Eagle Drill Rooms," corner of Chrystie and Delancey streets. The GUARD cordially invite additions to its ranks.

P. J. WALL, Sec'y E. K. Butler, Captain.

Mr. Wm O'Rourke, devotes his attention to carrying the Irish News, throughout the 4th, 6th, 7th, and adjoining Wards. Any orders left at the publication office, for him, will receive prompt and careful attention.

☞ Removal.—DR. J. M. CARNOCHAN, has removed his office to No. 45 Lafayette Place, near Astor Place. oct18 4t

DRILL ROOM GUIDE.

NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

TROOP A, (City Horse Guard,) meet at the "Grape Vine Cottage, 45 Second Avenue, between Second and Third streets, on every Monday evening.
JAMES MURPHY, Capt.

Company B, (Fitzgerald Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company D, (Guyon Cadets) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. MURPHY, Capt.

Company I, (Jackson Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." W. O. MURPHY, Capt.

Company H, (Erina Guard) drill Thursday Evening at "Military Hall." R. CODDINGTON, Capt.

Company —, (Irish Grenadiers) drill each Thursday Evening at 22 White street. FELIX DUFFY, Capt.

Company C, (Mitchel Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at the "Eagle rooms." EDWARD KEARNS, Capt.

Company J, (Carroll Guard,) drill each evening, at
—— GALLAGHER, Capt.

TENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN KENNEDY, Capt.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Montgomery Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." THOS. S. MURPHY, Capt.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

Company E, (Carroll Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Adelphi," Brooklyn. GEO. B. MAGRATH, Capt.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company C, (Columbian Guard), drill each Tuesday evening, at Washington Hall, Troy, N. Y. RICHARD S. QUINN, Captain.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at Albany, N. Y. P. H. GRIFFIN, Capt.

FORTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (Emmett Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at the "Emmett Guard Armory," Utica, N. Y.
JOHN FLANAGAN, Capt.

SIXTY NINTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Troop A, (Irish Dragoons,) drill each Thursday Evening at "Montgomery Hall." Lieut. B. O'CONNOR, Com'dt.

Company D, (Irish Rifles) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES QUINLAN, Capt.

Company E, (Fag a Bealac Guard) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." M. KEATING, Capt.

Company F, (Shields' Guard,) drill each Wednesday Evening at "Milleman's Hall," 7th avenue, corner of 26th street.
JOHN R. MURPHY, Capt.

Company G, (Mechanic's Guard) drill each Thursday Evening at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN B. MADDEN, Capt.

Company I, (Irish Fuseleers,) drill each Monday Evening at 42 Prince street. M. CORCORAN, Capt.

Company K, (Brian Boroihme Guard) drill each Monday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JAMES HUSTON, Capt.

Engineer Corps, (Emmet Life Guard) drill each Monday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. T. LYNCH, Capt.

70th REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company D, (Napper Tandy Light Artillery) drill each Thursday Evening at Brooklyn City Armory. WM. H. HOGAN, Capt.

SEVENTY FIFTH REGIMENT N. Y. S. M.

Company A, (State Rifles) drill each Wednesday Evening at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. Lieut. JAS. KELLY, Com'dt.

Company B, (Irish National Guard) drill each Friday Evening at "Centre Market Rooms." JOHN LANE, Capt.

Company C, (Young Ireland Rifles) drill each Friday Evening at "Eagle Rooms." JOHN BURKE, Capt.

Company D, (Wolf Tone Volunteers,) drill each Tuesday Evening, at the "Eagle Rooms." JOHN NUGENT, Capt.

Company E, (T. F. Meagher Rifles) drill each —— at cor. of 11th street and 1st Avenue. J. B. DONNELLY, Capt.

Company F, (Mich'l. Doheny Rifles) drill each —— at ——.
JAS. THOS. MAGUIRE, Capt.

Company G. (Emmet Rifles) drill each —— at ——
JOHN BEGG, Capt.

INDEPENDENT COMPANIES.

Company —, (Irish News Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at the Eagle Rooms. EDWARD K. BUTLER, Capt.

Company —, (O'Mahony Guard, E. M. A.,) drill each Tuesday Evening a "North America Rooms," cor. of Bayard and Bowery.
JAMES CAVANAGH, Capt.

Company —, (Sons of '98,) drill each Friday Evening at the corner of 11th street and 1st Avenue, N. Y. M. H. SMITH, Capt.

Company —, (Wolfe Tone Guard,) drill each alternate Monday Evening at the "Second Ward Hotel," cor. of York and Pearl streets, Brooklyn.
JOHN J. CLANCY, Com'dt.

Company —, (Irish American Grenadiers,) drill the first and third Thursday of each month at "Montgomery Hall," 76 Prince street, N. Y.
MICHAEL DOYLE, Capt.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday evening, at Bridgeport, Conn. MICHAEL O'CONNELL, Capt.

Company —, (Republican Guard) drill every Friday Evening, at "Worth's Military Headquarters," 22 White street. JAMES CLANCY, Capt.

Company —, (Keystone Rifles,) drill every Monday evening, in Port Carbon, Pa. MATTHEW BYRNES, Captain.

Company—(Emerald Guard), drill each Monday evening, at "Smith's Hall," corner of 11th and First Avenue. JOHN COX, Captain.

SECOND REGIMENT—HUDSON BRIGADE.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each week at the "Armory," Grand street, Jersey City. —— FARRELL, Capt.

FIFTH REGIMENT N. J. S. M.

Company C, (O'Brien Columbia Rifles,) drill on the 1st and 3d Tuesdays in each month at their Armory, "Willow Hall," Orange, N. J.
OWEN MURPHY, Captain.

Company C, (Sarsfield Guards,) drill every Monday Evening at their room corner of Mechanic and Broad streets, Elizabethtown, New Jersey.
WILLIAM TOOMEY, Capt.

SECOND REGIMENT PA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Hibernian Greens,) drill each Thursday Evening at 83 South Fifth street, Philadelphia. P. O'KEAN, Capt.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill each Tuesday Evening at 404 Market street, Philadelphia. Lieut. THOMAS ASMITH, Com'dt.

Company —, (Emmet Guard,) drill each Friday Evening at "Ewen Hall," Hawley, Pa.

FIRST REGIMENT ME. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Grattan Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Bangor, Me. JOHN CARROLL, Capt.

SIXTIETH REGIMENT ILL. S. M.

Company —, (Shields Guard,) drill each Thursday Evening in Chicago, Ill. CHAS. E. MOORE, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT VA. VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Montgomery Guard,) drill each Monday and Friday Evenings in Richmond. P. S. MOORE, Capt.

SIXTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Meagher Guard,) drill the second Thursday of each month in Charleston. GEO. SERGEANT, Capt.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT S. C. S. M.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill once a month in Charleston, S. C.
EDWARD MAGRATH, Capt.

—— REGIMENT GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company —, (Irish Volunteers,) drill each —— evening, in the city of Augusta. EDWARD J. WALKER, Capt.

FIRST REGIMENT ST. LOUIS LEGION, MO.

Company—(St. Louis Washington Guard) drill each Tuesday evening, in the city of St. Louis, Mo. D. M. FROST, Capt.

FIRST WASHINGTON BATTALION OHIO S. M.

Company A, (Shields Guard), drill on each Thursday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. DENNIS KAVANAGH, Captain.

Company B, (Sarsfield Guard), drill on each Monday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN LEVY, Capt.

Company C, (Republican's Guard,) drill on each Saturday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. JOHN ELITOH, Capt.

Company D, (Montgomery Light Artillery,) drill on each Wednesday evening, at the "Battalion Armory," Cincinnati. THOS. TIERNAN, Capt.

Company E, (Queen City Cadets, Rifles,) drill on each Tuesday and Friday evenings, at the "Cadets Armory," Pomeroy's Building, Third street, Cincinnati. JOSEPH H. BURKE, Capt.

N. B.—Commandants of Irish-American Military Companies throughout the United States, are respectfully tendered a place in the above "Directory," and requested to send such information as will enable us to represent them in it.

SARAH McFADDEN,

Maritime and National Flag Manufacturer,

198 Hudson street, four doors below Canal street, New-York.

Mrs. McFadden justly boasts of having made up for Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish tri-color flag which he presented to the Confederate Club Men of '48, resident in New-York: also the beautiful U. S. Flag recently presented by Mr. William Kinsella to the Montgomery Guard of Bridgeport.
y21june

Massachusetts Advertisements.

BOSTON EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

OFFICE, CORNER OF SOUTH AND BEACH STREETS.

THE object of the Society is to protect the Emigrant from imposition. The Office is open daily from 7 o'clock A. M. to 6 P. M. Emigrants and others furnished with employment. The Society, having made the necessary arrangements, is prepared to furnish tickets of transportation to every section of the West. Persons procuring tickets at this office may rest assured that they will reach their destination by the best route, with the least delay, and the lowest cost.

MARTIN GRIFFIN, President.
JAMES FERGUSON, Rec. Sec. | JAMES DACEY, Cor. Sec.
JAMES FLYNN, Treasurer.
M. J. FENELON, Agent.

THE GREAT RUSSIAN REMEDY.

Pro Bono Publico.

"EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE A BOX IN THE HOUSE HANDY IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS TO THE CHILDREN."

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE. It is a Boston remedy of thirty years' standing, and is recommended by physicians. It is a sure and speedy cure for Burns, Piles, Boils, Corns, Felons, Chilblains, and old Sores of every kind.

For Fever Sores, Ulcers, Itch, Scald Head, Nettle Rash, Bunions, Sore Nipples, (recommended by nurses); Whitlows, Stiles, Festers, Flea Bites, Spider Stings, Frozen Limbs, Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore and Cracked Lips, Sore Nose, Warts and Flesh Wounds, it is a most valuable remedy and cure, which can be testified to by thousands who have used it in the city of Boston and vicinity for the last thirty years.

In no instance will this Salve do an injury, or interfere with a physician's prescriptions. It is made from the purest materials, from a recipe brought from Russia, of articles growing in that country, and the proprietors have letters from all classes, clergymen, physicians, sea captains, nurses, and others who have used it themselves and recommend it to others.

REDDING'S RUSSIAN SALVE is put in large tin boxes, stamped on the cover with the picture of a horse and a disabled soldier, which picture is also engraved on the wrapper. PRICE, 25 Cents a Box. Sold at all the stores in town or country, or may be ordered of any wholesale druggist.

ap19tf Redding & Co., Proprietors, No. 8 State st., Boston.

WEEMAN'S IRON RAILING MANUFACTORY.

No. 26 Merrimac street, Boston, Mass.

Where he has been for the past thirty years.

ALL persons in want of IRON FENCES, suitable for cemetery, house, garden, Balustrades, &c., can, by calling on the subscriber, purchase a better fence at a lower price, than at any other establishment in the state, as he makes it his entire business.

jun14m6 EBENEZER WEEMAM.

B. S. TREANOR,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 MASSACHUSETTS BLOCK, COURT SQUARE, BOSTON.

Particular attention paid to Conveyancing, and the examination of titles to Real Estate.

Billiards.

IMPROVED

Billiard Tables and Cushions.

Patented February 19th, 1856. These Tables conbine the nicest mathematical accuracyof workmanship with elegance of design, and possesses all the qualities that are esteemed by scientific players. The cushions are of superior correctness, and are lower than any others made, and so constructed as to prevent all jumping of the Balls. All articles connected with Billiards, at the lowest cash prices, at the Salesroom, 786 Broadway, or at the manufactory, 53 Ann street, N. Y.

MICHAEL PHELAN, Patentee.

Just published, "THE GAME OF BILLIARES," its theory and practice. By Michael Phelan, with numerous illustrations. Price one dollar. nov8 tf

O'CONNOR & COLLENDER,

BILLIARD TABLE MANUFACTURERS,

53, ANN STREET, NEW-YORK.

Special Notices.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

THE celebrated "National Guard Hat," Flags, Belts and Ornaments, &c. made by

J. Parkes, No. 195 Fulton, below Church street,
sept27 3mos New-York.

ATTENTION!

To Military Companies.

BEAUTIFUL EMBLEMATIC WREATHS AND BOUQUFTS,

For Target Excursions, constantly on sale, or made to order at the shortest notice, and at any price.

Ladies about making a presentation to their military friends are most respectfully invited to make a visit to the old established bookstore, 366 Bowery, one door above Fourth street.

Robert Coddington, Proprietor.

N. B.—Always on sale, a fine assortment of Invitation Note Paper and Envelopes, Books on Military Tactics, Works on Ireland.

The IRISH NEWS for sale, as soon as published, every week. oct11 4t

☞ Post Office.—Notice.—Change of Hour.—On and after MONDAY, the 3d day of November, the Mails will close as follows:

Eastern Mail by Railroad,.....at 2 P. M.
New-York and Erie Railroad Mails.....at 3 P. M.
North Mail by Hudson River Railroad.....at 3½ P. M.

November 1, 1856.

Isaac V. Fowler, Postmaster.

Information wanted of Robert A. Cox, who emigrated from Dublin in April, 1825, to Australia. Last heard from in Melbourne, 1827. Information regarding him to be directed to his sister, Mrs. Eliza Savage, (daughter of the late John Covey Cox, Esq., county Waterford, Ireland,) care of IRISH NEWS Office, or 48 Ferry street, Albany, New-York.

Melbourne and Sidney papers please copy. oct18

Musical.—A young lady lately connected with the profession in Europe, where she studied under the first and best masters, is desirous of giving a limited number of pupils the advantage of a good education on the Piano. Any family who may kindly favor her with a trial, may rely on their children being properly attended to. Address Mrs. Greene, care of Professor Trener, 90 South Eighth street, Brooklyn, E. D.

Dentistry.—HENRY C. O'CONNOR, SURGICAL AND MECHANICAL Dentist, can be consulted at No. 382 Broadway, near White street, where he continues to supply sets of Teeth on improved scientific principles, combining the most recent improvements, ensuring by his eminently successful method the greatest comfort, perfect mastication and articulation. Decayed teeth filled, and all dental operations performed at moderate charges. Consultation free and no charge made unless perfect satisfaction be given. sept6 3m

A Lady, M. D., Oculist and Aurist, Restores Blindness, Amaurosis and Sore Eyes, of any standing; Removing Cataracts, Scums, Films, &c., without operation or pain. Persons wearing spectacles prematurely, enabled to do without them by recovering the natural tone of the eye. That the worst of cases are cured by her.

May be seen at the Infirmary from 10 A. M., to 2 P. M., No. 679 Sixth Avenue. The poor attended to on Fridays. oct18 3mos

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Unlike the Mineral preparations that drive the virus of eruptions and sores into the vital organs, this marvelous Ointment discharges the poison before it heals the flesh. The Pills inevitably cure Dyspepsia, and all bilious disorders. Sold at the manufactories, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and No. 244 Strand, London; and by all druggists, at 25c., 62c., and $1 per, box or pot. nov14

Medical.

CONSUMPTION!

FOR the treatment of Consumption. Of all diseases to which the Human constitution is liable, there is none which so pre-eminently claims the attention of the public and the Faculty, as that melancholy affection, popularly known as

CONSUMPTION.

The evil is so universally prevalent, that scarcely an individual can be found who is not more or less affected by its ravages, either in his own person or hereditarily, his nearest relations or friends. The spirit of inquiry upon this subject, however, as upon almost all others of human interest, have recently become aroused, and the question is eagerly asked by those who have seen the dearest object of their heart's best worship snatched away in the Spring-time and bloom of life, by the fell destroyer, Consumption,

WHY CANNOT CONSUMPTION BE CURED?

What is there in this disease more than any other, that so effectually eludes scientific investigation, and withstands the operation of Remedial Agents? Why is it that the Lungs cannot be treated successfully when diseased, as well as other parts of the human system? If we study the natural philosophy of man, and the goodness of the Creator right, we shall discover that there is in the great Materia Medica of Nature, a Remedy for every Disease to which the human frame is subject. CONSUMPTION is a simple disease, and, in its incipient stages, is as easily cured as many other diseases, in the successful treatment of which not the slightest difficulty or uncertainty exists, but in its advanced state, when it has obtained a firm grasp upon the vital energies, and paralyzed, as it were, all the healthful organs of the system, it then presents a more formidable aspect; it is obvious, therefore, how important it is that the physician should be well informed of the stage of the disease before he prescribes for its cure.

How ignorant, cruel and mercenary is the system of Quackery, which consists in the sale of Patent Medicine to cure CONSUMPTION. Some individuals, by reason of a deficiency of moral courage, blind themselves to their real condition by refusing to recognize the well-marked symptoms of the disease, while others in complaining are subject to ridicule, from their blooming cheeks and other signs of health, and thus the disease progresses to an advanced stage before medical aid is sought to check its fatal effects.

A synopsis of the symptoms of the first great cause of CONSUMPTION is hereto subjoined. Apparently trivial irritation of the throat, and internal membranes, produced by a cold. It is almost universally disregarded. This irritation becomes seated, and the lungs reduced to a confirmed state of unnatural expectoration, and eventually inducing inflammation there, which rapidly conducts the patient step by step through the different stages, until he becomes a victim to

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION.

During the first three or four weeks of his cough, it is usually slight, and occurs chiefly in the morning. This is usually regarded by the patient as of little consequence, and no idea is entertained that his cough in the slightest degree endangers the lungs, especially as it is attended with no apparen expectoration.

THIS IS THE FIRST FATAL ERROR.

This state of things lasts for months without exciting serious alarm; by degrees, however, the cough increases, and is particularly troublesome after any sudden exertion, such, for instance, as running rapidly up stairs, violent conversation or laughter. The cough begins now to be accompanied with the expectoration of a transparent frothy fluid, resembling saliva, and sometimes mixed with blood. As the disease advances, the cough increases without any exciting cause; the rest is broken by it, and in the day-time it is frequently accompanied by pains in the chest, and even vomiting; in females there is a suppression of the monthly period, and as the disease progresses, hectic fever, night sweats, diarrhœa, and swelling of the lower extremities, ensue.

ELI W. VONDERSMITH, M. D., wishes the public distinctly to understand that he is a regularly educated Physician, having graduated at the New-York University, and his great success in curing Consumption has arisen solely from the circumstance of his having devoted his time entirely to the treatment of diseases of the Chest and Lungs during the last twelve years. More than five hundred persons in this city have been under his care, and can be referred to as entirely cured by his treatment. In the treatment of this disease, no mercury, opium, nor any mineral substances in any form whatever are used. He would also add, for the information of those living in other cities or in the country, who are unable to visit New-York, that he can be consulted by letter giving a full and careful description of their case, and enclosing one dollar.

E. W. Vondersmith, M. D.,
Office for the Treatment of Consumption,
Aug23 3mos No. 158 Bowery, just above Broome st., N. Y.

OLD DR. BONE'S

JUSTLY CELEBRATED Vegetable Family Medicines.

NO CURE, NO PAY.

MEDICAL DEPOT—559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th Street;

Being the best medicine for strengthening the Stomach, creating an appetite, cleansing the blood of impurities, and regulating the whole system. They are the best medicines now in use for Pulmonary Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Rheumatism, both Chronic and Inflammatory, Fits, General Debility, Fever and Ague, Scrofulas, Ulcers, and all other humors of the blood. Price $1.

PILLS,

So long celebrated for cleansing the blood, discharging the bile, and removing obstructions in all cases where such medicines are needed. They have had no equal for the last fifty-five years. Price Twenty-five Cents.

These medicines are all prepared by LEWIS H. BONE, the only son now living of old Dr. Bone, who, by request of many of his father's patrons, has opened a Medical Depot in this city.

CAUTION.—Beware of Counterfeits, as unprincipled persons are trying to palm off their worthless trash on the public, without any regard to the evil effects it may have on the constitutions of those they deceive. The public will please take especial notice that every label is signed with the written signature of LEWIS H. BONE, only son of the late Dr. Christian Bone, without which none are genuine. References to thousands of the most respectable men in New-York and New-Jersey.

☞ All my authorised agents have a printed certificate signed by L. H. Bone.

For sale at No. 9 Bible House; First Avenue, corner of Houston street; Bowery, corner of Fourth street; corner of Broadway and 22d street; 91 and 695 Eighth avenue, near 48th street; corner of Canal and Hudson streets; E. Lyon, 562 Grand street; C. B. Riker, Harlem, N. Y.; 217 Fulton street, Brooklyn; 67 South Seventh street, East District, Brooklyn; Jacob L. Marinus, 15 Montgomery street, Jersey City; Wm. Merchmore, Astoria, Long Island; and all the principal stores on the island.

Old Sores of long standing, and all diseases which "flesh is heir to," cured in almost every instance. We cure cases which have been given up and considered incurable. If we say we can cure, we will cure, or no pay in every instance. Advice gratis.

☞ Principal Depot, 559 Sixth Avenue, near 34th street, where all diseases are treated and cured, or no pay.

oct18 6mos L. H. Bone, Son of Dr. Christian Bone.

DRS. GILBERT AND KENNEDY,

TREAT

CANCERS, TUMORS, ULCERS, &c.,

WITHOUT SURGICAL OPERATIONS.

OFFICE 746 BROADWAY, COR. ASTOR PLACE, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES FROM

Ex Gov. T. M. Tucker.	Hon. T. Butler King.	Judge Alex. Walker
Judge F. W. Hugling.	Gen. Narcisso Lopez.	Col. Maunsel White.
Capt. Isaiah Sellers.	Capt. Wm. Leathers.	Thos. E. Bond, M. D.
A. S. Baldwin, M. D.	W. P. Allison, M. D.	J. S. Peacocke, M. D.

PERMISSION TO REFER TO

Ex Gov. James C. Jones. Hon. Frederick B. Stanton.
B. F. Palmer, Inventor of "Palmer's Artificial Leg."
Francis Grice, Naval Constructor, Navy Yard, Philadelphia.
Proprietors of the Girard House, Philadelphia.

☞ Send for a Pamphlet! oct18 4t

Special Notices.

Catholic Reading Rooms.—The Directors of the Catholic Library Association respectfully announce to the public that their Reading Room, No. 257 Bowery, will be open every evening (Sunday excepted) from 7 to 10 o'clock. Annual subscription, $1. By order.

M. T. Cozans, President.
JAMES O. C. TABB, Rec. Sec'y. sept13

Mercantile Clerk's Agency, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, New-York.) Merchants and Storekeepers in every State and City in the Union, can be supplied with efficient and trustworthy Clerks on application personal or in writing. No Clerks will be introduced to employers until every thing has been made into their character and business qualifications. Clerks can be introduced to respectable situations.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

A. Lange, Manufacturer of Gilt Mouldings, Ornamented Picture and Looking Glass Frames, 206 William street, corner of Frankfort, New-York.

☞ All Plain Gilt Frames can be cleaned by simply applying a sponge and water. RECEIVING DOOR. sept 18 1f

Business Directory.

Meagher & Campbell,

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW,

NO. 82 BROADWAY.

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Commissioner for the U. S. Court of Claims.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, having formed a partnership with MALCOLM CAMPBELL, for the general practice of the law, the firm will continue to devote their attention to such law business as may be intrusted to them, including conveyancing, practice in all the courts of the state of New-York and of the United States, and general collecting business in all parts of the world. Particular attention will be given to the prosecution of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Meagher may be consulted daily, on law business only, at No. 82 Broadway, from three till five o'clock P. M.

WILLIAM E ROBINSON,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR,

HAVING entered into partnership with ISAAC DAYTON, Esq., (author of the work on Surrogates,) and WILLIAM A. COURSEN, Esq., gentlemen long known and of high standing at the New-York Bar, has removed to their new office, at 267 Broadway, third door below Chambers st.

☞ All business, either in the Criminal or Civil Courts, promptly and faithfully attended to. ap19y

---

THOMAS H. HURLEY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE ST., OPPOSITE CITY HALL.

JAMES M. SHEEHAN,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law,

No. 13 Chambers Street, New-York.

2y1ju Collections promptly attended to, and liens carefully filed, &c.

JOHN O'ROURKE,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

NO. 10 CENTRE STREET,

(Opposite the Superior Court Buildings,)

7jun NEW-YORK.

JAMES HARLIN,

WATCH, CLOCK MAKER, AND JEWELER.

236 HENRY STREET, BROOKLYN.

All watches and clocks bought or repaired at my establishment, warranted for twelve months. *

JOHN FOLEY,

WATCHMAKER,

JEWELER AND FINISHER OF FINE WATCHES,

NO. 202 BOWERY,

Between Spring and Prince Streets, New-York.

Watches of a superior quality made to order, and warranted not to err more than four minutes a year. Cases jointed, works jewelled, and chronometer balances set in the best style. Jewelry of every kind repaired in a workmanlike manner. All orders punctually attended to. jul26m

---

John Kennedy's

STEAM MARBLE WORKS,

35TH STREET, NEAR BROADWAY.

Statuary and Marble Mantle-Pieces, Monuments, Grave Stones, Tombs, &c. All orders thankfully received and punctually attended to. *

THOMAS GAFFNEY'S

SOAP AND CANDLE

MANUFACTORY,

825 EAST SENECA STREET, BUFFALO,

NEW-YORK.

William M. Smith,

The Public Favorite and only American Opposition

BILL POSTER AND DISTRIBUTOR.

The oldest established in the business.

WORK done promptly and faithfully—cheaper, quicker, and better than by any other poster in the city. Work done either in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, or Jersey City. Boards lent for concerts or any kind of work. Office 28½ Spruce street, New-York, ap26tf between William and Gold streets.

THE METROPOLITAN

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 108 BROADWAY,

(Cor. Pine Street.)

CASH CAPITAL $300,000.

JAMES LORIMER GRAHAM, President.

EDWARD A. STANSBURY, Secretary. my31y

WILLARD, FELT & CO,

MANUFACTURERS OF ACCOUNT BOOKS,

AND IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN PAPER AND STATIONERY,

NO. 14 MAIDEN LANE,

3mos (near Broadway.)

Dr. Shanahan,

SURGEON AND ACCOUCHEUR,

Can be consulted at his office, No. 169 West 38th street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, New-York. oc11 4t

---

Wm. Irwin,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN BOOTS & SHOES,

No. 174 Bowery, opposite Delancey street, New-York.

Quick Sales and Small Profits. oc11m3

JAMES CAIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

AND

CLOTHIER,

NO. 129 FULTON STREET,

HERALD BUILDING, } New-York.
my31y

Business Directory.

RICH CARPETING.

1856 Fall Importation. 1856

ARTHUR DONNELLY,

98 Bowery, (west side,) between Grand and Hester streets,

IS now prepared to exhibit his new Fall styles of

Foreign and Domestic Carpetings,

comprising every grade and description, from the CHEAPEST fabric to the RICHEST.

Importing his goods direct, and thus saving the commission and interest which most other dealers pay, he is enabled to offer them at prices highly favorable to consumers, who will find at his store, among other carpetings adapted to all varieties of tastes, the following elegant descriptions:

Medallions,	at 14s to 18s per yard.
Velvet,	10s to 16s.
Tapestry,	6s to 12s.
Brussels,	7s to 12s.
Three-ply,	7s to 10s.
Ingrain,	3s to 7s.
Common Ingrain,	18d to 3s.

English and American Floor Oil-Cloths,

of every imaginable width, pattern, and style.

A complete and choice assortment of

STAIR AND HALL CARPETS, RUGS, MATS, MATTINGS,

and of everythg else appertaining to the Carpet Trade.

ARTHUR DONNELLY, 98 Bowery, (West side,)

ap19ly Between Grand and Hester sts., N. Y.

CARPETINGS FROM AUCTION.

TO THE LADIES OF NEW-YORK AND VICINITY.

STEPHEN LEAHY,

93 SIXTH AVENUE, between Waverly and Clinton Place,

BEGS to call the attention of the ladies to his large and varied stock of Carpeting and Oil Cloth. The collection comprises goods of every grade and style, from the richest and most beautiful of foreign manufacture to the lowest price domestic.

All who are acquainted with the Carpet trade, and have visited our New Store, acknowledge our stock the most varied assortment and best selected on exhibition in the city. The facilities we enjoy for purchasing cheap, and an experience of many years in connection with the largest houses in the country, enables us to present to our lady friends and the public, the cheapest and most select stock of goods in the city.

sept27 3mos STEPHEN LEAHY, 93 Sixth Avenue.

CHEAP FALL DRY GOODS!

Rich dress Silks, Broche and Woollen Shawls, French and English Merinos, Woollen Plaids, Poplins, Valencias, Mous. de Laines, Alpacas, French and English Prints, Ginghams, Domestics, Irish Linens, Flannels, Hosiery, Gloves, Embroideries, Laces, &c., &c. Also—Fashionable Cloaks and Mantillas of plain and fancy cloths, rich black and colored Silk Velvets, &c.

And at the Grand Street Store,

Royal Velvet, Brussels, Tapestry, Ingrain, Three-ply, and every variety of low-priced Carpetings, Rugs, Mats, Oil Cloths, Curtain materials, Cornices, Shades, &c.

ALL AT VERY ECONOMICAL PRICES!

Lord & Taylor, 255, 257, 259 and 261 Grand street,

oct4 3mos and new numbers 47 and 49 Catharine street.

Men's Furnishing Goods.

84 William Street, corner of Maiden Lane, New-York.

GEORGE M. TRACY,

HAS now on hand a choice stock of FALL AND WINTER GOODS, nearly all of which are made under his own inspection, of the choicest fabrics and newest styles. Merchants will find this a desirable place to make their selections. Annexed is a catalogue of some of the articles:

Hosiery and Gloves	Improved Napoleon Ties
Silk Beaufort Ties	Stocks, in great variety
Linen Collars	Silk and Linen Handkerchiefs
Silk Albert Ties	Dressing Robes
Fine Shirts	Travelling Shawls
Cravats and Stocks	Silk Under Shirts and Drawers
Suspenders	Silk and Gingham Umbrellas

His shirts are of superior make and quality, and warranted to fit. Persons wishing goods for their own use will be served at retail as well as wholesale, at the lowest prices. oc4m2

READY-MADE CLOTHING

And Furnishing Establishment.

390 BOWERY,

WEST SIDE, OPPOSITE THE HAY MARKET.

HUGH DOLAN

TAKES leave to apprise his friends and the public generally that he has the above concern with a

New and Select Stock of Goods,

Which will compare favorably with any in the market, and which he offers to his customers at prices which he is confident cannot be beaten in the city. Gentlemen's furnishing goods of every description at the lowest rates.

N. B. Particular attention paid to the making up of custom work. A good fit warranted in all cases.

Remember 390 Bowery, opposite the Hay Market. 3m4oc

KNOX'S

OFFICE FURNITURE WAREROOMS,

59 BEEKMAN STREET, UP STAIRS.

DESKS! DESKS!! DESKS!!!

DOUBLE and single counting-room desks, from 3 to 8 feet long. Office desks from 3 to 6 feet, of Mahogany, Black Walnut, and Oak; cases for books and pigeon holes. Office-chairs, cushions, lounges, and office tables of every description. my17tf

---

THE VIRGINIA TOBACCO AGENCY,

(ESTABLISHED IN 1836.)

45 Water street, New-York.

CHARLES M. CONNOLLY,

Commission Merchant and Agent for the sale of Manufactured Tobacco.

Has always on hand, at the above agency, a full supply of

Manufactured Tobacco,

Of all brands and descriptions, direct from the Virginia Factories, for sale on libberal terms. jly5 y

---

PHAIR & CO.,

STEAM JOB PRINTERS,

22 Beekman street, New-York.

Wines and Liquors.

THOMAS RUSSELL,

209 Fulton Street, between Church and Greenwich streets, and across town at 111 Attorney street, corner of Rivington.

THE subscriber begs leave to imform the public, that he has opened the abovee stahlishment for the sale of

PURE WINES, BRANDIES, &c.,

with an extensive assortment of

CHOICE CORDIALS,

by wholesale and retail, and would call the attention of buyers to his stock, consisting in part of

FINE COGNAC BRANDY.

The celebrated brand of Leger Freres, a superior article for medicinal purposes.

Pinet Castillon, vintage 1823 and 1842.

Otard, Dupuy & Co., vintages 1836 and 1840.

PORT WINE,

(J. & R. Osborn's Importation,)

COLERAINE AND DUBLIN MALT WHISKEY,

Imported by the subscriber, to which he invites the attention of the connoisseur.

HOLLAND GIN,

Meder Swan, and other favorite brands.

Together with a large assortment of

DUBLIN & LONDON PORTER, SCOTCH ALES,

and a seleet supply of genuine Havana Segars, of various brands.

Particular attention given to orders for families, and goods forwarded to any part of the City, Brooklyn, Jersey, &c. Country Orders, with remittance, immediately attended to.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Thomas Dillon, (late with Archdeacon & O'Conner, Wall street) customers can depend on all orders entrusted to his care being promptly and faithfully attended to.

Parties residing up town can procure the above articles of T. & J. Russell, corner 86th street, and 6th Avenue: T. Russell & Co., corner 4th street and 6th avenue, and at the corners of 13th Street, 8th and 10th Avenues.

"THE VINEYARD."

O'CONNOR & HOWARD,

PROPRIETORS.

17 WALL STREET.

Importers and Wholesale Dealers in

Foreign and Domestic Fruit, Ales, Wines, Liquors,

Segars,

Gunniss Double XX porter, Scotch and Alsop's Ale, English Pickles, Sauces, marmalades, Jelly, &c. &c. 3m10au

---

ELIZABETHAN ALE.

MEDICAL men now very generally recommend the occasional use of pure ale to those who are in need of nourishment; and it is undoubtedly the most wholesome beverage for general use that can be found. This is not a new idea. In Queen Elizabeth's time our ancestors universally consumed it—from Elizabeth herself, in her palace, to the farmer in the field. In those days, adulterated wines and fiery liquors may be said to have been unknown, and very heavy penalties were enacted against using anything except malt and hops in brewing. It is not at all extravagant to assert that the average duration of the life of a large portion of our race is a third less than it was two or three hundred years ago, and this is chiefly attributable to what we eat and what we drink. Even now the heartiest people that can be found are from the rural districts of England, who yet follow the old fashioned diet.

All who use ale, whether as a beverage or for the purpose of nourishment, will find the Elizabethan Ale most excellent. Being made on the Scotch plan, it is as pure and wholesome, (if not equal in flavor) as the imported, while its cost is but little more than a common article. Families and retailers supplied at 120 WATER STREET, one door above Wall. oc4m3

STUYVESANT SHADES,

No. 12 Stuyvesant Street,

Junction of 9th street, near Third Avenue, New-York.

Wines and Segars, of the best brands, always on hand.

oc25m3 F. Fitzsimons, Proprietor.

P. COTTER,

DEALER IN

LONDON BROWN STOUT, SCOTCH, & BURTON ALES.

Philadelphia Porter, Ale, Champagne Cider, and Soda Water.

Mercer House,

Corner of Broome and Mercer streets, New-York.

JOHN J. STAFF'S.

WINES, Liquors, Segars,
London, Dublin, and Philadelphia Porter and Ale,
Scotch, Burton, and East India Ales,
Champagne Cider in quantities to suit purchasers,

at 333 Broadway,

tf Corner of Anthony street, New-York.

WISE'S IRISH MALT WHISKEY.

IMPORTED by J. & P. Hogan, Nos. 6 and 12 West street, and 257 Third Avenue, corner of 21st street, New-York, and corner of Van Brunt and Sullivan streets, Brooklyn. J. & P. Hogan wish to inform their friends and the public that they have just received a large quantity of Wise's Cork Malt Whiskey, which will be sold at a reduced price, out of bond and at the above establishment. They are the only firm in New-York who import the same. ap26y

---

P. CUFF,

RECTIFIER AND DISTILLER,

NO. 806 EIGHTH AVENUE.

NEW-YORK.

Dealer in Foreign Wines and Liquors.

Goods sent to all parts of the country. Orders of all kinds promptly attended to. jly26

P. MONAGHAN,

IMPORTER of the various and best brands of Havana Segars, &c. &c. Country and city merchants supplied in bond or in store. Duties paid or unpaid. 85 Beaver street, New-York.

N. B. Sole Importer of the J. M. Vichot, La Union, and La Primavera brands. ap26y

---

NICHOLAS WALSH

SEXTON AND UNDERTAKER,

NO. 8 SIXTH AVENUE.

JAMES CRAFT,

FANCY CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

CORNER ANN AND NASSAU STREETS,

Entrance 29 Ann street, New-York. tf9au

The Irish News.

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
JOHN SAVAGE, LITERARY EDITOR.

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM. SINGLE COPIES SIX CENTS.
Publication Office, 29 Ann Street, Cor. of Nassau.

VOL. II. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1856. NO. 33.

Publications.

CONTENTS OF NO. XXXIII.

Editorial.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

THE RED STAR OF NICARAGUA.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESS.

CONVENT SEARCHING IN NEW-ORLEANS.

RELICS OF THE REVOLUTION—PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

MR. MEAGHER'S ADDRESS BEFORE THE COLUMBIAN MILITARY AND LITERARY ASSOCIATION, OF BOSTON.

Literature.

Fortunes of Casement O'Reilly—The last of it.—By Garland O'Halloran.—Ailey Moore, an Irish tale—All's Fair in Love—Talking Statues—A night in the Cork Exhtbition, No. 1.—Art Items, &c.

Poetry.

The Last Brother, by "Enul."—Translation from the Irish, by M. Doheny.

Correspondence.

Letter from Kilkenny, by "St. Canice."—Letter from Cork, by an Officer of National Guard of Paris.—Excursion of the "Irish News Guard."

Miscellaneous.

Sketches by the Wayside, No. 2—Irish Abbeys and Churches—Royal Family of Upper Scinde—A noble lesson—the Clan-Gibbon—Nicaraguan news—Irish news from all quarters—European news—News from California, Oregon, Central America—American news, &c.

THE IRISH NEWS,

EDITED BY THE PROPRIETOR,

THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER,

DEDICATED TO THE SERVICE OF THE

IRISH PEOPLE,

AT HOME AND ABROAD,

Will be published every Saturday, on and after the 12th of April, at 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau, New-York.

For retailers and carriers, $4 per hundred.
For Clubs, 4 copies to one address, per annum, $10.
" 7 " " " " $17.
" 10 " " " " $20.

For advertising.—Each square of eight lines,

Transient	$1
Monthly	$2
Quarterly	$5
Yearly	$16

N. B. Four lines, or under, constitute half a square.

Agents or Postmasters who interest themselves in procuring and remitting subscriptions, may retain 50 cents out of each annual subscription of $8.

☞ Subscribers, Agents, and Advertisers will please send in their orders early, and observe that our terms are invariably, payments in advance.

Communications of a PRIVATE nature should always be marked so. Those connected with the editorial department are to be addressed to Thomas Francis Meagher, and those on business to Richard J. Lalor, Irish News Office, 29 Ann street, corner of Nassau.

☞ Subscribers, residing in New-York, Brooklyn, and Williamsburgh, who pay in advance, will have their papers neatly enveloped, addressed, and delivered on each Wednesday through Boyd's Express or some similar medium.

Printed by Watters Brothers, 47 Ann street,
POWER PRESS OF J. B. WILLIAMS.

KEATING'S IRELAND.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE

FORAS FEASA AR ERINN;

OR, GENERAL HISTORY OF IRELAND.

From a Manuscript Copy of the Original Irish of the Rev. and Learned GEOFFREY KEATING.

With Notes, Historical, Topographical, and Explanatory,

By JOHN O'MAHONY, Esq.

The work is now in course of preparation, and will be speedily published, in one large octavo volume of about 600 pages, with plates. Price to Subscribers, $2,00. The book will be got up in superior style, and furnished to the address of Subscribers giving their names to a duly authorized canvasser, or to

P. M. HAVERTY, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, N. Y.

☞ A list of Subscribers will be printed in the work.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 10, 1856.

Dear Haverty—I wish you to put down my name as a Subscriber to Mr. O'Mahony's translation of "Foras Feasa ar Erinn."

That is a book long wanted, and which the Celtic Society ought to have given us long ago. If William Elliott had lived, it would have been accomplished. And it will be no small credit to you, if you can bring out here in America, a work long acknowledged to be a desideratum in Ireland; executed, too, by a scholar so competent both to translate and to illustrate it with notes as Mr. O'Mahony. I hope it is well advanced in its preparation.

Faithfully yours, JOHN MITCHEL.

Now Ready!

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF

ROBERT EMMET,

By DR. R. R. MADDEN,

With a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neil.

AND A MEMOIR OF

Thomas Addis Emmet.

with a fine portrait on steel, engraved by O'Neill. Bound together in One Volume, 12mo., cloth. Price $1.

This edition is enriched with numerous Notes and Extracts from recent authorities including the following:

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF CLONCURRY.	LIFE OF CORBETT.
MADDEN'S UNITED IRISHMEN.	B. P. BINNS' LETTERS.
SAVAGE'S '98 AND '48.	GRATTAN'S LIFE. By his Son.
GILBERT'S STREETS OF DUBLIN.	PHILLIPS' RECOLLECTIONS OF CURRAN.
FITZPATRICK'S LIFE OF CLONCURRY.	JOHN BINN'S LIFE.
IRISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.	MOORE'S LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.
LIFE OF O'DWYER THE OUTLAW.	MACNEVIN'S PIECES OF IRISH HISTORY.
MOORE'S LETTERS TO MACKENZIE.	MAGOON'S AMERICAN ORATORS.
LIFE OF ROBERT HOLMES. By Savage.	CURRAN'S LIFE. Edited by Mackenzie.

Uniform with the above, the LIFE OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By Thomas Moore. Price 75 cents.

☞ Sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

sept6 P. M. Haverty, Publisher, 110 Fulton street, New York.

Publications.

LITTELL, SON & CO., BOSTON.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

THIS work is made up of the elaborate and stately essays of the EDINBURGH, QUARTERLY, and other Reviews; and BLACKWOOD' noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen Political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contributions to Literature, History and Oemmon Life, by the sagacious SPECTATOR, the sparkling EXAMINER, the judicious ATHENEUM, the busy and industrious LITERARY GAZETTE, the sensible and comprehensive BRITANNIA, the sober and respeotable CHRISTIAN OBSERVPR; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the UNITED SERVICE, and with the best articles of the DUBLIN UNIVERSITY, NEW MONTHLY, FRASER'S, TAIT'S, AINSWORTH'S, HOOD'S and SPORTING MAGAZINES, and of Chambers' admirable JOURNAL. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from PUNCH; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of THE TIMES. We shall increase our variety by importations from the Continent of Europe, and from the growth of the British Colonies.

The LIVING AGE is published every Saturday—price, (free of postage) six dollars a year. Remittances for any period will be promptly attended to.

Complete sets of the FIRST SERIES, in thirty-six volumes, handsomely bouud, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principle cities, free of expense of freight, are for sale for Seventy-two Dollars. The Second Series began in 1853.

Any volume may be had separately, at Two Dollars, bound, or a Dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents—and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

☞ A few advertisements of Books, Patents, or other matters of general interest, will be added, at reasonable rates.

Extracts of Letters from Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, and President Adams.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I have read the prospectus with great pleasure; and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough, to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give healthy tone, not only to our literature but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more: it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character.

JOSEPH STORY.

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of the "Living Age;" and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit and taste that the prospectus indicates (of which I have no reason to doubt), it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1845.

Of all the Periodical Journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe, and in this country, this has appeared to me the most useful. It contains, indeed, the exposition only of the current literature of the English language; but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind, in the utmost expansion of the present age. J. Q. ADAMS.

THE PANORAMA OF LIFE AND LITERATURE.

Published Monthly at the Office of Littell's Living Age,

Boston.

Every number of this work contains articles of leading interest; grave and earnest, yet not heavy; popular, and yet of abiding value. To these are added, in profuse abundance and great variety, Tales, Poetry, Voyages, Travels, and whatever—within the bounds of sound taste and good principles—may be included under the large head of Light Reading. But mere light reading soon becomes wearisome, unless there breathe from it spirit and heart, life and soul.

We promise a Magazine that shall be more and better than mere amusement: a Book suited to the leisure of the old and wise, and yet abundantly attractive to the young and ardent. It will freely provide for the Imagination, as well as for the Reason and Memory.

For THREE DOLLARS A YEAR, received at the office of publication, the Panorama will be sent (free of postage), to any post-office in the United States.

Two COPIES, Five Dollars a year; FIVE COPIES, Ten Dollars a year, Clubs to pay their own postage, which is three cents a number, payable QUARTERLY IN ADVANCE.

The first number was issued in July, 1855. It makes two large volumes a year. We can supply orders for back numbers or volumes.

Both Works are Published by Littell, Son & Company, Boston.

oct18 tf

JUST PUBLISHED

THE CHEAPEST AND HANDSOMEST GIFT BOOKS IN THE MARKET.

LOOMIS' ILLUMINATED STORIES!

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

For Sale by all Booksellers throughout the country. Price in illuminated covers and edges, 25 cents.

CINDERELLA.	BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.
JACK THE GIANT-KILLER.	TOM THUMB.
RED RIDING-HOOD.	GOODY TWO SHOES.
MOTHER GOOSE.	&c., &c., &c.

Robinson Crusoe and Chanticleer,

Very beautifully illustrated and printed on superfine paper. Illuminated covers, 50 cents.

Brown, Loomis & Co.,
15 Dutch Street, N. Y.

4t nov15

Special Notices.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 13, 1856.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the following ordinance, relative to express wagons, carts, cartmen, &c., &c., having been adopted, its provisions will hereafter be enforced.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinanae entitled "An Ordinance for the licensing, and otherwise regulating the use and employment of express wagons, carts and cartmen, &c., &c., approved by the Mayor June 2, 1851."

The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council convened, do ordain as follows:

That section 2 of said Ordinance, relating to carts and cartmen, be amended, so as to read as follows:

SECTION 2.—The Mayor shall from time to time license and appoint so many and such persons as he may think proper, to set up and keep public carts in said city, Provided, that no one person shall be so licensed to keep more than three such public carts.

And he shall also license so many and such persons as he may think proper, to be public cartmen of said city, and he may revoke or suspend any or all such licenses at his pleasure. All persons licensed as foresaid, to keep public carts, shall be deemed to be public cartmen, within the meaning of this Ordinance; but it shall not be lawful for any person to receive or to hold a license to keep public carts, or to be a public cartman, unless he be a citizen of the United States, and resident within the State of New-York, and is the actual owner of the cart or carts, with good horses therefor, so licensed to be kept as public carts; and the Mayor may examine, under oath, all persons applying for or holding any such license, or the renewal thereof, touching their qualifications as aforesaid, and all licences other than to persons so qualified shall be void.

Adopted by the Board of Councilmen, May 9, 1856.
Adopted by the Board of Aldermen, July 15, 1856.
Approved by the Mayor July 30, 1856.

aug28 10t

Publications.

Contemplate the Life of Mary!

EDWARD DUNIGAN & BROTHER,

151 Fulton street, New-York,

Are now publishing in semi-monthly parts at 25 cents each and under the express approbation of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York,

The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

OF HER MOST CHASTE SPOUSE

St. Joseph,

AND HOLY PARENTS

St. Joachim and St. Anne.

Illustrated by fine Steel Engravings, and printed on superfine paper, with Chapter Headings, Borders, and Initial Letters, designed and engraved expressly for this work.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, is by the Rt. Rev. Romuald Gentilucci, Chamberlain to Pope Pius IX., is dedicated to and honored with the suffrages of His Holiness, and approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace.

Gentilucci's work will ever be remarkable for its unction and beauty of style, no less than for the deep knowledge which it displays of the writings of the Holy Fathers, and all the monuments of ecclesiastical history that can, in any way throw light on the Life of the Immaculate Mother of Our Lord, as handed down in the loving tradition of the faithful from the age in which she lived.

The Life of Saint Joseph—no unfit companion for the elegant work of Gentilucci—is from the pen of Father Vallejo, a Mexican Jesuit of the last century, a work approved by the ecclesiastical authorities of the Roman States, and frequently reprinted.

CONDITIONS.

The Life of the Blessed Virgin, Her Holy Spouse and Parents, will be published in semi-monthly parts of 48 pages each, with a Steel Engraving and several Wood Cuts in each number, and will, when complete, form a volume of nearly 1000 pages.

OBSERVATIONS OF THE PRESS.

The work having received the approbation of His Holiness, himself, as well as of the illustrious Archbishop Hughes, it only remains for us to say, that it appears to be gracefully translated into our language, and the style in which it is produced, is really superior, both as to its general appearance, as well as to the chasteness of the design, and execution of the illuminated borders which adorn every page of the work.—London Register and Catholic Standard.

No other work of our day on the same subject can be compared to it. It is unrivalled for beauty of style and depth of erudition. It is the offering of the learned and devoted son of the Blessed Virgin, who enjoys the confidence and friendship of our most holy Father, to whom the work is dedicated. We are no more edified at the piety of the author, than astonished at the wonderful erudition displayed in this book. The translator has performed his task admirably.—Pittsburg Catholic.

We cannot too highly recommend it to the consideration of our readers whether we regard the intrinsic value of the work, itself, or the beauty and exquisite ensemble of its getting up.—Truth Teller.

Profusely illustrated with engravings and vignettes, this work is brought out in such an elegant style, as to make it, exclusive of its literary merit, a fitting library companion to the magnificent edition of the Bible of the enterprising publishers.—Detroit Vindicator.

The work is one of devotion and merit. We do not know who translated it, but it seems better than average translations.—Freeman's Journal.

This work, translated from the Italian, and apparently well translated, is by an eminent author, is dedicated by permission to his Holiness Pius IX., and is spoken of in very high terms by competent judges. As far as we have seen it, we like it very much, and think it must prove a great favorite with the children of Mary and all devout Catholics.—Brownson's Review.

INDUCEMENT.

Each subscriber to this splendid work will receive with the last number a magnificent Steel Engraving suitable for framing, of the

MOST REV. JOHN HUGHES, D.D.,

Archbishop of New-York.

Address orders to Edward Dunigan & Brother,
sep6 1m 151 Fulton street, New-York.

IMPORTANT TO TEACHERS and SUPERINTENDENTS of PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—Your attention is directed to DR. JOHNSON'S PHILOSOPHICAL CHARTS FOR SCHOOLS and Academies. Being a series of ten. Each size 35 by 51 inches. Containing over 300 Drawings illustrative of almost every department of this branch of study, accompanied with an explanatory Key, forming the most valuable acquisition to school appurtenances ever produced in this country. Price neatly colored, and mounted on cloth and rollers, $15 per set.

OPINION OF THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN, PRESIDENT OF RUTGERS COLLEGE, N. J.

"They furnish an admirable substitute for the far more expensive apparatus. These charts hung on the walls of a school-room, in all which I hope to see them, will spread before the scholar a palpable illustration of the great laws in Natural Philosophy. He will learn much of God from the works of His hand and the ordinance of His appointment.

"The small volume that comes with them, and a little explanation by the teacher, will render the CHARTS one of the most useful means of instruction."

N. B.—Sample copies of the Key, accompanied with a complete set of the Charts on a reduced scale, will be sent to any address, post-paid, on the receipt of 50 cents in cash or postage-stamps. Address

A. RANNEY, Publisher, n22 2t No. 195 Broadway, New-York.

LADY MORGAN'S NATIONAL STORIES.—Just published—

THE O'BRIENS AND THE O'FLAHERTIES. A National Story, being the first of Lady Morgan's Novels and Romances, with an Introduction and Notes, by Dr. Shelton Mackenzie. 2 vols. 12mo. $2.

ALSO,

THE HISTORY OF TEXAS, from its first settlement to the annexation, with Maps, Portraits and other Illustrations. By Col. H. Yoakum, of the Texas Bar. 2 vols. 8vo., cloth, $5; full library, sheep, $5 50; half calf, or morocco, extra, $7 50.

SINAI AND PALESTINE, in connection with their History. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, M.A. Cannon of Canterbury, with colored Maps and Plates. 8vo., cloth, $2 50.

KNIGHTS AND THEIR DAYS. By Dr. Doran, author of "Table Traits," "Habits and Men," &c. 12mo., cloth, $1 25.

Saturday, Nov. 22.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A FEMALE SLAVE. 12mo., cloth, $1.

Next Week.

DICKENS'S LITTLE FOLKS: SECOND SERIES.

A Series of beautiful Juveniles, selected from Dickens's Works, in his own language, with illustrations, by Darley, 18mo., cloth, 38 cts.; do., extra gilt, gilt edges, 50 cts.

1. THE BOY JOE AND SAM WELLER, from the "Pickwick Papers."
2. SISSY JUPE, from "Hard Times."
3. THE TWO DAUGHTERS, from "Martin Chuzzlewit."
4. TINY TIM AND DOT, AND THE FAIRY CRICKET, from the "Christmas Stories."
5. DAME BURDEN, from "Bleak House."
6. DODLY VARDEN, THE LITTLE COQUETTE, from "Barnaby Rudge."

The 6 volumes in a neat case, $2 25; extra gilt, $3.

nov22 J. S. REDFIELD, No. 34 Beekman-st.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for Europe, per U. S. Steamer BALTIC, will close at this office on SATURDAY, the 22d day of November, at 10½ o'clock, A. M.

nov 22 1t ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

☞ Post Office Notice.—The Mails for California, &c., per U. S. Steamer GEORGE LAW, will close at this office on THURSDAY, the 20th day of Nov., at 12 o'clock, M.

nov22 1t ISAAC V. FOWLER, Postmaster.

Shipping.

THE NEW-YORK AND LIVERPOOL

United States Mail Line.

The ships composing this line are the following:

The ATLANTIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The ADRIATIC .....Capt. West.
The PACIFIC .....Capt. Eldridge.
The BALTIC .....Capt. Comstock.

These ships have been built by contract, expressly for the government service. Every care has been taken in their construction, as also in their engines to insure strength and speed; and their accommodations for passengers are unequalled for elegance and comfort.

Price of passage from New-York to Liverpool in first cabin, $130; in second do., $75. Exclusive use of extra size state rooms, $825. From Liverpool to New-York, 30 and 20 guineas.

An experienced surgeon attached to each ship.

No berth can be secured until paid for.

Edw'd. K. Collins & Co., No. 56 Wall street, New-York.
Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool.
Stephen Kennard & Co., 27 Austin Friars, London.
B. G. Wainwright & Co., Paris.

The owners of these ships will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewelry, precious stones or metals, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, and the value thereof therein expressed.

Shippers will please take notice, that the ships of this line cannot carry any goods contraband of war. oct 25 6m.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,

Old Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets.

CERTIFICATES

Furnished for Passage to and from Liverpool, on the 1st and 16th of every Month, by the following splendid ships:

James Foster, Jr.	....	Capt. J. W. Porter.
Neptune	....	" E. W. Peabody.
Harvest Queen	....	" E. Young.
Isaac Webb	....	" J. M. Bayer.
Great Western	....	" W. G. Furrier.
Manhattan	....	" T. Dixon.
Isaac Wright	....	" E. Abeel.
Columbia	....	" C. Hutchinson.
Fidelia	....	" W. A. Macgill.
Yorkshire	....	" C. A. Marshall.

REMITTANCES.

Drafts, for £1 and upwards, on the Royal Bank of Ireland, and on Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Liverpool and London, payable on sight.

C. H. MARSHALL & CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

Agents in Liverpool, Baring Brothers & Co.,

OLD LINE PACKETS,

Pier 23 East River, foot of Beekman street. 6m

WILLIAMS & GUION'S

Old Black Star Line of Packets. 1856.

Passage from any part of Great Britain and Ireland, secured at the lowest possible rates by this old-established line, sailing from Liverpool to New-York every five days, comprising the following magnificent Ships:

Ships.	Captains.	Tonage.
AUSTRALIA,	Smith,	2,000
BRIDGEWATER (new),	Barstow,	2,000
CULTIVATOR (new),	Austin,	2,000
CYNOSURE,	Bray,	2,000
CORNELIA LAWRENCE (new),	Knapp,	2,000
DE WITT CLINTON,	Funk,	1,800
ENTERPRISE,	Davis,	1,200
GUY MANNERING,	Dollard,	2,000
JACOB A. WESTERVELT,	Hoodless,	2,000
IRENE,	Williams,	1,400
JOHN BRIGHT (new),	Cutting,	2,000
MARMION,	Hanley,	1,200
NORTH AMERICAN,	Clark,	1,800
OSWEGO,	Stevens,	1,400
ROBERT KELLY,	Barstow,	1,500
SILAS WRIGHT (new),	Freeman,	2,000
SOUTHAMPTON,	Furlong,	1,600
THORNTON (new),	Collins,	2,000
TICONDEROGA,	Boyle,	1,400
UNIVERSE,	Cave,	2,000
VANGUARD,	Norton,	1,800

The ships of this line are the largest and swiftest in the trade, their accommodations for passengers are unequalled, and the frequency and punctuality of their departure offer advantages to the emigrant not to be had by any Line of Packets. Such passengers as decline coming out, the money paid for them will be promptly refunded without discount.

Provisions of best quality are provided for passengers; rations, consisting of Bread, Flour, Rice, Oatmeal, Tea, Sugar, Molasses, Salt, &c.

The increased patronage received by the proprietors of the Old Black Star Line has induced them to add to the Line several New Ships, which have taken their place this season; no expense has been spared to render the facilities for Emigration equal to the times, and add to the renown of these celebrated Packets.

The regular Sailing Days are 1st, 8th, 11th, 16th, 21st, and 26th of each month; this will give passengers opportunity for embarking more frequent than by any other established Line, to which the attention of the public is respectfully called.

No Certificate of Passage will be issued for children under 12 years of age unless accompanied by an adult, who must be paid for on same certificate; or persons over 60 years of age, or with any impediment, without a Permit from Commissioners of Emigration.

REMITTANCES.

Persons wanting to send money to their friends can obtain drafts for any amount, which will be cashed at sight at the following Banks:

Ireland—National Bank of Ireland; Royal Bank of Ireland; Ulster Banking Co., and their Branches.

Scotland—National Bank of Scotland and Branches.

England—Messrs. GLYNN, MILLS & Co, Bankers, London; GUION & Co., Merchants, Liverpool.

For further particulars apply, if by letter post-paid, to

WILLIAMS & GUION,
40 Fulton street, New-York.

GUION & CO.,
115 Waterloo Road, Liverpool.

AGENTS—JOHN WHITNEY, Providence, R. I.
EDWARD RYAN, 2 Albany street, Boston.
THOMAS RATTIGAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLACK BALL LINE

OF LIVERPOOL PACKETS,

Sailing to and from Liverpool on the 1st and 16th of each Month.

THE following ten magnificent clipper Packet Ships comprise the "Black Ball Line, viz:—

James Foster Jr., Great Western, Harvest Queen, Isaac Webb, Isaac Wright, Manhattan, Neptune, Columbia, Yorkshire, Fidelia.

DRAFTS AT SIGHT for any amount payable in every town throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Persons returning to the old country, or those sending for their friends, will find it to their interest to select the "Black Ball Line," as the accommodations in the above clippers for Cabin, Second Cabin, and Steerage Passengers, are well known by the travelling public to be far superior to any other.

☞ Apply or address by letter, post-paid; no letter will be answered unless a postage stamp is enclosed to pre-pay postage.

Jacob Wilson, 108 South street, New York,
Who is the only authorized Passenger Agent for the "Black Ball Line," which lay at Pier 23 East River, opposite this office. my8 3m

Shipping.

LIVERPOOL AND PHILADELPHIA

STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

Intend despatching their splendid Iron Screw Steamers as follows:

FROM LIVERPOOL — Every alternate Wednesday. | FROM PHILADELPHIA — Every alternate Thursday.

Steerage passage from Philadelphia, $80; from Liverpool, $40, including fare from or to New-York and cooked provisions. Persons wishing to visit Europe or to send for friends from Great Britain and Ireland, by the above line of splendid Steamships, or by first-class sailing Packets, can purchase passage tickets on application to

Sabel & Cortis, 177 Broadway, New-York.

Or to their Agents in

Albany—A. T. Holmes.....Dubuque—Jas. C. Rattray.
Baltimore—Foard & Rodgers.....Hartford, Ct.—A. Rose.
Boston—Thompson & Co.....New-Orleans—Jenkins, Williams & Co.
Buffalo—Robt. Hager.....Pittsburg—John Thompson.
Chicago—Lull & Mayer.....Pottsville—R. Edwards.
Cincinnati—J. F. Meline & Co.....Toronto C. W.—D. K. Feehan. tf24my

Bankers.

GREEN & SEWELL,

BANKERS,

No. 29 Wall Street, New-York.

DRAFTS on the Belfast Banking Co., available in any part of Ireland, for sale.

REMITTANCES from the interior, promptly forwarded to any address in Ireland, and receipt therefor returned to the sender. General Banking business transacted. my17 6m

---

BREWER & CALDWELL,

20 OLD SLIP, CORNER OF WATER STREET, N. Y.

ISSUE BANK OF CHARLESTON BILLS

ON

BANK OF LIVERPOOL,

In sums of one pound sterling and upwards, payable at any of the Banks in ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES. jun14

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.

IRISH EMIGRANT SOCIETY,
Office, 51 Chambers street.

NOTICE.—The recent failures, by which a large amount of Bills remitted from this country to friends in Ireland, has been returned unpaid, afford to this Society the opportunity, and at the same time impose upon it the duty of informing the public, that such losses would have been prevented if the parties purchasing Bills had availed themselves of the advantages offered by the Society.

For the purpose of entire protection a fund is constantly kept on deposit in the Bank of Ireland, against which this Society issues its drafts, payable at sight (from sums of £1 sterling and upwards), on the Bank and all its branches, and has thereby for the last Ten Years afforded a mode of remittance perfectly safe and unquestionable.

New-York, December 29, 1851.

ANDREW CARRIGAN, President.

JOHN MANNING, ROBERT J. DILLON, HUGH KELLY, } Vice-Presidents.

EDWARD C. DONNELLY, Corresponding Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Recording Secretary.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Felix Ingoldsby,	John Nicholson,	William Redmond.
William Watson,	Hugh Kelly,	James Olwell,
John Manning,	Cornel Sheehan,	Daniel Devlin,
Terence Donnelly,	Romaine Dillon,	John McMenomy.

EMIGRANT INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK.

No. 51 CHAMBERS STREET.

THIS Institution has been established for the purpose of affording to Emigrants and others, a safe place of deposit for their funds, to protect them from robbery and fraud.

It is conducted with the strictest economy—neither the Officers and Trustees, receive any compensation for their services. The entire profits belong to the Depositors, and will be divided amongst them, having due regard to the safety of the funds.

The last dividend was six per cent. upon all sums of $500 and under, and and will be continued or increased as the profits may justify.

Bank open to receive Deposits, daily, from 10 A. M., to 2, and from 5 to 7 P. M.

TRUSTEES.

William Watson,	John P. Nesmith,
John Nicholson,	John Milhau,
Andrew Carrigan,	Edward W. Tiers,
James Kelly,	Charles M. Connelly,
James Kerrigan,	Cornelius H. Sheehan,
Hugh Kelly,	Edward Bayer,
Charles O'Connor,	Daniel Devlin.
James Olwell,

JOSEPH STUART, President.
FELIX INGOLDSBY, 1st Vice-President.
JOHN MCMENOMY, 2d Vice-President.
TERENCE DONNELLY, Treasurer.
LOUIS B. BINSSE, Secretary.
PETER CREAR, Accountant.

JOHN MANNING, Comptroller. tf

REMITTANCES TO

ENGLAND, IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.

STERLING BILLS for sale on Messrs. Prescott, Grote & Co., Bankers, London, from £1 upwards, payable on demand, and negotiable in any part of the United Kingdom; also Bank of England Notes and Drafts of any of the English Banks or Bankers, bought and sold.

ap191y Prime & Co., 54 Wall street.

Coal.

COAL.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a new Coal Yard, cor. 27th Street and 9th Avenue, where he is prepared to sell the best quality of Red and White Ash Coal, at the lowest market price for cash. Weight warranted, or forfeit coal.

6mos* JOHN MACDONALD.

COAL of the very best quality both Anthracite and Bituminous, for family and manufacturing purposes, for sale by the subscriber from his Yards, 632 Washington, 128 McDougal, and 146 West Thirty-second streets. Also, Coal by the cargo.

ap191y Thomas Maher.

Special Notices.

Real Estate, Landlord and Tenant's Registry, and Boarding House Ageney, 510 Broadway, (opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Houses, Rooms, &c., rented; Rents, collected, Leases drawn, and every description of business connected with a General Agency transacted on liberal terms. Insurances effected, and Advertising attended to. No charge for Registration of Property for Sale or to Let.

sept6 3mos Hatton & Co.

Business Notices.

FASHIONABLE HATTER, 223 THIRD AVENUE.

COWHY'S Spring style of Hats, now ready, are superior to anything hitherto offered in Beauty of Shape, and Elegance of Finish. Being a practical hatter himself, Cowhy is enabled to sell A SUPERIOR HAT AT A VERY MODERATE PRICE.

His young gent's hat is one of great beauty, and his assortment of children's fancy hats and caps cannot be surpassed by any other establishment in the city.

N. B.—Hats and Caps made to order, and warranted to fit, by COWHY, 223 Third Avenue, between 19th and 20th streets. my3 1y

---

HERRING'S

PATENT CHAMPION FIRE AND BURGLAR PROOF SAFES.

THE great interest manifested by the public to procure more perfect security from Fire for valuable papers, such as BONDS, MORTGAGES, DEEDS, NOTES, and BOOKS OF ACCOUNT than the ordinary SAFES heretofore in use had afforded, induced the subscribers to devote a large portion of time and attention during the past fourteen years in making improvements and discoveries for this object, and they now beg leave to assure their numerous friends and the public generally that their efforts have been crowned with complete success, and now offer the "IMPROVED HERRING'S PATENT WORLD'S FAIR PREMIUM FIRE-PROOF SAFE," as the

CHAMPION SAFE OF THE WORLD!

Having been awarded Medals at both the

World's Fair, London, 1851, and in New-York, 1853,

As superior to all others. It is now undoubtedly entitled to that appellation, and, secured with HALL'S PATENT POWDER-PROOF LOCKS, which also was awarded MEDALS as above), forms the most perfect Fire and Burglar Proof Safes ever offered to the public.

The subscribers also manufacture all kinds of Boiler and Chilled Iron Bank Chests and Vaults, Vault Doors, and Money Boxes or Chests, for Brokers, Jewelers, and Private Families, for Plate, Diamonds, and other Valuables, and are also Patentees (by purchase) and Manufacturers of

JONES' PATENT PERMUTATION BANK LOCK.

SILAS C. HERRING & CO., Patentees,
GREEN BLOCK, Nos. 135, 137 and 138 Water street, New-York. my10 tf

---

PIANOS, MELODEONS AND MUSIC

The Cash system adopted!—Prices greatly reduced.

HORACE WATERS,

No. 333 Broadway, N. Y.,

AGENT FOR THE BEST BOSTON AND NEW-YORK INSTRUMENTS.

The largest assortment of

Pianos, Melodeons, Musical Instruments,

AND

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE,

of all kinds, in the United States, Pianos from ten different Manufactories, comprising those of every variety of style, from the plain, neat and substantial 6½ octaves, in Walnut or Rosewood Cases, from $150 to $200, to those of the most elegant finish up to $1000. No house in the Union can compete with the above in the number, variety, and celebrity of its instruments, nor in the extremely low prices at which they are sold.

Horace Waters' Modern Improved Pianos,

WITH OR WITHOUT IRON FRAMES.

possessing in their improvements of over-strings and action, a length of scale power, and compass of tone equal to the Grand Piano, united with the beauty and durability of structure of the square Piano. They are justly pronounced by the Press and by the first Musical Masters to be equal to those of any other manufacturer. They are built of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and guaranteed to stand the action of every climate.

Each Instrument guaranteed to give satisfaction, or purchase money refunded. Second-hand Pianos at great bargains, constantly in store; price from $30 to $140.

Horace Waters' Melodeons,

SUPERIOR INSTRUMENTS IN TONE, TOUCH AND DURABILITY OF MAKE.

(Tuned the equal temperament.) Melodeons of all other styles and makes. Price, $45, $60, $75, $100, $125, $140; double Reeds, $150; double Reeds and two banks of Keys, $200. Less a liberal discount. Clergymen and Churches, an extra discount.

Martin's Guitars, Brown's Harps, Flutes, Flutinas, Accordeons, Violins, and Musical Instruments,

OF ALL KINDS, AT LOWER PRICES THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC.

A large discount to Teachers and Schools. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms.

MUSIC.

One of the largest and best selected catalogues of Music now published, comprising many of the choice and most popular airs of the day, and will be sold at one-third off from the regular prices.

Music sent by mail to all parts of the country, post paid. Particular and personal attention paid to all orders received by mail. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. Pianos and Melodeons for rent, and rent allowed on purchase. Pianos and Melodeons for sale on monthly payments. Second-hand Pianos taken in exchange for new. General and select Catalogues and Schedule of prices forwarded to all parts of the country by mail.

☞ Great inducements offered to agents in all parts of the country, to sell the Horace Waters' Pianos, Melodeons, and Catalogue of Music.

PIANOS AND MUSIC.—We learn that Horace Waters, of 333 Broadway, N. Y., agent for the sale of many of the most celebrated makers of Pianos and Melodeons, is offering them at prices which we advise all who desire to purchase to avail themselves of. He is also selling his large and well-known Catalogue of Music at one-third off from the regular prices, and will forward the same free of postage. His offers to the trade, teachers and schools, are of the most favorable character, all of which he will be able to fill to the letter, for having wisely adopted the cash system. The Horace Waters' Pianos are known as among the very best. We are enabled to speak of those instruments with some degree of confidence, from personal knowledge of their excellent tone and durable quality.—N. Y. Evangelist. ap191

Special Notices.

I. E. Tate's Pannus Corrium Boot and Shoe store, for tender feet. A large stock of Boots, Shoes and Gaiters always on hand, in great variety, and made to order at the shortest notice, for Gentlemen, Boys and Youths—wholesale and retail, at the lowest Cash prices. Particular attention is requested to the Pannus Corrium or Leather Cloth Boots and Shoes, for those troubled with corns, bunions or tenderness of the feet. Its qualities for summer boots or shoes, surpass anything ever got up in this country for real comfort, as it keeps the feet perfectly cool, and at the same time is susceptible of the finest polish; for a dress boot more so than any French calfskin, with one half the labor. ISAAC E. TATE.

my 24, 3 mos. 427 Broadway New-York.

New Patent Right, for manufacturing Gent's. Hats. Only $1 50 for a fine FASHIONABLE HAT! What is the use of paying $3 or $4 50 for a Hat, when you can buy a better Hat for only ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS? By my new Patent Right for manufacturing Gent's. Hats, I can fit you with as neat and pretty a Hat as you ever put upon your head, for the low price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents. Call and examine for yourself.

N. B.—Best quality, $2, as good as any Hats sold in this city for $4 or $5.

SMITH, No. 31 Park Row,
sept6 1yr Under Lovejoy's Hotel, a few doors from Beekman-st.

Hull's Truss Office, No. 4 Vesey street, Astor House. Of Twenty years standing. At the above establishment, those suffering from Hernia, can obtain speedy relief, as the proprietors, in addition to their world-renowned Trusses, make it a point to keed on hand every style of Truss that has in any way received the commendation of the public. Together with a new style of Supporter for Prolapsus Utero, which has given entire satisfaction to hundreds who are wearing them. Also a Separate Office, attended by a competent Female, exclusively for Ladies. Trusses applied to children from two weeks old and upward. Mothers should not neglect their children one day, when they discover them suffering from Hernia, (Rupture) as the sooner the remedy is applied the sooner the cure.

Instruments for all kinds of deformity made to order. Shoulder-braces, &c. constantly on hand. N. B. Ladies attended to at their private dwellings, if required. Advice and assistance given to the poor gratis. tf no22

European News.

The British and North American mail steamer Europe, from Liverpool, about 11 o'clock A.M. of Saturday, Nov. 1, arrived Nov. 13th, with a number of passengers, &c.

The Neapolitan question remains precisely as it did. The only additional incidents being that the government of Naples has addressed a circular, of moderate tone, to its diplomatic agents, and that the King has sent Monsieur Thomas d'Agiout, a Frenchman in his confidence, to Paris on a secret mission.

A dispatch states, although perhaps on no authority, that to the French request to evacuate the Danubian Principalities, the Austrians have returned a flat refusal.

This matter of the Principalities has assumed prominence over other topics. The French Government journals assert definitely and explicitly that the Porte has demanded, in due form, that the Austrians shall evacuate the Principalities and the British the Black Sea, but that they, by a secret mutual understanding, refuse to leave. The English journals, under the immediate inspiration of the Government, deny, on the contrary, that any such demand has been made by the Porte.

The journals generally—British, French and German—speak in undisguished terms of the completion, or progress towards completion of an alliance between England and Austria, and between France and Russia.

The statement now is that Russia has proposed, as a compromise, to refer the question of the Isle of Serpents and of Belgrade to Constantinople for settlement.

The London Times strongly dissuades capitalists from investing in the Russian railroad concessions. The railroads conceded are two thousand five hundred miles, requiring forty millions sterling of capital.

The Swedish Chambers have been opened by a speech from the King, promising liberal measures. A very doubtful rumor was current that King Oscar would visit St. Petersburgh.

The Turkish Ministry yet hold office—the Sultan having refused to accept their resignation.

News from Bombay to October 3rd, mentions the expedition against Persia was still in preparation, but had not sailed. Inundations and cholera had ravaged the Punjaub and Scinde. From Shanghae, dates are Sept. 14th. The season's supply of tea was expected to be short. Further success of the insurgents is reported.

There has been an active demand for money during the week in the English market, as well for commercial purposes as in the Stock Exchange, at the full bank rates of interest. The next return of the Bank of England was expected to show some improvement, and the impression was rather more favorable as to the position of the Bank of France. It will, however, require some time to confirm these favorable symptoms.

The Anglo-French Alliance Falling to Pieces.—The news is important as regards the changing aspect of relations between France and England. Public rumor no longer hesitates to say that an Anglo-Austrian alliance is necessary to counteract the threatened alliance between Russia and France. Official information being kept carefully from the public, we have no means of knowing how far these new alliances have progressed. Such hints as are given on the subj cet come from the Paris correspondents of the London journals.

The Times' Paris correspondent says :—Whether well founded or not, the opinion is very general, that not only does there exist a serious difference between France and England, on more than one point, but also that the latter has been completely reconciled to Austria, and that the former is now on more than friendly terms with Russia; and the Austrians in Paris boast that it is not possible for the two cabinets to be on more amicable terms than those of Vienna and London. That a corresponding sentiment prevails between Russia and France is equally believed, and a certain ex-minister of Louis Phillippe is said to have recently offered to wager a reasonable sum that England and Austria on one hand, and Russia and France on the other, would soon be more openly hostile.

The Times correspondent quotes a letter from Munich, which says :—"England is by no means satisfied with France, who seems indifferent about requiring from Russia the execution of the treaty of March 30; and England, perceiving this disposition, draws closer to Austria."

At the risk (Daily News correspondent) of uttering what the Moniteur may perhaps denounce as an "odious calumny," I feel it an imperative duty to say emphatically that, instead of being in harmonious relations, the cabinets of London and Paris are at this moment almost at daggers drawn. The difference between them on the question of the execution of the treaty of Paris is most serious, and as to what is to be done with Naples they are absolutely at sixes and sevens. The French Government, I learn from a good source, is apprehensive that England may be driven to occupy the Island of Sicily, in order, in case of a convulsion in Europe, to give her a point d'appui equal to that which France and Austria have acquired for themselves by their respective occupations of Rome and Lombardy. I really cannot explain the approximation of the English cabinet towards the policy of Austria, but by the conjecture that diplomatists must have reasons of which the public are ignorant to suspect a secret alliance between France and Russia.

I observed that the Nord, the Russian organ at Brussels, speaks now in almost identical terms with the French Government journals of the questions on which the French and English Governments are understood to differ. Moreover, I notice that the Verite, a new paper, published under Government auspices, reproduces the following extract from German papers :—"The Danube does not believe in the continuance of the Anglo-French alliance."

The Paris writer of the London Morning Post take a different view of the case, and says that the diplomacy of England and France, despite the intrigues of a third power, is united on all great questions calculated to insure the tranquillity of Europe.

The Paris journal Des Debats also professes itself aware of the shifting ground of the alliance. It says :—

"European politics are now subject to singular transformations, and the execution of the treaty of Paris prepares for us each day some fresh surprise. One of the most curious is the reconciliation that has been accomplished between England and Austria, which the journals of the two countries now confide to Europe. The memory is too full of the bitter and violent polemics indulged in only a short time ago by the English journals, with respect to what they termed the machiavelism and duplicity of Austrian policy.

"But now everything is changed; the most important English journal—the Times—openly defends this very policy, and it asserts that the Cabinet of Vienna has the best reasons in the world for not evacuating the Danubian Principalities. The organs of the Austrian Government opine on their part that England has no less excellent reasons for maintaining her fleet in the Black Sea. This is not all; they applaud to the skies the particular claims acquired by the English Government and its representatives at Vienna, to the friendship of Austria, by combining their mutual efforts against the union of the Principalities, formally supported in the Congress of Paris by the first Plenipotentiary of England, Lord Clarendon. At Vienna the game is now considered as won."

The Czarina's Vow.—The Journal de Moscow publishes the following letter, addressed to the Metropolitan of the city, by the Empress Dowager of Russia : "Most eminent Metropolitan Philarete. During the years of sore trial which Providence permitted our country to experience, I formed an inward vow, while raising my prayers to Heaven for the cessation of the war, to bring, at the conclusion of peace, an offering to the Monastery of St. Serge worthy of the sacredness of that retreat and of its historical renown. To-day, when Russia enjoys the long desired peace, and has celebrated with joy the coronation of my beloved son, the Emperor Alexander, I proceed to accomplish my vow in sending to your Eminence a chalice adorned with precious stones, given to me at the commencement of the war by my husband, of imperishable memory, and therefore associated with the sweetest recollections. May this offering ever form part of the treasures of the Monastery, as a sign of my thankfulness for the innumerable benefits which the Lord has deigned to shed upon Russia, so dear to my heart. Commending myself to your Eminence's prayers, I remain ever your affectionate," &c.

Trouble Brewing.—Arrests have again taken place, in consequence of the strike among certain classes of the workmen. Placards still more menacing than those I have already alluded to continue to be posted on the walls of houses, and they assume indifferently a Legitimist, Orleanist, or Revolutionary color. It is not by night only that these placards are affixed, but sometimes in the noonday, under the eyes of the police. The persons who are said to be employed in this work bring small sheets of paper, which are already prepared with wafers, and they take their stand against a wall, holding their hands behind their back, as if they were merely resting themselves. They soon quit their position, and leave the placard sticking to the wall, without the police agents noticing them. It is only in an hour or two afterwards that the groups who stand reading the paper attract their attention, and when they come up to the spot they find such words as these : "Vive Henri V.!" "Vive le Comte de Paris!" "Vive la Republique!" "A bas Napoleon!" "Mort aux Proprietaires!" "Le Pain a 10 sous," &c. The Paris paper have been "invited" to abstain from giving, indirectly or implicitly, the difference between the real price of bread and that at which it is sold to the public.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

An inquest was held at Tickhill, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, on the body of a man named Kiddall Smith, a farmer residing in that town, who was found drowned in the small river Town, on Saturday evening, under the following circumstances : Deceased left home about eight o'clock to take some cows to a field at a short distance from his house, and having with him a shepherd's dog. Between 9 and 10 o'clock the same night a man named John Harrison, who was walking from Harworth to Tickhill, had his attention attracted by this dog, which came up to him barking and jumping, and then running in the direction of the river. Harrison at first drove the dog off, but at last followed it to the stream, in which the deseased was found lying on his back, with only a small quantity of water over his face. As the man was subject to a disease of the heart, it is supposed that he had dropped down under an attack of the spasm.

Origin of the French Wars. — In the Anecdotes of Fashion it is recorded that when Louis VII., in obedience to the injunctions of his bishop, cropped his hair and shaved his beard, Eleanor, his consort, found him, with his usual appearance, very ridiculous and soon very contemptible. She revenged herself as she thought proper, and the poor shaved king obtained a divorce. She then married the Count of Anjou, afterwards our Henry II. She had for her marriage dower the rich provinces of Poitou and Guienne; and this was the origin of those wars which for three hundred years ravaged France, and cost the French three millions of men. All which, probably, would have never occurred had Louis VII. not been so rash as to crop his head and shave his beard, by which he became so disgustful in the eyes of our spirited and vindicitive Queen Eleanor.

A short time since the Rev. Reginald Shute, rector of St. Mary's Step, Exeter, cited his curate, the Rev. Mr. Wyatt, before the bishop of the diocese, alleging that the latter had been guilty of an act of drunkenness, and had used improper language towards the rector. The deacon (Mr. Wyatt) pleaded guilty to the main charge of drunkenness, which took place so far back as July last. The bishop intimated that he would communicate his judgment in writing in a few days. The rector and curate in question both belong to the Tractarian or High Church party, and this scandal has been much commented upon among their parishioners, with whom neither has been for some time popular.

Two colliers employed in the mines of Charleroi, in Belgium, performed a gastronomic feat a few days ago, of unusual extent. A repast was prepared for 14 persons, which these two gourmands undertook for a bet to devour, and which they actually accomplished in presence of the other twelve. The operation lasted four hours, during which time these men of wolfish appetites devoured two hams, weighing seven pounds, ten pounds of potatoes, a rabbit weighing three pounds, and a six pound loaf, all of which they washed down with a considerable quantity of beer.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says, that the Austrian government is greatly annoyed at the conduct of the French Cabinet; complaints are made that Count Waleswki does not display sufficient firmness towards Russia, and that he and Count Morny are on such excellent terms with the St. Petersburgh Cabinet that it will be able to manage matters as it pleases in the conferences in Paris.

At the Cape of Good Hope a witch doctor has perverted the minds of many natives by a prophecy that very shortly two suns will appear, that a desperate collision will take place between them, after which a period of profound darkness will ensue. All people, white or black, who wear trousers, will then be swept off the face of the land by a whirlwind.

Sir Henry Young, the Governor of Tasmania, has issued a proclamation making the gold coinage of the Sydney mint a legal tender, being, we believe, the first of the colonies of the Australian group that has taken this common sense step.

The presents sent by the Emperor of the French to the Pope, on the occasion of the baptism of the Prince Imperial, consist of a piece of Gobelin tapestry and a baptismal font. The tapestry represents the Descent from the Cross, copied from the chef d'œuvre of Caravaggio in the Vatican. The font is of Sevres porcelain, and ornamented with the symbols of the four Evangelists.

It is stated that the Princess Maria Elizabeth of Saxony widow of the late Duke of Genoa, brother of King Victor Emmanuel, has just celebrated a morganatic marriage with the Marquis Orapallo, ex-orderly officer of the late duke.

Lieutenant and Adjutant Saunders, 2nd Regiment of Light Dragoons, British German Legion, was recently dismissed that corps in the presence of all the officers and a portion of the men of each regiment, for insubordinate conduct to General Stutterheim.

The gentlemen who had been so long associated with Mr. A'Beckett, in connection with Punch, have caused the remains of the lamented magistrate to be removed from the Boulogne cemetery to that at Highgate, where they were deposited on Thursday last.

From October, 1854, to the present time, there have been no less than 38 suicides committed within the city of London, 29 of which were men and nine women. During the same period there had been 85 attempts to commit suicide, 26 of which were by men and 59 by women.

The Register General estimates that there are nearly 400,000 surnames in England. Among them there are 51,000 families bearing the name of Smith, and 51,000 that of Jones. The Smiths and the Jones alone are supposed to include about a million of the population.

M. Lindenberg, the principal editor of the Gazette Patriotique has been found guilty of defaming the Prince of Prussia. He has been condemned by the Tribunal of Potsdam to nine months' imprisonment and the deprivation of all civil rights. General Gerlach appeared as a witness.

The British steamer Magicienne has returned from a cruise to Sebastopol. She found the city as the Allies left it, with no trace of clearing away the ruins. The Russians have begun repairing the fortifications of Anapa, but have not re-occupied Sujet Kaleb.

The accounts of the recent earthquake in Egypt were exaggerated. At Cairo, however, much alarm was felt. Among other incidents Mlle Rachel rushed from the house in her nightdress.

Advices from the Cape of Good Hope to August 21 report business very dull, provisions dear, money scarce, and another Caffre war threatening.

The flagstaff of the Redan, with the wheel of the carriage of the gun on the right hand of the breach, with several shell, have been brought home by Captain Cumming, at the evacuation of Balaklava.

Lord John Russell is at Florence, where he has taken a villa until spring, and where he has been joined by his relative, the Earl of Mento, who encouraged the Italian revolutionists in Rome, when Lord John was Prime Minister.

Jules Gerard, the lion-killer, has been robbed of 70,000 francs confided to him by a friend to buy land in Algeria.

The customs union between Parma and Austria has been dissolved.

A camp of 40,000 men will soon be established at Chalons-sur-Marne.

THE LONDON TIMES ON JAMES BUCHANAN.

The London Times, after groaning over the loss of the State election in Pennsylvania, as foreshadowing the defeat of Fremont, makes the following insolent and ruffianly assault on our President elect :—

Mr. Buchanan has been the most ductile and flexible of politicians. He has been a Federelist and is now a Democrat, Pro-Free Trade and Anti-Free Trade, and pro and anti almost everything else about which parties in America have warmly disputed. He is not a man of great resolution or violent counsels, but he possesses a peculiar facility of effacing himself and yielding implicitly to the influence of those who surround him, often persons of inferior judgment to his own. He is a thorough-paced demagogue and unscrupulous partisan, and, though unexceptionable in private life, has grown gray among all manner of intrigues and manœuvres. In this country we have not forgotten how adroitly he kept alive the quarrel with England which Lord Clarendon strove so earnestly to terminate, not from any wish to involve the two countries in war, but because he saw, or fancied he saw, from the continaance of the dispute, an electioneering apvantage to himfelf. Europe has not forgotten the unseemly spectacle of the Congress of Ostend, when the representatives of America in Europe met together, under the presidency of Mr. Soule, to hold a conference on the best manner of attacking the governments of friendly States, and acquiring the lands of weaker powers. The same principles which were laid down in that congress by Mr. Buchanan and his associates have been embodied by the Democratic Party in the Cincinnati Platform, the manifesto under which they proposed to fight the Presidental campaign.

* * * * * * * * * *

To such persons as are the advisers of Mr. Pierce and will be tne advisers ofMr. Buchanan, foreign war is immeasurably preferable to domestic defeat, and the acquisition of a new Slave State, to oppose to the next free territory from the Northwest that may demand admission to the Union, is cheap at any expenditure of blood and treasure. There are some civil discords that incline to peace, others that urge directly towards war. It remains to be seen whether the furious commotions of Repnblican American be of the former or latter character. For England the course of policy marked out by events is clear and obvious. We cannot forbear sympathizing with the party which would check the extension by armed force of the degrading and debilitating institution of Slavery into the countries insulted for its operations, and utterly hostile to its extension. But in the future President of the United States, whoever he may be, we recognize nothing but the elected chief of a friendly Power. Whatever his antecedents, whatever his professions, we will persist in believing that the chief of the people of America will, when once elected, rise to the dignity of his position, and, casting off his more questionable antecedents, will know how to maintain at once the dignity of the Republic, and the respect due to the feelings and interests of foreign and friendly Powers.

Irish News.

What might our readers think (asks the Wexford People,) could be seen in New Ross on Thursday last? An auctioneer in Tottenham's big house "selling off" to make way for the Sisters of Mercy, and a few tradesmen fitting up another house (not equal to the servants' apartments of the house he had left) for his future residence. This big house is a palace, with a garden and pleasure ground well stocked with fruit trees, and surrounded by a wall twenty feet high. It is situated within a a few yards of the parish chapel, is built as if intended for a convent, and capable of locating forty inmates. The Sisters of Mercy were anxious to establish a house in New Ross, but could not obtain a proper residence. The people, too, were wishful to have the Sisters amongst them; they got up a memorial to Mr. Tottenham, setting forth the great advantage it would be to New Ross and its neighborhood if he would permit the Sisters of Mercy to become occupants of his dwelling on such terms as they might propose for it. The memorial was signed by a large number of lay people and seven priests. A proposal was sent in, and the result is, that this pleasant concern is now ready for the Sisters. There will not be so spacious a convent in Ireland, nor one more likely to meet with the hearty wishes and support of the population in the neighborhood.

The following details will convey an idea of the size of the Crimean banquet:—There were laid 250 hams, 230 legs of mutton, 250 pieces of beef, 500 meat-pies, 100 venison pasties, 100 rice puddings, 260 plum puddings, weighing one tun and a-half, 200 turkeys, and 200 geese, 2,000 rolls, 3,500 lbs. of bread, 3 tons of potatoes; 3,500 quart bottles of Dublin porter, and 3,500 pint bottles of port. There were 8,000 plates, 5,000 knives and forks, 5,000 table spoons, 5,000 desert spoons, 100 dozen of carving-knives and forks, and a proportionate supply of mustard, salt, and pepper-stands. Amongst the statistics of the tables, it may be stated that there were six accommodating sixty men each, twenty-eight for seventy-two men each, fourteen for eighty men each, and sixteen for thirty-six each, one for eighty, press table and officers, 140, and head table thirty-six. There were 3,000 troops of the line, all wearing Crimean medals, and many of them Crimean beards. Of this number 1,500 were from the regiments stationed in Dublin, and 1,000 from those on the Curragh. The remainder were from various stations throughout the country.

